STARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

(a) ORAL ANSWERS

ACTION FOR THE REDUCTION OF LOSSES IN STORAGE OF GRAIN

1. *Mr. C. P. Lawson: Will the Secretary of the Food Department please state—

(a) what steps have been taken in the past year to reduce losses in storage of grain stocks (i) in Government godowns, (ii) in the hands of Government agents, and (iii) in private hands;

(b) what estimated saving is expected to result from these steps,

(c) what tonnage of stocks has been subjected to protective measures; and

(d) what are the estimated losses on grain in storage (i) by rats and insect pests, and (ii) by deterioration owing to bad storage?

Mr. B. R. Sen: (a) The following steps are being taken to reduce losses in storage

(i) and (ii)—Provision of dunnage, proper stacking, regular inspection and turnover of stocks, immediate separation of infested grain and its re-clamation by means of screening, etc., are some of the steps taken to reduce losses

Training courses have been held at Delhi, in future these will be supplemented by regional courses, for officers from Provinces and States to improve technical supervision over grains in storage. Construction of Scientific Storage both by the Centre and the Provinces is also making progress

(iii) Technical advice is given for the improvement of existing godowns, approved designs for the construction of new storage to suit varying requirements are made available to prospective builders, assistance is given in obtaining controlled constructional materials, disinfectants, etc. On our advice, the Punjab Government have amended their marketing rules making it obligatory on grain dealers to maintain their warehouses up to an approved standard as a condition of their license

(b) The saving effected as a result of these measures cannot be estimated with any exactitude but it must be considerable

(c) It is not possible to give an estimate of stocks subjected to various protective measures

(d) The loss of foodgrains by rats is very roughly estimated at 1,000,000 tons and by insects and deterioration due to bad storage about 2,000,000

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know from the Honourable Member if any investigation was made into the position of granaries in which grain is stored by the villagers, and if there were any defects, what steps have been taken by Government to improve those granaries?

Mr. B. R. Sen: The importance of improving storage conditions in the country has been impressed upon the Provincial and State Governments. These Governments are making investigations into the points mentioned by the Honourable Member. We help the private holders of godowns with advice and technical assistance and with priority materials for effecting improvements

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is it a fact that these investigations have been going on for more than one year?

Mr. B. R. Sen: That is correct

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Has any conclusion been reached till now?

Mr. B. R. Sen: There is no conclusion. It is a question of making progress. The Honourable Member has probably read in the press a statement made by one of the officers of the Food Department that during the last two years about 12 lakhs tons of storage has been constructed by Provincial Governments and about 11½ lakhs tons by State Governments. Apart from that, 195,000 tons of storage has been constructed by the Government of India on a 50/50 basis, i.e., half the expenditure is paid by the Centre and half by the Provincial Government concerned.

Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai: How much of this deteriorated grain has been utilised?

Mr. B. R. Sen: I do not follow the Honourable Member?

Mr. President: How much of this deteriorated grain has been utilised?

Mr. B. R. Sen: I am not in a position to give exact information about the quantity protected by these measures. Further it is not possible to say how much of such grain was utilised

Beth Govind Dass: Does Government receive periodical reports from Provincial Governments about the improvements in their respective provinces?

Mr. B. R. Sen: Yes, Sir

Sardar Mangal Singh: Is the loss that the Honourable Member has said about three millions less than in the previous year or more?

Mr. B. R. Sen: This is a very rough figure. A few hundred thousand tons saved, does not make much difference to the overall figure of loss.

Sardar Mangal Singh: My question is about more or less than in the previous year?

Mr. B. R. Sen: There seems to have been some improvement but I am not in a position to say what the extent is.

Sardar Mangal Singh: Will the Government of India make an effort to obtain reliable statistics about the food position in India? The Honourable Member in reply to this question has not given any exact figures about the savings or about the storage arrangements. He has only

Mr. President: Order, order. What is the question?

Sardar Mangal Singh: The Honourable Member has said that the total loss by storage due to rats and insects is about three million tons. Is this loss less or more than in the previous year?

Mr. B. R. Sen: The reply obviously is that the loss is less. But I am not in a position to say by how much the loss is less.

ACTION FOR INCREASING THE YIELD OF FOOD FROM FISHERIES

2. Mr. C. P. Lawson: (a) Will the Secretary of the Agriculture Department please state the steps taken in the past year to increase the yield of food from fisheries in (i) Bombay, (ii) Bengal, and (iii) South India?

(b) What extra tonnage of fish supplies is expected to result from these measures?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: (a) The steps taken by Provinces and the Travancore State with the aid of grants from the Centre include

(1) The setting up of training classes in Bengal and Madras for training fishery officers

(2) The supply of 10,000 carp fry to Bombay from Bengal for stocking tanks

(3) The installation of a Diesel engine in a power boat for Bombay for catching sharks

(4) A daily supply of 170 tons of ice in Bombay which it is hoped will shortly be increased by another 105 tons

(5) The bringing into use of carrier vessels of a total tonnage of 300 tons in Bombay for bringing in catches quickly. It is expected that eight more carrier vessels now under construction will be ready for use shortly

(6) The starting of a company for fisheries (India Fisheries Limited) in Bombay with a capital of Rs. 20 lakhs which is arranging to import a modern fishing boat

(7) The liberation of 4 lakhs of fry in tanks in the Sunderbans area in Bengal covering 100 acres

(8) The starting of rural pisciculture in nine districts in Bengal

(9) Taking up paddy cum fish culture in the 24 parganas in Bengal

(10) The supply of 44,000 fish fry to 179 tank owners in Madras

(11) The appointment of two special officers in Madras for the improvement and modernisation of the primitive types of indigenous craft and tackle

(12) The taking up of technological work for improving fish preservation at Calicut (Madras)

(13) The stocking of a fish farm of 160 acres with mirror carp at Ootacamund (Madras)

(14) The construction of a Marine fish farm in the Adyar Backwaters (Madras)

(15) The stocking of a freshwater farm with 133,000 fingerlings at Chetput (Madras)

(16) The improvement of fish curing yards (Travancore) for the better preservation and marketing of fish

(17) The use of a motor fishing vessel for experimental fishing in Travancore

(18) The starting of a fishing Company [West Coast Fisheries (Travancore) Ltd.], with a capital of Rs. 25 lakhs to exploit the Wadge Bank off Travancore

(b) Bombay secured 800 tons of fish more in 1945-46 than in the previous year. Bengal expect to secure some 3,000 tons of extra fish when their plant is in full swing and South India expect some 50,000 tons extra.

Mr. C. P. Lawson: May I ask the Honourable Member whether he can tell the House of the particular steps Government are taking to attract capital for big-scale fishery operations?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: It is hoped that the capital that will be required for big-scale operations will be found by the capitalists in the country. But the Government are taking steps to carry out experimental work, and they hope before long to set up a fisheries research institute with several sections, possibly at Karachi, Bombay, Mandapam and Calcutta in order to find out what the most suitable means are for securing more fish. It is also understood that a private company is shortly being started for the exploitation of fish in the Andamans.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Secretary be pleased to state that the Government will see that the fishery matter does not go into the hands of capitalists?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: It is presumed that the Provincial Government will take care to see that the profits arising from the exploitation of fish do not remain with the capitalists.

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Apart from big-scale fishery operations, is the Honourable Member satisfied that so far as Bengal at least is concerned, the fishermen have got an adequate supply of fishing nets and fishing boats which they lost during the war years and also due to the famine?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: I am fully aware of the fact, Sir, that there is an acute shortage of fishing nets and fishing boats in Bengal. But steps are being taken by the Government to supply the yarn required for the making of more nets and the timber that is needed for the building of more boats.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: May I ask whether Government have taken any action in improving fisheries in country ponds and tanks which is being overlooked, because the matter is in the hands of the capitalists?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: Yes, many of the items which I have referred to in my reply relate to inland tanks. In the U.P. in particular I believe something like 45,000 maunds of extra fish have been secured by developing tanks and ponds.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: May I know what steps are possible for the Government of India to take for the rehabilitation of those fishermen of East Bengal who have lost their nets and their houses during the recent disturbances in that part of the Bengal?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: The matter has not yet been considered but we presume that the Government of Bengal will send up their proposals in due course.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Government of India take the initiative in coming into contact with the Government of Bengal in this matter?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: Certainly.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: May I know what is the total tonnage built by either the Government of Bengal or will be built by the Government of India to replace the boats withdrawn in the denial policy adopted in Bengal during the war?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: I must ask for notice of that question, because the matter relates primarily to the action taken by the Government of Bengal.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: As regards the notice asked for by the Honourable Member, I should like to know how much of the tonnage built has been distributed between transportation and fishing?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: I am afraid I do not follow the question.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: Many thousand tons of boats have been built in Bengal and I thought the Government of India knew something about it. Now I want to know the tonnage of boats that are already in the possession of the Government, and how much of it will go for transportation purposes and how much to the poor fishermen whose boats were taken away?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: I am afraid I must again ask for notice, because the information will have to be obtained from the Government of Bengal.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Have Government assured themselves that fish is proper and suitable food for human beings and that the cruelty involved in killing fish is justified by the results achieved?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: The reply is in the affirmative.

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir: Will the Honourable Secretary inform the House what is the percentage of the extra fish caught which is unknown to all classes of people who refuse to consume it and which is therefore thrown away?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: I do not follow the question.

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir: Does the Honourable Member know that past experience has shown that some fish from deep sea fishing is unknown to our people of all classes who therefore refuse to consume it? Will the Honourable Member therefore take steps to educate our people with regard to the classes of fish which are being caught now and teach them to consume it, because it is wholesome edible fish?

Shri Sri Prakasa: Please do not do anything of the sort!

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: We are aware of the fact that there are certain types of fish which are caught at present which are not generally eaten by the people and steps will be taken when the Research Institute is set up to find out what types of fish caught are edible and suitable to the tastes of people and steps will be taken to utilise the other fish for commercial purposes.

RAIL-ROAD COORDINATION SCHEME

3. *Sardar Mangal Singh: Will the Honourable Member for Transport please state

(a) whether the Interim Government have prepared any scheme for Rail-Road Co-ordination, if not, whether they contemplate to do so in the near future, and

(b) whether the Government of India propose to consult the Motor Transport Unions before launching on any scheme of Rail Road Co-ordination and further assure this House that in any such scheme the interests of the operators now on Road will be adequately safeguarded?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) and (b) The main principles of the Interim Government's policy are as follows—

(i) They are convinced of the necessity for rail-road co-ordination in order to avoid wasteful competition, to protect Government finances and to provide more efficient and co-ordinated transport services for the benefit of the public.

(ii) They consider that in most, if not all, Provinces this can best be achieved so far as passenger transport is concerned, by the formation of tripartite companies on the lines of the White Paper.

(iii) If any Provincial Government does not favour the formation of tripartite companies but wishes to form some other road transport organisation such as a provincialised transport organisation and such a scheme provides for substantial financial participation by the Railways, the Central Government, while not objecting to financial participation by the Railways, would continue to urge that an equitable adjustment of the existing operators' rights should not be overlooked.

- As desired by the House during the last Budget session, the Provincial Ministry Governments were asked whether they would be able to accept the broad principles of the scheme set out in the White Paper. The details of Government's policy will be subject to modification in the light of views expressed by Provincial Governments. So far only three final replies have been received from the Provinces who doubtless have already consulted or will consult local transport interests.

As regards goods transport, the general policy is to reserve long-distance traffic for the railways and to allow road transport to cater for short distance and door to door traffic. This policy has been accepted by a majority of the Provincial Governments, and as regards the remainder, the matter is under their consideration.

Sardar Mangal Singh: Is the Honourable Member aware that some of the Provinces are going ahead with this railroad co-ordination scheme? For instance, in the United Provinces they have formulated a scheme of their own. May I know from the Government of India whether they intend to have a uniform policy all over India in consultation with the Provincial Governments?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: As the Honourable Member knows the attention of the Government of India was to have a uniform scheme all over India but we have no power over the Provinces. It is a provincial subject and if they wish to provincialise road transport, we cannot prevent them. All that we would like to be able to do is merely to tell them what we think is the best thing in their own interests and in the interests of the Government of India, because both the assets naturally belong to the nation.

Sardar Mangal Singh: The Honourable Member referred to tripartite companies. Does he mean that a majority of the shares will be held by the Railways and the Provincial Governments concerned and only a certain percentage will be thrown open to the public?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: My Honourable friend is even better aware than I am (because he has been taking a lot of interest in road rail co-ordination) that the tripartite scheme does not necessarily mean that the Railways and the Provincial Government concerned should hold a majority of shares in these companies whenever they are formed but they may or may not do so, and we cannot force them to do so either. All that we can insist upon is that so far as the Central Government are concerned the Railways should have a financial interest in it which should not be less than 25 per cent.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: In view of the undoubted importance of this question, will not the Government think it advisable to call a conference of Provincial Ministers and review the whole position?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: We have already addressed all the Provincial Governments on the subject and we have sent also reminders after reminders. I have myself personally interviewed almost every Provincial Minister who came from the provinces and tried to persuade him to agree to the scheme and I am fully prepared to call a conference of all Provincial Ministers interested in this scheme and I am prepared to discuss the whole thing with them.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know which are the three Provincial Governments which have accepted the scheme and sent a reply and if so to what effect?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I am prepared to answer that question, although I wish my learned friend had put down notice of it. At present there are three governments who have definitely replied officially, we have received replies from other governments unofficially which it would not be worth my while or your while to reveal here. The three governments who have officially replied are the North-West Frontier Province, the Punjab and Sind.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know which province is in favour of state control or provincial control of motor transport entirely?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: As far as I can judge the tendency from the replies received and from the various information that is available to us is for the provinces to provincialise road transport as far as possible.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: In view of the fact that the opposition in the last assembly session was against the formation of companies of this kind, will the Honourable Member consult this assembly before a final decision is taken regarding the formation of similar companies?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I am afraid my Honourable friend is under some misapprehension. The opposition in the last Assembly session was not to the tripartite scheme—it was entirely and absolutely confined to one point namely, that the popular Provincial Ministries should have a chance of looking into this scheme. They did not object to the tripartite scheme at all, and we have waited all this time for the answers of the various governments. As you know, some of them are forming their own schemes. We have not received all the official replies so far, but I shall bear the point to which the learned questioner has referred, in mind.

Miss Maniben Kara: May I have an assurance from the Honourable Member that, in such scheme of rail-road co-ordination wherein a large mass of the public is very greatly interested and which affects the lives of conductors, drivers and various other menial staff as well as the travelling public—the trades unions will get representation and have a voice in the shaping of the policy of this committee?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: As far as I know the government's intention is to see that every one gets a fair deal, particularly those who are working, and I can assure the Honourable Member that in so far as lies in our power we will try and see that they get a fair deal, but we cannot force the provinces to do what is their duty. We cannot interfere with them.

Khan Muhammad Yamin Khan: Does the Honourable Member know that some statements were issued by Pandit Govind Ballabh Pant in the United Provinces before the elections took place and he had given a sort of assurance to the bus conductors or bus owners in a certain manner. Does the Honourable Member think that he is going to stick to those assurances given by Pandit Govind Ballabh Pant now?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I think this question really ought to be put to Pandit Govind Ballabh Pant—it hardly arises here. I do not know what he is going to do now.

Mr. M. A. F. Hirtzel: The Honourable Member informed the House that it was the policy of the Government of India to reserve long distance traffic for rail transport. May I ask him to tell the House whether in consulting the Provincial Governments or making any recommendations to them, that was laid down as a sine qua non or whether the provincial governments were allowed any discretion on that particular point?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: That question is still under discussion between the Central Government and the Provincial Governments.

INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION

4. Sadar Mangal Singh: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state

(a) whether Government of India have decided to appoint an Industrial Commission with comprehensive terms of reference or contemplate to appoint one in the near future, and

(b) whether Government will consider that the terms of reference include matters relating to the fiscal policy also?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: I trust, on behalf of the Honourable Industries Member, I may be permitted to answer the questions today.

(a) No, Sir.

(b) Does not arise.

Sardar Mangal Singh: May I know if the Government of India is considering the appointment of an Industrial Commission?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: I have said the answer is in the negative.

COTTON TEXTILE FACTORIES IN INDIA

5. *Sardar Mangal Singh: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state how many cotton textile factories are there in India at present and what is their number province-wise?

(b) How many new cotton textile factories have been sanctioned and how have they been distributed amongst the different provinces?

(c) What will be the full productive capacity of factories when all of them are in full working order?

(d) Have the interests of the handloom workers been properly safeguarded while running the scheme of the organisation of the textile industry? If so, how?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: (i) and (b) A statement giving the desired information is placed on the table of the House. The spindlage of the new mills is not uniform. Some Provinces have accepted our suggestion that a "coarse" mill should be composed of 25,000 spindles and a "fine" mill of 19,000 spindles, but in certain cases they have decided to establish mills of fewer spindles. Government of India have allotted the number of spindles to various provinces as in the statement placed on the table. It has been left to the Provinces themselves to distribute these spindles amongst the various factories within the province.

(c) 6,500 million yards a year if all mills work 14½ hours per day for 300 days in the year.

(d) The Honourable Member's attention is invited to paragraph 5 of the Government of India, Resolution No 205-TA/46, dated the 4th May, 1946, passed on the Planning Committee's report on expansion of the Cotton Textile Industry.

Statement showing the number of existing and proposed new cotton textile mills in India.

Name of Province	Number of existing mills	Number of proposed mills
Bombay	209	24 (352,000 spindles)
Madras	69	16 (325,000 spindles)
Bengal	37	12 (264,000 spindles)
U P	30	15 (437,000 spindles)
Punjab	8	9 (213,000 spindles)
Bihar	2	6 (151,000 spindles)
C P & Berar	11	4 (119,000 spindles)
Orissa	..	3 (75,000 spindles)
Sind	.	4 (100,000 spindles)
Assam	.	.
Delhi	6	.
In States	45	32 (708,000 spindles)
Total	417	125

Sreejot Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: May I know which of the provinces have decided to nationalise the textile industry?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: As far as I know, no province has yet nationalised the textile industry.

Sreejot Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: Is the Government aware that the Assam Government have decided to nationalise the textile industry and for that reason all private enterprise is stopped supply of machinery and spindles?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: I have already said that the decision is with the governments of the provinces to distribute the quota within the province—which includes themselves if they nationalise the industry.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: May I ask the Honourable Member if the government are in complete agreement with the textile policy proposed by the Madras Premier and if not what their policy is going to be?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: Notice Sir for that.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: How many textile factories are there in Assam?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: Today in Assam nil.

Mr. Tamizuddin Khan: On what principle are the spindles distributed among the various provinces?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: The elements that go to decide the distribution among the provinces are—the present number, deficit quantity, and other circumstances of importance.

Sreejot Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: Is it a fact that the Jalandhar industry applied for spindles for starting textile mills in Assam and that permission given has been withdrawn by the government of India?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: I have not quite followed the first part of the question.

Sreejot Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: May I explain? Before the Assam Government issued a communique that they will nationalise the textile industry in Assam, the Jalandhar industries applied for machinery and spindles and such application was granted but subsequently the supply of spindles was stopped?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: I would like to have notice of the question.

Shri D. P. Karmarkar: There was a request for increasing the spindles allotted to the Karnatak Province and it was supported by the Government of Bombay, but afterwards permission to give additional spindleage was refused on the ground that Bombay was treated as a surplus province.

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: I have already said that the Bombay Government will have to take the responsibility of distributing their quota within the province, whatever the linguistic area may be.

Seth Govind Das: In view of the fact that the Madras Government is following a particular policy with respect to textile industry, will the Government of India think of having some uniform policy in this respect for all provinces?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: That is an argument. It is left to every province to follow its own line of action.

Shri D. P. Karmarkar: What is the quantity of spindles for the Bombay Province?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: The number of existing mills is 209, the number of proposed mills is 24, and the total new spindleage is 352,000 for Bombay.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable Member please state what steps have been taken by Government to implement the resolution which was moved by Mr. Ghulam Bhik Nairang and adopted by the House to the effect that one-third of the total output of yarn should be made available for handloom weavers?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: That will be coming in a subsequent question †

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know if it is open to any Provincial Government, if any allotment has been made to that Provincial Government by way of spindles, to say that the spindles shall not come into that province and shall not be given to persons who have started the textile industry there?

• The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: The question should be put in the Provincial Assembly?

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: What is the attitude of the Central Government towards those who have already started construction of buildings and sent in applications for machinery and spindles?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: When the difficulties arise the Central Government will consider them. No such complaints have yet come to the Central Government.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: Is it not a fact that the permits to purchase textile factories are given by the Government of India on the recommendation of a committee in which the textile manufacturers have got a preponderating voice and that is the reason

Sri Sri Prakasa: He has answered his own question!

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: The dominating consideration is the recommendation of the province and not of any private bodies.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: Is there any committee appointed by the Government?

(No reply)

IMPORT OF FOODGRAINS INTO INDIA FROM THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

6. Sardar Mangal Singh: (a) Will the Secretary of the Food Department please state what quantity of food-grains have been imported into India from the United States of America during the last six months from 15th April to 15th October 1946?

(b) Has the allotted full quota been received? If not, what is the shortage and how do Government propose to make up the deficiency?

(c) What were the estimates of production of food-grains in India and how is the position now?

Mr. B. E. Sen: (a) 322,429 tons

(b) No. Shipments from the United States of America are some 164,000 tons behind the programme. The Government of India have done what was possible to mitigate the effect of this by importing grain from other sources and by tightening up both procurement and distribution in India.

(c) The position as estimated in January was that the total production of foodgrains would be 55.78 million tons. The latest estimate is that the 1945-46 crop was only 53.96 million tons.

Sardar Mangal Singh: Will the Honourable Member tell us what was the shortage from the U. S. A.?

Mr. B. E. Sen: The shortage is 164,000 tons.

Sardar Mangal Singh: How much has been met by imports from other countries?

Mr. B. E. Sen: The overall deficit in India is much greater. It has been made up to a certain extent by imports from countries like Egypt, Iraq, Iran, Argentine.

Sardar Mangal Singh: How much has been imported. Surely the Government of India must have the figures?

Mr. B. R. Sen: The Honourable Member is putting the question in a form which is difficult to answer. We have a heavy deficit this year. The deficit is being met not only from the United States of America, but also from other countries.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: What is the programme of further shipments?

Mr. B. R. Sen: We have got a programme for October. The programme for November and December is still to be sent.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know whether any arrangement has been made to send grains to the various provinces according to the tastes of those provinces?

Mr. B. R. Sen: That is one of the primary considerations we have in mind.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Then why not send the wheat supplied to South India now to the north and send rice instead to South India?

Mr. B. R. Sen: This is an old question. The fact of the matter is that the deficit of Madras runs into millions of tons. We can supply only a certain quantity in certain grains. If we do not supply the wheat which we are supplying to Madras now, Madras will have to go without any grain in its place.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Both in U. P. and the Punjab there are quantities of rice which are not wanted there. They are dumping rice in a province where it is not wanted?

Mr. B. R. Sen: That is not wholly correct. This proposal has been before the House from time to time. In the case of the United Provinces, there is a certain population, particularly in the Eastern districts, whose food is rice and not wheat. In the Punjab there are certain districts like Kangra where the staple food is rice. We have made a definite proposition to the Punjab Government that if they give us one lakh tons of rice we are prepared to send one lakh tons of wheat in its place. That proposition is before the Punjab Government now and we hope to get an early reply.

Maulana Zafar Ali Khan: What is the total quantity imported from Australia?

Mr. B. R. Sen: The total quantity as far as I remember is 520,000 tons this year.

Miss Maniben Kara: There is always a shortage of food. Food shortage is more or less a chronic situation in this country. May I know if the Government of India are considering the policy of nationalisation of land?

Mr. B. R. Sen: I want notice of that question.

DE-CONTROL OF SUGAR

7. Sardar Mangal Singh: (a) Will the Secretary of the Food Department please state when it would be possible for Government to decontrol the scale and supply of sugar?

(b) What is the total production of sugar during the last year and the current year and what are the military requirements during these two years?

Mr. B. R. Sen: (a) The control on sugar is necessary to effect an equitable distribution to the public of the inadequate supplies available. It is, therefore, proposed to remove the control in the near future.

(b) The production of sugar during 1944-45 and 1945-46 seasons was 9,72,000 tons and 9,48,000 tons respectively. The military requirements during these years were 79,232 tons and 34,832 tons.

Sardar Mangal Singh: Is Government taking any steps to increase the production of sugar and remove the control?

Mr. B. R. Sen: The Government are taking steps and the first of them is the recent announcement that the price of sugarcane will be increased in Bihar and U. P. from 0-14-6 to Rs. 1-4-0 per maund.

Sardar Mangal Singh: Are any steps being taken to minimise the disparity in the quotas of distribution of sugar between rural and urban areas?

Mr. B. R. Sen: That is a matter entirely in the discretion of the Provincial Governments.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Is it the policy of Government that persons with incomes of Rs 10 and less should have no sugar at all in urban areas in the U. P.?

Mr. B. R. Sen: The distribution is made on the basis of consumption before the war and it is left to the Provincial Governments to make the best use of the sugar that is allotted to them.

Seth Govind Das: For how many years has there been no export of sugar from this country?

Mr. B. R. Sen: So far as I am aware, there has been no export of sugar from this country.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: Was there a ban on such export from this country?

Mr. B. R. Sen: I am not aware of that.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: What does he mean by equitable distribution? Does he mean that those persons who were accustomed to gur should now be forced to eat sugar as is being done now?

Mr. B. R. Sen: That is not our intention. It is left to the Provincial Governments to make the most equitable distribution according to the circumstances of each area.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: You must define what equitable distribution means.

TENDERS FOR BOOKSTALL LICENCES ON RAILWAYS

8. Sardar Sampuran Singh: (a) Will the Honorable the Railway Member please state if it is a fact that in reply to question No. 250 asked by the Honorable Mr. Sampat Singh in the Council of State on the 8th April, 1946 it was stated that Government would consider the advisability of inviting public tenders for book-stalls on the station premises of different railways by publishing necessary advertisement to this effect in all the important newspapers of the country before deciding the question of awarding this contract?

(b) If the answer to part (a) above be in the affirmative will Government please state how it is that the East Indian Railway and the Bombay Baroda and Central India Railway administrations do not propose to call for tenders for book-stall licence?

(c) Are Government aware that it is the established practice in all the Government Departments to invite tenders for different contracts?

(d) If so, what special reasons there are for the East Indian Railway and the Bombay Baroda and Central India Railway to violate this practice?

(e) Are Government aware that the North Western Railway administration invited tenders for a similar contract some time back and that even the old contractor offered to pay by way of Royalty as much as five times the amount which he was paying before?

(f) Do Government propose to see that the East Indian Railway and the Bombay Baroda and Central India Railway do not put the Government to financial loss by not inviting public tenders for this contract?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) Yes

(b) The Railways concerned do propose to call for tenders before the date of termination of the present agreements. I may, however, state with regard to the contract on the B. B. & C. I. Railway that the information given in reply to part (c) of question No. 250 asked by the Honourable Mr. Sampat Singh in the Council of State on the 8th April, 1946, has been found incorrect to the extent that the termination on 31st December 1946, of the contract entered into by the B. B. & C. I. Railway was dependent on a notice having been given

12 months earlier in terms of the contract itself. Actually such notice was not given and in consequence the contract was automatically extended upto 31st December 1951, as provided for by the terms thereof

(c) Yes

(d) In view of the reply to part (b) of the question, does not arise

(e) Yes

(f) In view of the reply to part (b) of the question, does not arise

Sardar Sampuran Singh: Has the Government now taken note of the fact that in future when they want to make such provisions in their agreement, they should give notice of one year before the termination of the contract?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: That is not the usual practice and various agreements are bound to vary from time to time. It certainly is not the policy of the Government to make a twelve months notice obligatory or accept any such notice always.

TRANSPORT DIFFICULTIES IN DELHI

9. *Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable Member for Transport please state

(a) whether Government are aware of transport difficulties in Delhi and the costly nature of available facilities,

(b) whether Government are aware of the fact that motor cars which are available for hire charge very heavy rates,

(c) whether Government are aware of the fact that there is no regular convenient motor bus service for office-men and for newcomers to Delhi, and

(d) whether Government propose to consider the desirability of improving motor bus service in the city and introducing taxis on metre rates?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) Such transport difficulties as exist in Delhi are believed to be no more serious than those in many other large cities in India and abroad. At the same time Government admit that such difficulties exist and will do what they can to remove them. The G. N. I. T. fleet has been increased by the addition of a large number of vehicles during the past six months and now operates over practically the whole of Delhi. The number of taxi cabs has been raised from 200 to 225 recently. The fares charged by the G. N. I. T. have recently been reduced.

(b) Taxi cab fares have been fixed under the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939. When detected overcharging is punished by the suspension of permits.

(c) Suburbs inhabited to any appreciable extent by Government servants are connected with the Government offices by special services. Delhi main station is situated on a number of bus routes.

(d) Constant efforts are being made to improve the bus services in Delhi. The compulsory fitting of taxi meters to the taxi cabs is not at present feasible since meters are not yet available.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: Is it not a fact that as no meters or very few of them are available, the taxi drivers charge most exorbitant fares and there is no redress against it? Has the Honourable Member ever travelled in a taxi cab?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I think I have had occasions to engage taxis from time to time, but in so far as the question of exorbitant rates goes, I can assure the Honourable Member that every time a driver is detected his permit shall go.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: What are the steps that can be taken to ensure such detection more easily?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: The very best thing that can be done under the circumstances will be for the person who has suffered to go and report the matter to the police.

Maulana Zafar Ali Khan: May I ask if the Honourable Member will not make an effort himself and try to adopt the method which was practised by Harun-ur-Rashid?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I would leave it to the Honourable Member to try.

Lala Deshbandhu Gupta: The Honourable Member is undoubtedly aware of the fact that there is a great deal of public resentment against the monopoly held by the G N I T for running buses in Delhi and now that he is in a position to remove this favoured treatment, may I ask what steps he is going to take?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: Sir, the policy of the Government is not to allow any monopolies anywhere, and in so far as the G N I T is concerned, the whole question is under review today. In fact, there is a question down on the paper by Dr Chatterjee which I shall answer a little later.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Is the Honourable Member aware that I had to pay Rs 4 for each tonga yesterday—and I had two—from the Delhi Railway Station to my place, while the Government pays me only Rs 2 for this journey?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: The Government allows Rs 5 a day to every Honourable Member for conveyance.

Sreejot Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: May I suggest that the system of charging by meters be introduced in Delhi because the taxi drivers charge very high rates? I was charged Rs 8 yesterday from the Railway Station to my place.

Mr President: Next question.

PRICE OF INDIAN SILK

10. Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state whether it is the policy of Government to treat Indian silk as a national industry?

(b) What steps are being taken by the Government of India for ensuring fair, economic and remunerative price for Indian silk?

(c) What steps are being taken for protecting Indian silk from foreign competition and for seeing that it is not displaced by such foreign silk in Indian market or put to low price level as a result of competition?

(d) What steps are being taken by the Government of India for co-ordinating the efforts of different provinces and the states for the purpose of standardising quality and grades of silk and for standardising prices?

(e) How do Government propose to fix the price of foreign silk which India has received and will be receiving as part of war reparations scheme?

(f) What are the general recommendations of the Silk Panel with regard to the foregoing and how far and in what way do Government propose to deal with such recommendations for the purpose of speedy implementation?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: (a) It is not clear what exactly the Honourable Member means by "national" industry, but Government certainly consider the silk industry to be a very important industry.

(b) Silk was controlled as regards prices from June 1945 to August 1946. Government are collecting from the main producing centres data regarding costs of production to enable them to determine what should be regarded as fair prices for Indian silk. The present market prices are higher than the old control prices which had been fixed after due enquiry.

(c) As the Honourable Member is no doubt aware, the Indian silk industry enjoys tariff protection. Every care will be taken to safeguard the industry against unfair competition.

(d) At a conference held in September 1946 with the Provinces and States concerned this matter was taken up, and action in the sense referred to by the Honourable Member is under consideration.

(e) No foreign silk has so far been received by India as part of reparations. If and when an allotment is received, Government will sell it at a fair price.

(f) Government have received the report of the Silk Panel. The report will after finalisation be placed before the proposed Central Advisory Planning Board. Finalisation means consultation with the Provinces and the States.

If there is no supplementary question on this I should like to correct a mistake with reference to answer to a previous question.

Sardar Mangal Singh: I am putting a supplementary question, Sir. The Honourable Member has said that the price of silk has gone up. May I know if the Government of India are thinking of re-imposing control on the price of silk?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: I cannot promise that.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: May I ask it it is not a fact that during the last one month or so the price of Indian silk has gone down below the control rate and that on account of the fact that some merchants were able previously to have access to the Government they were able to spread a rumour that foreign silk was available and therefore they were putting down the prices?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: I am not aware of what has been suggested.

Sardar Mangal Singh: The Honourable Member has said that if he receives any quota of silk as a reparation, he will sell it to the public at a fair price. May I ask if he will similarly consider the question that the silk that may be available in the Disposals Directorate will be sold to the public at a fair price and not at a competition price?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: That is a definite policy in regard to all disposals.

Miss Maniben Kara: Am I to understand from the Honourable Member's reply to part (e) of the question that the policy of the Government will be to safeguard Indian industry by giving it tariff protection?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: I have answered about silk. It would not be right to treat other matters as supplementary to it.

Miss Maniben Kara: I want to know whether the Government have decided already to have the policy of giving protection to the silk industry by raising tariffs?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: I have already answered that in the matter of silk the policy of the Government is to protect it against foreign competition. I am not able to follow what the supplementary question is.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member may now correct the answer to the supplementary question.

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: With reference to question No. 5, a supplementary question was put by an Honourable Member about protection to handlooms and I said it was coming in a later question. It was involved in a sub-clause of that question itself. I might assure the Honourable Member that sufficient safeguard has been provided by reserving at least 25 per cent of the new spindlages for free yarn for handloom production.

Mr. President: Order, order, the question hour is over.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Sir, whenever a large portion of the time in the question hour is taken up in oath taking, the convention of the House is to give extra time for questions.

Mr. President: The convention is to the contrary. I myself made enquires yesterday as I thought I might give some time if permissible.

Shri Sri Prakasa: On one occasion, I remember, Sir, Sir Abdur Rahim, the former President gave 20 minutes more for questions.

(b) WRITTEN ANSWERS

FACILITIES FOR RAILWAY PASSENGERS

11. Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable the Railway Minister please state what steps Government are taking for

(a) the running of larger number of trains particularly those running long distances,

(b) the allocation of larger number of third class and inter class coaches for each of such trains,

(c) the increased and improved water supply for such coaches,

(d) the introduction of more satisfactory method of getting tickets at all hours of the day and night

(e) providing sleeping accommodation for inter class and third class passengers travelling long distances during nights,

(f) providing fan service and sanitary amenities for such classes and passengers,

(g) the catering arrangements for such passengers inside the train,

(h) providing medical facilities for passengers of all through trains,

(i) the introduction of a common class for all passengers particularly for trains which run during day time, and

(j) the introduction of watch and ward for each compartment so that the passengers are constantly looked after and their grievances promptly redressed?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) Between the cessation of hostilities and the 1st October 1946, Class I Railways have reintroduced or extended a total of 988 trains, representing an additional daily train mileage of 64570 on both Broad and Metro Gauge Railways. Similar figures for Class II Railways are 26 trains, involving an addition of 952 train miles per day.

As more stock becomes available by release from the Defence Department and by building in Railway workshops, passenger services will be further increased.

Apart from the above, the principal means of putting on more passenger trains is by obtaining more passenger vehicles. By March 1948, the Railway Board expect to obtain nearly 1000 additional Broad Gauge passenger vehicles. This represents about a 12 per cent increase on the coaches at present available for service. A further 5 per cent improvement can be expected in the repair statistics by that date. It is therefore expected that a further improvement of about 17 per cent in the number of passenger trains operating, principally long-distance trains, will be obtained by about April 1948.

Somewhat similar figures are expected in respect of Metro Gauge services.

(b) Of the new Broad Gauge vehicles mentioned in (a), it is intended that the great majority will be III class and these will effect a greater improvement in the availability of III class accommodation than in other classes. The allocation of the number of coaches of each class on particular trains must be left to the Railway Administrations to arrange in proportion to the number of passengers of each class normally travelling.

(c) The Railway Board have formulated long-range plans to effect an improvement in the water supply of all coaches. Such long-range plans will take some time to become effective. For immediate purposes, arrangements have been made for the more frequent filling of water tanks. It is not expected that any substantial improvement can be effected immediately due to difficulty in obtaining supplies of material.

(d) The number of stations with 24-hours booking arrangements has been increased and at other stations booking hours have been extended as required. Additional booking windows and more booking clerks have been provided at a number of stations where the demand has been felt.

(e) The provision of sleeping accommodation for a considerable percentage of Inter and III class passengers is a prominent feature under consideration in the Railway Board's post-war coach design. The financial implications of providing this amenity are now under close and detailed examination. It is anticipated that the provision of such amenities cannot be separated from the question of increasing fares.

(f) For the future III class, a large number of better designed lavatories have been planned and these will come into circulation as new vehicles to the post-war designs are built. As regards fans in III class carriages, a new method of meeting the additional electric load which would be involved is under close examination by the Railway Board, but no decision has yet been reached.

(g) Some Railways have Indian Dining Cars running on certain trains which cater for all classes of Passengers. Their extension as well as introduction of any further arrangements necessary to meet demands will be considered after the next meeting of the Central Advisory Council for Railways, at which the subject is to be discussed.

(h) Facilities for rendering first-aid are available at stations and in trains. Station Masters maintain up-to-date lists of available medical practitioners either belonging to the Railway or outside, and are required to summon medical aid from the nearest source available whenever required and if necessary, to arrange transport to the nearest hospital.

(i) The Government do not contemplate the introduction of a common class for all passengers.

(j) The Government do not consider it would be either practical or useful to post a watchman in each compartment. Railways have increased the strength of their Watch and Ward staff to give greater protection to passengers and railway property. Some Railways have running on their important trains some staff known as Conductor Guards to look after passengers' needs. Certain Railways have also appointed Passenger Guides at important stations to help passengers while on station platforms. Government propose to consider the question of further extending these arrangements.

REFUSAL OF PERMISSION TO RE-PUBLISH THE SEWAK FROM AKOLA

12. Mr. P. B. Gole: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state whether it is a fact that a Marathi Weekly newspaper by name Sewak was being printed and published at Akola from 1937 to February 1940?

(b) Is it a fact that the said newspaper discontinued publication owing to shortage of paper on account of war conditions?

(c) Is it a fact that after the cessation of hostilities the printer and publisher of the said newspaper applied for permission for re-publishing the said newspaper and also for a quota of news-print, four times during the last twelve months and whether permission was refused?

(d) Is it a fact that the Deputy Commissioner, Akola recommended for the grant of permission and quota?

(e) Why was permission refused for the re-publication of the said newspaper when permission for new newspapers has been granted?

The Honourable Sri O. Rajagopalachari: (a) Yes

(b) The paper suspended publication in 1940 before the promulgation of the Newsprint Control Order. It may be due to the cause stated.

(c) It is true that several applications were made on behalf of the paper.

(d) The report of a district officer to his Provincial Government cannot be made the subject of an answer.

(e) Permission was refused due to acute shortage of Newsprint.

PERMISSION FOR PUBLICATION OF NEWSPAPERS IN C P AND BERAR AFTER TERMINATION OF HOSTILITIES AND THE QUOTA OF NEWS PRINT DEMANDED BY THE SEWAK

13. *Mr. P. B. Gole: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state if it is a fact that permissions for publication of new vernacular and English newspapers in Central Provinces and Berar have been granted after the cessation of hostilities? If so, how many such newspapers have been permitted to be published and how much quota of news-print has been allotted to such new publications?

(b) What was the quota of news-print demanded by the publisher of the Sewak the Marathi Weekly published at Akola? What was the quota allotted to new newspapers?

(c) Are Government aware that the said newspaper, Sewak served a very useful purpose in the Akola District and was particularly devoted to the cause of Agriculturists in the District and was also recognised by the education department?

(d) Do Government propose to grant the necessary permission for publication and quota of newsprint especially when the demand for news-print is a very small one and when the newspaper is much in demand in Akola District?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: (a) Yes Two newspapers with a total quota of three tons and three cwts have been granted permission to start publication

(b) $1\frac{1}{2}$ tons per year For the second question please see (a) above

(c) This may be so

(d) Permission has been granted for re-starting the newspaper with a suitable quota

MONOPOLY OF THE G N I T CO FOR RUNNING BUS SERVICES IN DELHI PROVINCE

14. *Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Transport please state if it is a fact that the Gwalior and Northern India Transport Company have been granted the monopoly for running Bus services in Delhi Province?

(b) Do Government intend to permit other transport companies to run Bus services in Delhi Province?

(c) Are Government aware—

(i) that the bus services run by the Gwalior and Northern India Transport Company are inadequate and that there is a great deal of overcrowding;

(ii) that the number of buses is insufficient and run at infrequent intervals,

(iii) that the fares charged by this company are approximately two annas per mile, and

(iv) that a number of buses used by the Company on long runs are old and extremely uncomfortable?

(d) Will Government be prepared to investigate into the very high rate of fares charged and the grievances of the public using these buses?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) The reply is in the negative. Companies other than the G N I T operate buses on the rural routes

(b) Government have the future of Delhi transport under consideration.

(c) (i) and (ii) The number of buses and services operated by the G N I T are reported to be now adequate. It is realised that there is some congestion during peak periods but steps including the authorisation of additional petrol and a large increase in the number of buses have recently been taken to alleviate the position.

(iii) The reply is in the negative. Except in the case of one special service the basic rate was formerly one anna per mile but this has recently been reduced to one anna per mile for the first three miles and six pies per mile for any subsequent mileage.

(iv) Some of the buses are old but the old vehicles are gradually being replaced by new vehicles fitted with comfortable bodies.

(d) The present fares are not considered to be unduly high in the circumstances. Government are always prepared to investigate any reasonable complaints.

APPOINTMENT OF SIR HENRY KNIGHT IN THE FOOD DEPARTMENT FOR SOUTHERN INDIA

15. *Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Will the Secretary of the Food Department be pleased to state

(a) the reasons for appointing Sir Henry Knight to a special appointment in the Food Department for Southern India,

(b) the terms of his contract stating the period for which he was employed and the salary fixed,

(c) the actual period of his service,

(d) whether the post was advertised, if not, why not,

(e) why no Indian was appointed to this post, and

(f) whether his successor has been appointed, if so, who is he?

Mr. B. B. Sen: The proposal for the appointment of Sir Henry Knight was dropped. The question does not, therefore, arise.

ADVISORY COMMITTEES ON RAILWAYS

16. *Seth Sukhdev: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state

(a) which of the Railway Systems passing through British India, have not yet set up Railway Advisory Committees,

(b) if Government propose to take steps to have such Committees appointed, if not, why not, and

(c) what arrangements exist for the public to advise Railways on matters generally brought before Railway Committees, where no Advisory Committees exist?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) Among Class I Railways, the Jodhpur Railway, Class II, the Gaekwar's Baroda State Railway, the Bhavnagar State Railway, the Shahdara (Delhi) Saharanpur-Light Railway, and Class III, all Railways passing through British India.

(b) The Jodhpur Railway are considering the question of the formation of a Local Railway Advisory Committee. As regards Class II and III Railways, they are small and the Government do not consider it necessary to press for the formation of Local Advisory Committees on those Railways.

(c) The public can advise the Railways concerned through the usual channels of letters, publication in newspapers, or through personal interviews with the officers of the Railways.

INTERFERENCE BY THE JODHPUR RAILWAY ADMINISTRATION IN THE MANAGEMENT OF HYDERABAD (SIND) STATION

17. *Seth Sukhdev: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state

(a) whether it is a fact that Hyderabad (Sind) is a joint working station of North Western and Jodhpur Railways, if so, whether there is any agreement for such working, and whether a copy thereof will be laid on the table of the House,

(b) whether it is a fact that the Hyderabad (Smd) Station is managed by the North Western Railway agency,

(c) whether it is a fact that the Jodhpur Railway Administration has given an agency for the issue of upper class tickets at Hyderabad (Sind), if so, why,

(d) what other sources exist at Hyderabad (Sind) for the purchase of upper class tickets, and the number of tickets sold during the months of April, 1946, and August, 1946, separately, by all these sources, and

(e) what steps Government propose to take to avoid interference by the Jodhpur Railway Administration in the management of the Hyderabad (Sind) Station in the matter of sale of tickets?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) Yes A copy of the Agreement under execution is placed on the table of the House

(b) Yes

(c) Yes The Jodhpur Railway is a party to a tripartite agreement which the North Western Railway have with City Booking Agents for the issue of all classes of tickets from Booking Offices in Hyderabad City The Jodhpur Railway is a party to this agreement because the booking of passengers from Hyderabad (Sind) to and via that Railway is a local transaction of that Railway

(d) The Indian Railway Conference Association have recognised a number of tourist agents and the Jodhpur Railway have a general agreement with one of them for the issue of tickets This Agency have an office in Hyderabad (Sind) from which Upper Class tickets are issued

A statement showing the number of tickets issued for April, 1946 and August, 1946 by all sources is laid on the table of the House

DENIAL OF RELIEF OF Rs 4/8/- IN PAY TO RAILWAY EMPLOYEES WHO CEASED TO BE IN SERVICE AFTER 1ST JULY, 1945

18. *Seth Sukhdev: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state

(a) whether it is a fact that the relief of Rs 4/8 per mensem has been sanctioned in the pay of Railway employees with retrospective effect from the 1st July, 1945,

(b) whether it is a fact that the employees in service on this date, but not in service on the 1st August, 1946, have been deprived of this increase,

(c) under what specific rule of the Railway Codes this increase in pay has been denied to employees in service during the period to which it refers, and

(d) whether Government propose to issue instructions to give this increased pay to the employees for the months during which they were in service, but who resigned, retired or left service for any reason at any time after 1st July, 1945, if not, why not?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) and (b) The reply is in the affirmative

(c) The orders regarding the grant of interim relief to non-gazetted railway servants were issued on the 2nd of August, 1946, and, in terms of Rule 2045(2) of the State Railway General Code, have retrospective effect only to the extent provided in the letter itself conveying the sanction. There is no specific rule in the Railway Codes prescribing the conditions under which retrospective effect should be given to a sanction, the matter being within the discretion of the competent authority.

The increase in pay was given on the recommendation of the Standing Finance Committee for Railways in order to relieve the staff actually in service of their most pressing financial anxieties to make their continuance in railway employment possible. The relief was given with retrospective effect in order to place a lump sum amount in the hands of the serving employees to meet their immediate needs, pending the enquiry by the Pay Commission. It was, therefore, decided to exclude persons who had left service before the 1st August 1946 from this relief.

(d) In view of my reply to part (c) Government do not propose to modify their instructions.

FIXATION OF PRICE OF WHEAT IN U P

19. *Pandit Sri Krishna Dutt Palwal: (a) Will the Secretary of the Food Department kindly state if Government intend to continue the Grain Procurement Scheme this year also? If so, what price they propose to fix for wheat in the United Provinces?

(b) Was the price fixed for wheat this year in the United Provinces much less special in the districts having big rationed cities in them?

Mr. B. R. Sen: (a) Assuming that the Honourable Member refers to the U P Grain Procurement Scheme, the answer is that the U P Government intend to continue their Procurement Scheme for the rest of the crop year. The existing statutory maximum of Rs 10/4/- per maund for wheat in the main producing areas will remain in force till the end of the crop year.

(a) the present food situation in the country,

(b) the supply of foodstuffs expected from other countries, and

(c) the steps Government propose to take or are taking to meet the situation?

Mr. B. R. Sen: The Honourable Member is referred to the Memorandum on Food Situation laid on the table of the House.

DEPARTMENT OF FOOD

MEMORANDUM ON THE FOOD SITUATION IN INDIA AND DEVELOPMENT OF POLICY UP TO THE 20TH OCTOBER, 1946

A—India and International Food Organisations

The second and third quarters of the year 1946 have seen important developments in the representation of India on international bodies dealing with food, and in her relations with foreign countries from whom India draws or seeks to draw supplies. In this connection, a clear distinction must be drawn between international bodies which deal with the allocation of supplies, such as the Combined Food Board and the International Emergency Food Council, and bodies which deal with the planning of future production and price policy such as the Food and Agricultural Organisation, which recently held an important Conference at Copenhagen.

2 To deal first with international bodies allocating supplies, the body charged with this duty on a world basis at the time when the Indian Delegation visited Washington in March, 1946 was the Combined Food Board. This body was, in effect, nothing more than a war-time co-ordinating body set up to deal with the procurement of supplies needed by the Western Allies under war time conditions. It was not a representative body in a world wide sense, nor had it any executive authority to compel exporting nations to programme supplies according to its recommendations. It had dealt with a war time situation in which the main difficulty in distribution lay, not in procuring supplies of grain but in shipping them. The proceedings of the Combined Food Board assumed a very different complexion in the beginning of 1946, when it became apparent that the expectations formed in the middle of 1945 as to the relation of grain supply to demand in 1946 were totally erroneous and that a serious shortage was unavoidable. India had suffered an almost unprecedented short fall owing to the failure of the rains in the latter part of 1945, and the early part of 1946 but she was not alone in her misfortune, and there was widespread failure of production against estimates and shortage of supplies in many other parts of the world. In such circumstances, the Combined Food Board was quite unable to find sufficient supplies and recommend programmes which would anywhere near satisfy the competing demands of claimants all over the world. It was felt that a more representative and authoritative body must be created to deal with the new situation and accept the responsibility for deciding how the insufficient resources were to be parcelled out. While this was under consideration, India's position was improved to the extent that she was admitted to Membership of the Cereals Committee and of the Rice Committee of the Combined Food Board, and special measures were taken to strengthen the staff of the Agent General in Washington in order to secure that India's case was satisfactorily explained and pressed after the Indian Delegation had left Washington.

3 To replace the Combined Food Board, the nations eventually agreed on the constitution of the International Emergency Food Council. The full Council consists of 24 nations as follows:—

Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Chile, China, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, Greece, India, Italy, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Philippines, Siam, Switzerland, Turkey, Union of South Africa, United Kingdom, United States of America.

The Executive Body of the Council is the Central Committee composed of 8 nations as follows:—

Australia, Canada, China, Denmark, France, India, United Kingdom and United States of America.

It will be seen that India is thus much more fully and directly represented in the International Emergency Food Council than she had been with the Combined Food Board. She is, of course, a Member of the Commodity Committees operating under the International Emergency Food Council as she had been under the Combined Food Board. The International Emergency Food Council is still, however, constitutionally a recommendatory Body, and is not in the position that the world's surpluses are placed unreservedly at the Council's disposal to be distributed under its orders.

As the year proceeded it became increasingly evident that in the case of rice the International Emergency Food Council Committee in Washington could not keep in sufficiently close touch with the situation in South East Asia. Estimates of availability of supplies were constantly changing, and allocations made by the International Emergency Food Council bore little quantitative relation to the supplies which could actually be shipped. This situation was to a certain extent mitigated by the presence in Singapore of the Special Commissioner, South East Asia, Lord KILLERIN. He acted as a co-ordinating authority on the spot for South East Asian supplies including supplies to India under International Emergency Food Council allocations. He had requested the appointment of Liaison Officers by the interested Governments, and held a series of special and periodic Conferences in order to secure the best possible programming of supplies with due regard to International Emergency Food Council allocations. The Government of India's regular representative at these meetings was Mr S. K. Chettur, the Representative of India in Malaya, but Conferences were attended from time to time by other Officers including the Food Secretary. It has now been decided to appoint a special Sub-Committee of the International Emergency Food Council at Singapore to advise and assist the Special Commissioner in his task of food co-ordination in South East Asia, and in adjusting the actual supplies available to the changing needs of different areas, with greater degree of speed and accurate knowledge than is possible from Washington. India is, represented on this Sub-Committee at Singapore.

4 To turn to the other type of international organisation dealing with food planning, rather than with the allocation of supplies, the most important event has been the emergence of World Food Board proposals put forward by Sir John Boyd Orr, Director General Food and Agriculture Organisation to the recent Food and Agriculture Organisation Conference at Copenhagen. The objectives of the proposed World Food Board, as stated to the Copenhagen Conference, are

Firstly, developing and organising production, distribution and utilisation of the basic foods to provide diets on a health standard for the peoples of all countries, and

Secondly, stabilising agricultural prices at levels fair to producers and consumers alike.

An aspect of the proposals of special importance to India is the establishment of Food Reserves adequate for any emergency that might arise due to failure of crops in any part of the world. India was represented at the Copenhagen Conference when it was decided that a Preparatory Commission should be set up in Washington to examine the World Food Board proposals in detail, and attempt to work out a practical plan to achieve the objectives. A Delegation to represent India on this Preparatory Commission has already left for Washington.

5 The attempts which have been made by the Government of India to add to, or supplement supplies under allocation by the International Emergency Food Council, are summarised in the paragraphs dealing with imports, but the following points may be of special interest to Members of the Legislature.

Firstly—The question of obtaining supplies from Russia—which country is not a Member of the International Emergency Food Council—has received special attention. A direct appeal to Russia was made at the United Nations Organisation Conference in London, and enquiries were made subsequently during the year regarding the prospects of grain being available for export from Russia. Only recently, Mr. Krishna Menon, on behalf of Pandit Nehru interviewed Moussem Molotov in Paris to place India's needs before him. Up to the present, the Government of the U S S R has not found it possible to make available any supplies for India.

Secondly—A special Mission was sent to Argentine in order to secure the shipment of supplies of grain which had been purchased there on behalf of the Government of India, but for which export licenses had not been granted. This Mission has been more fortunate, and substantial quantities are now on their way to India.

Thirdly—The offer of exports of paddy for India from Java has been actively followed up, but has encountered a succession of practical difficulties which have not been rendered any easier by the difficult international and political situation which obtained in that country. So far, thirty thousand tons of Indonesian paddy have been shipped to India, and, it is hoped that greatly increased quantities will be forthcoming now that motor transport has been made available to improve movement from the interior to the railheads and to the Ports.

Fourthly—In Siam, India has accepted an invitation to become a Member of the Siam Rice Commission. This is an International Body composed of representatives of His Majesty's Government, the United States, Siam and China in addition to India to stimulate and regulate the export of rice from Siam under the Tripartite Agreement and in accordance with International Emergency Food Council allocations.

Fifthly—An interesting feature has been the visit to India of the unofficial American Famme Mission under the leadership of Dr. Schultz. This Mission was treated by the Government of India as their guests, and given full facilities to visit different parts of the country, and see for itself the supply position, the administrative measures taken to prevent starvation, and the condition of the people. The object in view was to enable the Mission, on its return to America, to report its findings for the information of the American people and the guidance of their Government. The report of the Mission included strong support for the importation of grain into India in the quantities asked for by the Government of India, and a notable tribute to India's internal procurement and distribution system.

B—Crop Prospects

From reports received from various parts of the country, it appears that the all India total output of Kharif crops will be upto average. So far as rice is concerned, Southern India which suffered from unprecedented drought last year is expected to have an average crop, which would mean an increase of 1 million tons over last year in Madras alone. The only Province where the rice crop is reputed to have suffered damage to an appreciable extent is Assam. Rice crops in some districts of Assam have been destroyed by recent floods but the extent of the damage is not yet known. In the Punjab the rice crop has suffered from drought but the loss in yield has to a large extent been offset by the increase in acreage. From Sind, too, reports of drought have been received but the figures of area and yield have not yet been communicated to us by the Sind Government.

Jowar and Bajra crops are also reported to be normal in all parts of the country. In Bihar, the maize crop which was expected to be better than last year has suffered considerable damage by floods in the Ganges.

C—Progress of the Basic Plans

Kharif Plan 1945-46 This Plan attempted the distribution of 8.4 lakh tons of rice, 2.3 lakh tons of millets, and 0.9 lakh tons of maize from surplus to deficit areas. This quantity was, of course, quite inadequate to meet even the original declared deficits. When later the deficits increased considerably due to drought and failure of crops and it was clear that internal surpluses were wholly insufficient to meet the situation, special missions were sent abroad to press for more imports.

As the Plan progressed, even the meagre surpluses previously declared were found to be unavailable either because in some cases the original estimates of the surplus areas were over optimistic or because the crops, both kharif and rabi, suffered damage due to floods and drought. The original combined total movement target was 11.2 lakh tons, the revised one was 9.9 lakh tons. Against this revised target the surplus areas have despatched to the deficit areas upto the 26th September, 1946, 8.97 lakh tons. The following table shows the upto date quotas of rice and millets from the principal surplus areas and their performance so far —

Rabi Plan 1945-46 — (May 1945—April 1946)

Under this Plan against a total programme of 9.5 lakh tons wheat, a total quantity of 7.6 lakh tons wheat was despatched from the surplus areas. In addition to these supplies a total quantity of 9.2 lakh tons of wheat was received from overseas and distributed to the deficit areas during the currency of the Plan. It may be mentioned in this connection that owing to the difficulties of wheat procurement in the Punjab, the largest surplus Province, resulting largely from the poor prospect of the 1946 wheat crop, there were very small exports of wheat from internal sources during the last four months of the Rabi year 1945-46, i.e., in the period January to April, 1946. The wheat requirements of the deficit areas during this period had therefore to be met almost wholly from overseas arrivals, which amounted to 3.7 lakh tons (from 1st January to 30th April, 1946).

Rabi Plan 1946-47 (May 1946 to April 1947)

The only wheat surpluses that were declared were 40,000 tons by Sind and 30,000 tons by Bahawalpur. In view of this and as the import programme has been uncertain and known only for a few weeks ahead, the Food Department have had to modify the earlier system of 12 monthly Basic Plans, with effect from May last. A system of monthly budgets on the basis of which allocations of available supplies are made has been introduced instead. These indicate for each deficit area the stock position at the beginning of the month, local procurement within the area, stocks to be moved into the area from surplus areas in India, allocation of imports from abroad, the total resources available for the month and the consumption for the month. Stocks refer to stocks held by Government, and consumption to the offtake of non-producers or partial producers dependent on supplies from Government. On present estimates we expect to enter the month of November with stocks in hand in the principal deficit areas equivalent to a month's offtake from Government sources. The stock in hand at the commencement of December will be less than the equivalent of one month's offtake from Government sources. These working stocks are inadequate to ensure the smooth working of rationing schemes, etc.

For this purpose it is estimated that an immediate allocation of a further 5,15,000 tons of foodgrains for arrival in India before the end of the year will be necessary. The case for these additional imports has already been put to His Majesty's Government and the International Emergency Food Council.

The following table shows the receipts of foodgrains from overseas during the period 1st May 1946 to 30th September 1946 and their distribution among the principal deficit areas. ('000 tons)

Recipients	Rice	Wheat	Flour	Millets	Maize	Barley	Total
Bengal	10	78	20		4		112
Bihar	15	26	2		27	1	71
Bombay	6	36	20	8	24	5	99
Madras	83	119	38	19	57		316

Others		188	30		12		230
Total	173	536	120	36	148	6	1,019

The following two points deserve special mention —

(1) We have received loans from some Provinces and States to help us to tide over a critical period in some of the deficit areas, on a guarantee of replacement, later in the year when they might need it to meet their own requirements.

The quantities so far loaned are —

Punjab	90,000 tons wheat and atta
Sind	60,000 " "
U P	10,000 " "
Bhawalpur	7,000 " "
Jaipur	5,000 " barley

The bulk of these quantities has already been despatched to the deficit areas. Despatches of the balance are progressing satisfactorily. We have started repayment of the Sind loan. The others are repayable from December onwards if repayment is insisted upon.

(2) The seamen's strike in United States of America in September and October 1946, and the delay in arriving at an agreement with the Argentine Government over the issue of export permits for the Government of India's purchases of foodgrains, have very seriously affected the imports in the months of October and November. Special appeals were therefore made in September last to surplus areas in India to come to the rescue of deficit areas in this critical period. As a result of these appeals, the following fresh surpluses of rice, wheat and millets have been offered for export during October and November —

Orissa	20,000 tons rice
Punjab	10,000 tons rice
C P & Berar	10,000 tons rice (in exchange for wheat)
Indore	4,300 tons millets
Khairpur	1,000 tons wheat

Estimates relating to the Kharif surpluses and deficits for the next year commencing from 1st November 1946 are still being collected

D—Imports

Throughout the last three years the Government of India have steadily and continuously pressed upon His Majesty's Government the imperative need and urgency of importing into India substantial quantities of grain from abroad with a view to offset the overall deficiency in foodgrains, to facilitate the procurement of local surpluses to hold and maintain the accepted price policy and to build up an adequate reserve for meeting emergency needs. The import position has been reviewed almost every quarter in close consultation with His Majesty's Government and India's case for imports has been supported by officers of Government during their visit to the United Kingdom and fully explained to some of the experts in Great Britain who had visited this country. The Foodgrains Policy Committee appointed by the Government of India in 1943 recommended that the Government of India should press for current consumption imports of about 1 million tons a year plus 500,000 tons to build up a central foodgrains reserve. The general food situation during the war and particularly the shipping situation was such that despite all our efforts we were unable to obtain the full amount of grain recommended by the Committee. Our imports during the years 1943, 1944 and 1945 were actually as follows —

328,686 tons	649,041 tons	844,235 tons

With these imports, the highest reserve that the Government of India could build at any stage was about 120,000 tons and this too was dissipated in rescue operations for the United Provinces at the end of 1944. The serious situation which developed towards the end of 1945 owing to the failure of the monsoon in the South required special measures. It was obvious that the imports recommended by the Policy Committee were insufficient to meet the situation which had arisen and, therefore, the Government of India decided to send a Food Mission to the Combined Food Board to press their case for increased and accelerated imports. The mission was instructed to demand 2.2 million tons for the first half of the year and 2 million tons for the second half. They returned with a tentative import figure of 1.4 million tons for the first half of the year, with a further allocation to be settled later, for the second half. Shortly after the mission returned to India, however, there was some doubt over the figure communicated to them and the matter was further taken up with His Majesty's Government as a result of which an agreement was arrived at between His Majesty's Government, United States of America and Canada under which shipments of 11,65,000 tons were promised to us during the period May to September, 1946. Between January and May we had received about 5,11,000 tons of grain. The total quantity of foodgrains imported into India during the first half of 1946 amounted to about 682,000 tons.

In addition to pressing our case before the Combined Food Board, the possibility of importing foodgrains from a number of other sources was actually investigated. The results are summarised below —

Egypt—The Indian Government Trade Commissioner, at Cairo purchased 40,700 tons of millets and 7,007 tons of Barley which have been received in India.

Iraq—We have purchased 2,000 tons of millets through a firm established in Iraq and have completed arrangements for a further import of 6,000 tons through the same firm. The Ministry of Food have also promised to give us a share out of the exportable surpluses of barley which they have purchased. This is expected to be about 80,000 tons.

Iran—The Iran Government have promised to issue export licence upto 60,000 tons of barley in favour of India. An officer of the Food Department has been deputed to Iran and Iraq to make the necessary arrangements for purchase.

Burma and Siam—Transport difficulties and slow rehabilitation of the agricultural economy of Burma and Siam are standing in the way of substantial imports from these countries. The Government of India have assisted both Burma and Siam with transport and consumer goods and have given a special quota of textiles to Siam with a view to facilitating the procurement of rice. An officer of the Food Department has been lent to Siam as the head of the Siam Rice Unit which advises on purchases of rice in that country. In spite of all efforts hitherto made however the position of supplies from Siam continues to remain extremely unsatisfactory.

Indonesia—An officer of the Government of India was deputed to pursue the offer of 500,000 tons of rice made by the Indonesian Premier. About 6,000 tons of paddy has so far been received and about 24,000 tons is on the way from Indonesia. There have been many difficulties in the way of accelerating supplies and an officer of the Government of India is even now in Java to assist in removing the difficulties. Another officer, with suitable staff is in Java to supervise loading of ships at various ports. Lighters and transport have been made available to the Indonesians in addition to consumer goods to facilitate the flow of rice.

Argentina—Purchases of maize and millets amounting to over 300,000 tons had been effected through the Indian Government Trade Commissioner and Commercial Agents. A mission headed by Dewan Chaman Lal was sent to Argentina to explore the possibility of further purchases and expedite the issue of export permits for quantities already purchased. The mission has successfully concluded an agreement with the Argentine Government under which export permits which had previously been withheld are now being issued. Considerable quantities of Argentine grain have already arrived in this country and more is on its way.

Turkey.—We expect to get 80,000 tons of barley and 20 000 tons of wheat from purchases made by His Majesty's Government in Turkey

Abyssinia.—We have appointed a purchasing agent in Abyssinia and 1,500 tons of Jowazees has already been received through this agency. A further 500 tons is expected to arrive shortly

East Africa.—Trade offers of foodgrains from British and Portuguese East Africa are being investigated

2 Subsidisation of foodgrains.—The landed cost of some of the imported foodgrains is higher than the price levels prevailing in various parts of the country. In order not to disturb the present price structure in the different provinces which is the result of strenuous efforts during the last years and to protect the consumer against further increases in prices. The Government of India have decided to subsidise the sale of imported foodgrains to the extent necessary. The extent of the subsidy during 1946 would amount to Rs 15½ crores

The attached table shows the details of foodgrains received in India in 1946, month by month upto the end of September 1946 distinguished by sources and grains

E—Procurement

Since 1943 many Provinces and States have made considerable progress towards a policy of Government monopoly procurement of foodgrains. In 1944, a detailed examination of the principal schemes operating at the time was undertaken by an officer of the Food Department whose report warranted the conclusion that monopoly procurement had justified itself in practice and should continue to be the goal towards which the development of all procurement systems should proceed. The 5th All India Food Conference held on 29th January to 2nd February 1945 also recommended that the results obtained in the working of monopoly procurement system justified their further study and their development in each Province and State, so far as circumstances permitted. The system of monopoly procurement has now been adopted by most of the Provinces and States and the particular systems obtaining in various provinces are briefly described in Annexure 'A' attached to this memorandum.

F—Storage

Apart from godowns built by the Central Government at their own cost and on 50-50 basis, described in the report circulated at the beginning of the last session, the Provincial Governments and private enterprise have been encouraged to build further storage accommodation at their own cost. A statement showing the storage accommodation at present held by the Provincial Governments and States or covered by the schemes in hand is given below.

(Figures in tons)

Situation	Existing storage		Proposed constructions	Total
	Govt owned	Leased

Administrations	54,633	13,900	44,800	113,333
States	1,170,382	1,501,969	38,220	2,710,571

The Punjab Government are building a chain of bulk bins spread over 40 important stations and having an aggregate capacity of about 70,000 tons. These bins are expected to be fitted with mechanical lifting tackle and when completed they should play an important role in handling the surplus wheat of those districts.

2 Co-ordination—Under the stress of emergency conditions which prevailed in the earlier stages, the original constructions were mostly in the nature of ad hoc schemes. The position is now being reviewed with a view to evolve a more co-ordinated and well-balanced development of storage in the country. The new constructions are being so designed and located as to ensure that they will continue to be used for storage of foodgrains even after the controls are withdrawn.

At the instance of the Food Department the Punjab Government have passed a legislation to provide that only merchants who are in possession of approved warehouses should be granted licences for dealing in foodgrains. Other Provinces have been requested to adopt similar measures.

The Reserve Bank of India have sponsored a scheme for establishing licensed warehouses. The N. W. F. P. and Travancore State have already initiated legislation in this direction. By means of these warehouses it is proposed to co-ordinate the storage policy with the welfare of farmers linking it with the problem of transport of agricultural produce and rural credit.

3 The third annual course for the training of the Provincial and States' staff engaged in the work of storage was held in the third week of October 1946 and was attended by 144 delegates. In addition to the courses in Delhi it is now proposed to hold regional courses to train local personnel with particular reference to local conditions.

4 Experimental work—Experiments are being carried out in the Food Department on disinfectants. It has been found that Gammaxene smoke can disinfect godowns and Gammaxene dust on floors and walls of godowns kills insects. These methods have been recommended to Provinces and States.

Ethylene Dichloride Carbon Tetrachloride has also been found to be a very effective fumigant for disinfection of grain and has been recommended for adoption. Experiments have successfully been made to fumigate grain even under tarpaulins. This method of fumigation will go a long way in controlling infestation as it can be conveniently carried out everywhere as against the restricted use of fumigants in air tight godowns.

For rat control, apart from rat-proofing the godowns, poison baiting by Zinc Phosphide and cyanogassing rat-burrows are the methods adopted.

The Food Department has made arrangements for the supply of sufficient quantities of these insecticides and fumigants.

Advantage is also being taken of the already established scientific institutions to carry out research on problems concerning stored grains. The Indian Institute of Science at Bangalore has undertaken experiments on heat treatment of grain for reducing its moisture content. Another scheme has been sanctioned to study the development of mould, fungi, etc. Collaboration with other scientists is being secured. Universities have also been approached to give a proper place to the study of grain storage in the curriculum of Agricultural Colleges.

G—Price Control

(i) Rabi Prices.—In April 1946 the Government of India after considering the views of the Governments of the main wheat producing areas and the recommendations of the Price Advisory Committee decided that there should be no change during the Rabi crop year 1946-47 in the existing statutory maximum prices of wheat, gram or barley. It was also decided that there should be no change during the next 12 months in the guaranteed minimum price of Rs 7-8-0 for fair average quality wheat.

(ii) Kharif Prices.—The question of fixation of the Kharif grain prices for 1946-47 is under consideration.

(iii) Pulses Prices.—The Government of India have decided that prices of pulses should be controlled in the various Provinces and States. For this purpose the Provinces and States have been classified as (i) Deficit, (ii) Self-sufficient, and (iii) Surplus. For deficit areas the adoption of the weighted average purchase price plus average cost of transport plus handling and other incidental charges has been suggested and such Provinces and States have been asked to notify such a pool price as the statutory maximum price. In surplus and self-sufficient areas, the Government of India have agreed to the adoption for the time being of the prices prevailing in July as the statutory maximum prices in order to guard against the risk of stocks going underground.

H—Rationing

1 Extension of Rationing.—The food crisis since the end of 1945 has led to further and very rapid extension of rationing in the country especially in the semi-urban and rural areas. 215 more towns and rural areas representing a population of over 97 millions have been rationed since January 1946. In all, 771 towns and rural areas covering a population of over 150 million persons have been rationed up to the beginning of October 1946. 420 more towns covering a population of 55 million in the urban and rural areas are expected to be rationed shortly.

2 Nutrition.—In most of the Provinces and States, expert nutrition officers have been appointed for nutritional work. The available protective foods, especially milk, are being distributed to vulnerable groups, namely expectant and nursing mothers and children in preference to other groups. Such priority schemes are functioning in Bombay City, Madras, Travancore State, Cochin State and Civil and Military Station, Bangalore.

School feeding schemes are being extended and are now in operation in Bombay, Madras, Punjab (Simla) U. P., Orissa, Bihar (B. I. Railway), C. P. and Berar, Rampur State, Mysore State, Bangalore Civil and Military Station, Cochin State, Travancore State and Hyderabad State.

3 Publicity.—The demand for the Food Department's two publications "Nutrition" and "Canteens in Industry" has increased and the number of copies now being published has reached 10,000 monthly in the case of "Nutrition" and 6,000 quarterly in the case of "Canteens in Industry". Extracts from these publications are being translated into local languages by some of the Provinces and States. The two Nutrition Exhibitions held in Delhi during the last year to stimulate popular interest in dietetics attracted a large number of visitors and were very successful.

I—Sugar and Salt

1 Sugar.—The production of sugar this year did not come up to the original estimate of 11,14,000 tons—the actual production being only 9,48,000 tons. The result was that a 13 per cent cut had to be applied to the quotas allotted to the Provinces and States at the beginning of the season for civilian consumption. A cut of 10 per cent was also effected in the quotas allowed for export to some of the Middle East and neighbouring countries while in the case of Iran no exports were allowed. The total quantity for export was after the cut 14,573 tons.

To enable the factories to pay higher wages to labourers and to meet the cost of replacements and renewals of plants the ex-factory price of D 24 quality sugar was raised by 6 annas with effect from 5th March 1946.

At the instance of the U. P. Government the price of khandasari sugar was decontrolled. The inter-provincial movement was, however, subject to the issue of permits by the Sugar Controller for India. This did not have the desired effect and the price of khandasari went up very high. As this would have adversely affected the production of factory sugar during 1946-47 season it has been decided to bring this sugar again under control.

For 1946-47 the Governments of U P and Bihar on the advice of their Joint Control Board suggested higher cane prices than in the previous year. There were similar demands from Punjab and Frontier also. This advice was endorsed by the Sugar Control Advisory Committee. Government of India after carefully considering the whole problem decided to accept the above recommendations and raise the sugar price to Rs 20.14 ex-factory for all-India, except Punjab and Frontier where the price will be Rs 24. An Ordinance has been issued to realise the difference between the old and the new price in the form of a special excise duty on the existing stocks.

The Government of India have taken decisions in regard to the two of the major recommendations of Sugar Panel, viz. (i) the target of sugar production and (ii) the establishment of two additional units and their location to meet the increased target. The requirements of sugar during the first five years of the post-war period have been estimated at 18,50,000 tons. The normal production capacity of the existing units is 10,84,000 tons and it is proposed to cover the gap by —

- (a) expansion of existing uneconomic unit,
- (b) installation of new units,
- (c) development of sugarcane — construction of roads in existing factory areas shifting certain units to more suitable sites, etc., and
- (d) khandsani sugar.

2 Gur—In case of gur also the estimated surplus did not materialize. The result was that the price of this commodity showed a sharp rise in most deficit areas.

In view of the short production of gur, the Provincial and State Governments were requested to prohibit the utilization of gur for distillation purposes. Almost all the Provinces and States have agreed to this suggestion.

3 Salt—The position has been satisfactory regarding supply of this commodity all over India.

J—Oilseeds and Oils

The question of a co-ordinated all-India control over oilseeds and oils has been engaging the attention of Government of India for some time. Various attempts were made to evolve a common policy but the failure of certain Administrations to fall into line made implementation of an all-India policy difficult. The whole question was reviewed at a Conference at the end of September of representatives of Provinces and States which recommended after prolonged discussions a uniform all-India policy of control over prices and movement of oilseeds and oils. This recommendation has been carefully examined by the Government of India and accepted as a basis of future policy.

K—Army Demands and Processed Food Stuff

During the last few months the purchases for the Army have been drastically reduced in respect both of quantity and variety of items required. The important reductions are —

	Tons
Atta	54,435
Dhalls	7,691
Ghee	3,845
Vegetable Product and Hydrogenated cooking oil	6,484

These reductions have proportionately relieved the pressure of Army demands on the available foodstuffs of the country.

The production of processed foodstuffs for the Army which had been undertaken by the Food Department has come to an end. There has been no dehydration of vegetable for the Armed Forces, but the 3 Government-owned dehydration factories in the U P were employed to produce 340 tons of dehydrated potatoes for supply to scarcity areas in the country. Dehydration of meat continued up to the end of April since when the nine factories have closed and are being reported for disposal. The Fruit Canning Factory at Nasarpur on a lease which expires at the end of this year will be transferred to the Agriculture Department for training students and arranging advanced courses in fruit and vegetable preservation. It is intended that the factory which is situated in a fruit producing region will pay for itself and will be a model in respect of fruit preservation. The Fruit Processing Factory at Peshawar has been handed over to the N W F P Government according to the terms of their contract with the Central Government. The drying which is less economic and unhygienic. Ghee Heating Centres have been reduced from 6 to 2 and flour mills from 9 to 2. The industrial capacity which has been given up represents corresponding saving for the civil market. Privately-owned factories which were started or extended to meet the Defence demand are being assisted to the extent possible to turn over to the civil market. To the extent they can meet the specifications these factories. The demand from the civil market is also being assured to them by limiting the competition of foreign imports. Some of the industries have already applied to the Tariff Board for protection while others are for the time being protected under the Import Control Regulations.

Technical Panel

The Technical Panel met twice during the year and made various recommendations. The following schemes of research which were recommended by the Panel were sanctioned by the Food Department —

- (A) The erection of a pilot plant for the preparation of soyabean milk
- (B) Construction of a plant for heat treatment of grains
- (C) Improvement in the quality of foreign liquors produced in India
- (D) Studies in the use of seed cakes as human food

In addition a Rice Technological Committee has been set up by the Panel to consider problems in connection with the processing of rice including methods of conservation.

Considerable research work has been done in the laboratory attached to the Food Department which has recently been provided with a Cold Storage Plant. This research includes

- (i) Determination of the moisture limits of dried fruits
- (ii) Storage tests of dehydrated meat, fish, onion and potatoe
- (iii) Conversion of groundnut, mustard and sesame cakes for human food
- (iv) Standardisation of Vanaspathi
- (v) Different culinary uses of dehydrated potatoes
- (vi) Uses of groundnut flour for making chapatti, biscuits, etc.
- (vii) Fortification of Atta with Calcium carbonate
- (viii) Suitability of soyabean products as substitute for milk
- (ix) Analysis of American surplus foods in respect of their storage life

In order to place research in respect of extending and improving food resources on an organised basis the Food Department has supported the proposal of the late P & D Department for the establishment of a Food Technological Institute at a capital cost of Rupees 15 lakhs and a recurring cost of about 4 lakhs. A similar proposal for setting up a Food Advisory Unit at the Indian Institute of Science, Bangalore at an annual cost of about Rs. 20,000 is being considered in consultation with the administrations which support this Institute.

Food Industries

The Food Department has also undertaken the planning and development of about forty food industries. Factual information obtained by questionnaires issued to provinces and industries is now ready to be placed before the five Panels for groups of allied industries. The personnel of the Panels has been approved and it is expected that they will meet in the near future. Such plans as the Panels may recommend will be considered by Government to determine the control, encouragement, and help which different industries may require. The plans will also be published for the benefit of the investing public, which is now generally without information about the potentials of different industries and the cost of setting them up.

An Information Bureau is also being set up to provide industries with information about availability and cost of manufacturing equipment. In this connection much literature is being received from United Kingdom, Canada, and Australia. His Majesty's Senior Trade Commissioner in India has been interesting himself in this work and has referred the various firms of manufacturers to the Food Department. The information received is being catalogued. It is also intended that it should be summarised and issued in booklet form for the information of the public.

The Food Department has itself been progressing industries. First in importance is the Vanaspathi Industry. 18 factories in British India and 11 in Indian States, comprehended in the short term plan are being assisted to set up plant from abroad and controlled material in India. It is expected that 14 of these factories will be in production before the end of 1947. It has been decided that until the results of this expansion are known no further assistance or encouragement may be given for new factories. It is proposed to control this industry from the Centre. This would incidentally enable uniformity in the quality of Vanaspathi which is very necessary in an article which imitates ghee and therefore must be clearly distinguished from it. The control over quality will also make it possible to fortify vanaspathi in order to make it a more wholesome food. The Food Department has also been progressing the project for the establishment of a Food Yeast Factory to produce 3,000 tons. The expert's report on the project was brought to the notice of Provincial Governments and industrialists. So far Provincial Governments and States have indicated that they would have an annual demand for about 1,500 tons of food yeast at a stated price of about 0.60 a lb. It is being considered whether the factory should be set up by Government or by a private firm which has agreed to produce and distribute the product according to directions of Government Food Yeast, which is produced from molasses, has been found by tests conducted recently by the Food Department in schools and by the Army in their messes to be a valuable addition to the general diet.

Disposals

The Food Department is responsible for disposal of all surplus foods. The surpluses with the Quarter Master General are not considerable but those of the U S A Army were about 55,000 tons. These were declared to the Food Department at the beginning of May 1946 since when an active programme of disposal has enabled the sale of about 20,000 tons valued at about Rs. 25 lakhs. This represents a welcome addition to the food resources at a time of general shortage and austerity. Another 35,000 tons valued at about Rs. 450 lakhs still remain for disposal.

The procedure for disposal took account of requirements for famine relief for which suitable stocks with the necessary storage life were reserved. For the balance prices were fixed in consultation with the trade which were actually tested by allowing open tenders from the trade. The quantities not disposed by the tenders are being gradually sold at fixed prices. The less popular items were also offered for export, but were not taken up by the trade. Considering that there were nearly 1,000 items, many unknown before in the country and all extremely perishable the disposal so far both in respect of prices and quantities has been very satisfactory. The sales made, however, have not been followed by deliveries in view of the disturbed conditions in Calcutta where the stocks are lying.

ANNEXURE A

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA
DEPARTMENT OF FOOD*Procurement arrangement in various Provinces*

Lacub. The Punjab Government have now introduced a system of monopoly procurement of wheat. The essential features of the scheme are as follows—

(i) Operations relating to purchase of wheat in nearly 500 mounds of the Province will be completely controlled by Government. All the pucca Aityas of a mound or such of them who are willing to join, will be constituted into a Pucca Aityas Association, and while the producers will be free to choose their Kichhra Aityas the purchases will only be made by this Association.

(ii) All wheat purchased by the Aityas Association will be disposed of only under the orders of Government.

(iii) The purchases will be made at a price fixed for each mound subject to quality allowances, except that in villages within 5 miles of the mound this price will be 4 muns less and for those more than 5 miles away 6 muns less. This should have the effect of encouraging movement towards the mounds.

(iv) The Aityas Association will get a commission of Rs. 12 per Rs. 100 of the value of grain and gunny bags supplied.

(v) Sale of wheat by growers in villages except for the requirements of the village, or to a consumer in a neighbouring village up to 20 seers at a time is prohibited.

(vi) Movement of wheat by rail and road is prohibited except between village and market or under Government permit to the market to the recipient areas.

The Punjab Government have also recently introduced a system of monopoly procurement of rice in the rice producing areas of the province. These have been called controlled areas. The essential features of the scheme are as follows—

(i) The mill will be the centre of procurement operations as all rice (except for small quantities of hand-pounded rice for domestic consumption) must inevitably pass through a mill. All rice produced at a mill will be disposed of only under the orders of Government.

(ii) Minimum prices have been fixed for all varieties of paddy in the controlled areas and for the sale to the producers.

(iii) Maximum prices of the milled rice have been fixed for both the controlled and the non-controlled areas.

(iv) Maximum ex-mill prices of various varieties of rice have also been fixed.

(v) The movement of rice and paddy in and from control areas will be controlled generally as in the case of wheat.

2. N. W. F. P.—Till recently procurement was done through private trade under Government supervision and the requirements of deficit districts were supplied from surplus districts through normal trade channels. In 1945 a Wheat Procurement Order was promulgated which prohibited the sale or transfer of wheat by one person to another without authority from the Provincial Government transactions of less than 20 maunds with the grower direct being excepted. For the current Rabi crop the N. W. F. P. Government have imposed a compulsory levy on holdings of 50 acres or more. The assessment on unirrigated land is at a flat rate of two maunds per acre. A higher assessment is to be made on irrigated land.

3 Sind—With effect from the 15th May, 1946, the Sind Government have promulgated an order called the "The Wheat and Gram Procurement Order" under which a Purchasing Officer may order that a wholesale dealer in any area shall not, except to the extent permitted by that Officer, sell wheat or gram to any person other than a Government Agent. The Order further prohibits the retailers in non-rationed areas from selling wheat or gram in any transaction to any person in a quantity exceeding 20 seer at a time.

The system of procurement of rice has recently been changed under the Sind Rice Procurement Order (1946), rice mills cannot dispose of the rice produced by them except in accordance with the directions issued by authorised Government Officers. Movement by rail or river is controlled.

4 United Provinces—Till lately, the system of procurement was dependent on purchase of grain coming to the markets. From the current year a direct procurement scheme for Rabi has been introduced. Small producers whose output of Rabi crops is less than 10 mounds or whose total annual production is less than 20 mounds have been exempted. The Provincial Government's target has been distributed among the surplus districts according to the surplus estimated to be available in each. The district demand is then broken up among homogeneous tracts and within these tracts individual assessments are made after taking into consideration the average production per acre in the tract. Committees of people's representatives are to be closely associated with procurement at every stage.

5 Bihar—Purchases (subject to the limits of approved prices) are made by Government officers through accredited Agents chosen from the trade. In addition, a compulsory levy on paddy has recently been imposed which prohibits a producer holding 100 acres or more from disposing of any paddy exceeding $\frac{1}{4}$ of his total produce. Individual assessments are made. Government may not, however, demand more than half the total produce if it is less than 1,000 mounds and more than $\frac{1}{3}$ ths of the total produce in any case. The Bihar Levy Order has since been extended to wheat.

6 Bengal—Purchases are made direct by Government Officers in certain districts and through Trade Agents called Chief Purchasing Agents in others. All rice mills producing more than 50 mounds rice daily are required to sell their produce to Government. Rice and paddy can move only on Government account by rail or river. The Provincial Government have recently resorted also to requisitionings of stocks with the larger holders at their discretion.

7 Assam—Purchases in the Surma Valley are made direct by Government Officers on a tender system. The single trade agency which used to operate in the Assam Valley has since been replaced by an official procurement machinery.

8 Orissa—Purchases are made direct from the producers and also in the open market through a number of agents in each of the six districts of the Province. Purchase or sale of rice on private account in quantities exceeding 10 mounds and stocking of more than 100 mounds by anyone having Government Agents is prohibited. Government have fixed prices for rice and paddy payable to producers.

9 Madhya—A Scheme of extensive procurement in respect of rice, paddy, millets and other allied foodgrains is in force in the entire province. Under this scheme the entire surplus of the cultivator is acquired by Government through their Trade Agents after allowing for his annual domestic and seed requirements and for meeting labour and other customary charges in kind. The Provincial Government have formed village taluqa and town committees to assist in the procurement and distribution operations.

In the Malabar District the trade has been completely eliminated and the work of procurement and distribution has been handed over to the Co-operative Societies.

10 Central Provinces—Government are the sole buyers of foodgrains brought to the markets. In the case of Towns there is a form of non-Statutory levy under which the producer is expected to contribute a specific portion of his crop to Government. In the case of wheat a compulsory levy first introduced in 1944 and not continued in 1945, has been reintroduced this year in all the districts of the Jabalpur Division. The levy is applicable to holdings of 10 acres or more.

11 Bombay—There is a compulsory levy on a graded scale with a minimum exemption limit of 2½ mounds per producer which is allowed for domestic and seed requirements for the year. Government are the sole buyers of other surpluses.

12 Baluchistan—There is monopoly purchase by Government.

REMOVAL OF CONTROLS

21. *Pandit Sri Krishna Dutt Pahlwal: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state the steps Government propose to take to remove the various controls? When, and on which articles the control is to be removed?

The Honourable Sri C. Rameswalarachari: Government is earnestly considering the problem. Nothing more definite can be stated at this stage. Statutory Powers of control have to be maintained whatever the actual decisions may ultimately be in regard to various items.

PAYMENT OF SALARIES, ETC., TO WORKERS OF THE POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS DEPARTMENT FOR THE STRIKE PERIOD

22. *Miss Maniben Kara: Will the Honourable Member for Communications please state

(a) whether Government intend paying to the workers of the Posts and Telegraphs Department who were on strike in July 1946, the salaries and allowances due to them for the strike period, if so, when, if not, why not,

(b) whether Government are aware that an assurance to that effect, explicit or by implication, was given to the strikers by the Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel, and

(c) whether Government propose to honour that assurance?

Sir Harold Shoober: (a) No. The period of absence will be treated as leave without pay. The strikers will, however, receive for that period such allowances as they are entitled to under the rules applicable to employees on leave without pay.

(b) No.

(c) Does not arise.

REMOVAL OF CONTROLS ON COMMODITIES OTHER THAN FOODSTUFFS AND PROMOTION OF COOPERATIVE SOCIETIES FOR SUPPLY OF ESSENTIAL COMMODITIES

23. *Miss Maniben Kara: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please refer to his speech before the Oil Seeds Conference on September 26, 1946, and state

(a) whether he made a categorical statement that he was for the abolition of controls over distribution of commodities other than foodstuff, retaining price control;

(b) whether what he stated is the policy of Government,

(c) if it is not the policy of Government, what steps does he propose to take to remove the misunderstanding in the public mind,

(d) whether, in view of the experience during the earlier years of war of futility of making price control effective without control over supplies, Government are aware that this new policy will adversely affect the availability of essential commodities to the public, and

(e) whether as an alternative to unlicensed distribution through normal trade channels he would consider the promotion of co-operative societies as a means of ensuring supplies of essential commodities?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: (a) and (b) The Member for Industries and Supplies expressly made it clear that he was not stating the considered policy of Government to be in favour of de-control as described in the question, but was taking the opportunity of the Conference to encourage thinking on the subject.

(c) No misunderstanding exists in the public mind as all the newspaper comments on the subject show and therefore no question arises as to steps to remove misunderstanding.

(d) and (e) The problems involved are being examined in all aspects and the valuable suggestion in clause (e) of the question will also be taken into consideration.

CULTIVATION OF LAND NEAR SECRETARIAT AND WAR MEMORIAL ARCH,
NEW DELHI

24. *Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture be pleased to state

(a) the number of acres that were brought under cultivation on either side of Kingsway between the Secretariat buildings and the War Memorial Arch in New Delhi since the last session of the Assembly;

- (b) the amounts and sorts of grains that were produced,
- (c) what was done to them; and if sold, the amount of money realised, and
- (d) the amount of expenditure incurred in the undertaking?

Sir Phetose Kharegat: (a) 55 acres were ploughed up, trenched, manured and prepared for cultivation. Due, however, to acute shortage of labour and water, only 25.3 acres were actually cultivated, 14.3 acres being put under maize and 11 acres under vegetables.

(b) 11½ maunds of summer vegetables. The yield of maize is not known as the standing crop was sold.

(c) The crops were sold. The total amount realised up to date is Rs 3,720/14/3. Maize was auctioned as a standing crop for Rs 3,100. The vegetables were sold at site daily to the public up to the 7th June 1946. Thereafter, as the vegetables did not find a good sale at the spot, they were sent to the market for public auction through a commission agent. The income from this source is Rs 620/14/3. An additional income of Rs 56 is expected from the sale of Arvi which will be harvested in about a fortnight.

(d) The total amount of expenditure incurred is Rs 10,173. This includes Rs 3,000 for fencing and Rs 4,815 for preparing 29.7 acres of land which were not brought under cultivation. The expenditure for the 25.3 acres actually brought under cultivation is Rs 2,358.

COMPULSORY PROCURATION OF GRAIN FROM PEASANTS IN UNITED PROVINCES DURING 1945-46

25. *Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Secretary of the Food Department be pleased to state

(a) the amount of grain that was compulsorily procured by the Government of the United Provinces from the peasants in the Province during the financial year 1945-46,

(b) the manner in which the same was disbursed,

(c) the amount that was destroyed and the causes of this destruction, and

(d) the amount of profit that the Government of the United Provinces made in this transaction?

Mr. B. R. Sen: (a) There was no compulsory grain procurement in the U P during the financial year 1945-46.

(b), (c) and (d) Do not arise.

RAILWAY ACCIDENTS AND ENQUIRIES DURING THE YEAR

26. *Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable Member for Communications be pleased to state

(a) the number of major Railway accidents that have occurred since the beginning of the present financial year and the nature of the enquiries that have been instituted in each case,

(b) the results of such enquiries, and

(c) the steps that have been taken for the prevention of further accidents of this nature?

Sir Harold Shoober: (a) 14 major accidents, in which passenger carrying trains were involved, occurred on all the Indian Railways during the period from 1st April, 1946, to the beginning of October, 1946. Enquiries into all such accidents by the Government Inspectors of Railways were obligatory. These were independent of the railway and magisterial enquiries.

(b) and (c) Seven of the 14 accidents occurred in the latter part of the year and their reports are not yet ready. I place on the table of the House statement showing the results of the enquiries completed and steps taken for the prevention of further accidents of the nature investigated.

Statement.

The causes of the accidents into which the Inspector's enquiries are completed

(1) Failure by the railway staff to observe rules framed for the safe working of the railways—4

(2) Defective track—1 (N W R)

(3) Accident fire—1 (G I P Railway)

(4) Sabotage—1 (B B & C I)

(2) Steps taken to prevent further accidents

The Railway Inspectorate makes recommendations intended to prevent a recurrence of similar accidents, to the Railway Department who give effect to these if they are in agreement with them. Following recommendations were made in connection with the seven accidents of which the Reports have been received from the Government Inspectors—

(i) Adoption of "System of Automatic Train Stops" on Indian Railways. The Railway Board have already appointed an ad hoc Committee to enquire into the various system and to recommend the one suitable to the Indian Railways. This Committee has already submitted an interim report about the middle of September, 1946

(ii) Adoption of electrical warning devices to the gatemen and protecting the level crossing with signals

(iii) Adoption of certain measures to prevent bucking of track

(iv) Fitting passenger locomotives with spark arrestors, where possible use of A grade Bengal coal for passenger trains use of non inflammable material for cushions, etc., and provision of ash-trays in upper class compartments

(v) Patrolling of the railway line which, in the opinion of the civil authorities and the Police, are likely to be tampered with

REFURNISHING OF COMPARTMENTS ON RAILWAY TRAINS

27. *Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state

(a) whether Government are aware of the unsatisfactory condition of all classes of compartments in Railways,

(b) what steps, if any are being taken to repair and re-furnish them and to put back all the fittings in the matter of lights, fans, pegs, racks, etc., that have been destroyed or stolen, and

(c) by what time he expects the Railway compartments will again be in their normal condition?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) Yes Government have received complaints from time to time about the unsatisfactory internal condition of some of the passenger stock

(b) Every effort is made by railways to ensure that stock is maintained fully equipped but the supply of fittings cannot be considered normal and railway workshops are and will continue to be for sometime, occupied with repairs to their maximum capacity

(c) The intensity of use to which the present stock is subjected is consequent, to some degree, on the withdrawal for use by the Military Department, of a considerable number of vehicles. As releases are effected by that Department, it will enable more thorough repairs to be undertaken to vehicles now in service for the travelling public

RENOVATION OF DUFFRIN RAILWAY BRIDGE AT BENARES

28 *Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state

(a) the progress that has so far been made in the renovation of the Duffrin Bridge at Benares,

(b) the approximate date by which he expects the bridge to be ready and an approximate estimate of the total cost,

(c) the arrangements made or intended to be made for the passage of vehicles and pedestrians across the river Ganga when the Pontoon Bridge is not working due to monsoons, and

(d) whether Government are aware of the great discomfort felt during the recent months when all pedestrian and vehicular traffic over the bridge had been suspended and adequate arrangements were not made for their passage in any other way, if so, what steps he intends to take to obviate such difficulties in the future?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) The first main span has been launched together with three of the secondary spans. The second main span is on the launching ways. The progress to date could be assessed at 20 per cent of the total.

(b) The work is expected to be completed by February, 1949. The total cost of regendering is expected to be about Rs 83 lakhs.

(c) A steam ferry under the control of the U.P. Government operates from 16th June to 14th December when the pontoon bridge is removed. Government's information is that all traffic wheeled and pedestrian—is handled without undue delay by the ferry service.

(d) The attention of Government has been called from time to time to the inconvenience caused by the above arrangement. It is understood, however, that the arrangements now made are adequate.

EFFECT OF COMMUNAL DISTURBANCES IN BENGAL ON RAILWAY ACTIVITIES

29. *Mr. K. O. Neogy: (a) Will the Honorable the Railway Member be pleased to make a short statement, indicating how the activities of the Railways were affected on and from the 16th August, 1946, as a result of communal disturbances in some areas of Bengal?

(b) Has any property belonging to the Railway Department or any article handled by it been damaged or lost anywhere in Bengal as a result of communal disturbances since the 16th August last? If so, what is the nature and extent of such damage or loss? Has there been any casualty among the employees of the Railway Department, or among Railway passengers while travelling, or while within the limits of Railway lands, in any part of Bengal as a result of the said communal disturbances?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) On the B.A. Railway, in the Calcutta Area, passenger as well as goods train services were seriously affected. The supply of foodstuffs, vegetables, etc., was practically at a standstill from the 16th to the 20th August 1946. Work in the B.A. Railway Administrative Offices also suffered seriously, as the staff could not attend office owing to lack of convenience and the fear of being assaulted. In the Chittagong Area, a number of trains had to be cancelled on the 16th August. On the 17th August, there were several casualties amongst the staff in Chittagong. On the 29th August, Fozdarhat Station was attacked by a mob who looted the quarters of the staff. In the Dacca Area, there was only one case of injury to railway staff. On the 25th August, at Bahadurabad Ghat Station, the work was suspended for the night owing to a mob of about 200 men assembling near the station.

On the B.N. Railway, on the 16th August, morning services between Khargpur and Howrah suffered detentions for periods varying between half-an-hour and one hour. The work at Shalimar and Shalimar Yard also suffered seriously and owing to fear of disturbances, the staff failed to turn up for duty. Consequently the booking of all goods traffic to the Shalimar Goods Shed and Sidings served by the Shalimar Yard was stopped. There was a serious dislocation of the services in the Howrah area on the 21st owing to Cabinmen and Yard Staff at Santagachi remaining away from their duties. A number of local trains had to be cancelled and special arrangements had to be made to feed the train staff at Howrah.

On the E.I. Railway some local trains from 17th August to 19th August 1946, two Parcel Express trains ex-Howrah on the 18th, trains on the Calcutta Chord Railway and all workmen's trains for Lillooah Workshops on the 17th were cancelled. During the period 16th August to 9th September the Up and Down Delhi Express trains were started from and terminated at Howrah, instead of Scaldah. 16 special trains were run from the 20th to the 25th August 1946 to cope with the heavy exodus of up-country inhabitants from Calcutta.

(b) On the B A Railway, staff quarters at Bahadurabad Ghat were looted on the 25th August. The Parcel Sheds and some wagons loaded with parcels were looted at Sealdah Station between the 17th and 19th August 1946. The loss is estimated at approximately three lakhs of rupees.

Particulars of the public injured while travelling in trains or while within railway premises are not available. Amongst the railway staff, the number of persons—

Killed is	7
Missing is	17
Whose belongings have been destroyed or looted	939

On the B N Railway the Lost Property Office at Ramrajatala was broken open on the 20th August and articles to the value of Rs 491 were stolen. A few consignments were pilfered from Shalimar Goods Shed during the period 16th August to 26th August and the value of the articles is not yet known.

Three persons are reported to be missing from Shalimar Marine staff. Only one report was received of injuries to a passenger. A Muslim travelling in a local tram was found dead at Ramrajatala on the 20th August, but it is not known whether he was a passenger or an assailant.

On the E I Railway, there were no reports of damage to railway property. The loss of merchandise due to the consignments not being taken delivery of is estimated at about Rs 50,000. 100 consignments of perishable and luggage valued at Rs 12,000 were stolen.

The casualties within the railway premises between the 18th and 20th August were five killed and six injured. It has not yet been determined whether any of these were railway employees or not. One railway employee of Bamagachhi Shed was reported killed in the Police firing on the 18th August and another of the same Shed was reported missing from the 16th August.

STRENGTH OF THE RAILWAY POLICE IN THE METRE GAUGE SECTION OF BENGAL ASSAM RAILWAY

30. *Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state what special precautions were taken by the Railway Police during the recent communal disturbances in Bengal for the purpose of protecting railway property and passengers, as also ensuring regular running of train services?

(b) What is the normal organisation and strength of the Railway Police allotted for service in the Metre Gauge sections of the Bengal Assam Railway, particularly those Sections that serve the districts of Dacca, Mymensingh and Tipperah? Was the Railway Police re-inforced in these Sections by the Police authorities of the Province? If so, in what manner, from which date and in which Sections? Is the Honourable Member satisfied that the Police arrangements made during these days have been adequate for all practical purposes?

(c) Will the Honourable Member be pleased to lay on the table any correspondence that may have taken place between any responsible officer of the Bengal Assam Railway and the Provincial Government or any of its officers on the subject mentioned in part (b) above?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali. (a) On the B A Railway in the Calcutta Area, the Railway Police were strengthened with armed police but the force was insufficient to guard the whole of the Sealdah area. They however were instrumental in saving the Sealdah Railway Station from being attacked. It was not possible for the Police authorities to give such adequate aid as would ensure regular running of the train service as the men at their disposal were not sufficient to man every train that was run. The Superintendent of Railway Police did all in his power to help whenever he was approached with urgent requests for assistance from any points outside Calcutta.

In the Chittagong Area, the Superintendent of Police was unable to provide armed guards to protect the Chittagong Railway Colony Pahartali area etc., but he arranged for Police patrols to visit the affected areas periodically. The District Magistrate imposed a curfew.

In the Dacca Area, armed Government Railway Police patrolled the station premises and yard at night. Armed guards have been travelling on each train between Dacca and Narayanganj since September and with effect from 3rd October, 300 men of the Indian Pioneer Force have been detailed for the protection of the Railway premises.

On the B N Railway, the Railway Police responded promptly to requests for additional police protection at stations until their limited resources were completely absorbed in duties connected with the protection of stations, staff quarters and trains. The Superintendent of Railway Police Howrah, was able to provide additional guards at Shalimar and Santiagachi with the Military detachments placed under his command. This action combined with a reinforcement of the Gurkha Railway Watch and Ward staff, was in a considerable measure responsible for the restoration of normal conditions in these localities.

On the E I Railway the Government Railway Police deputed extra staff from the 16th to 23rd August at Lalooah, Behur, Bally and Serampore Stations. At each of these stations one Sub-Inspector of Police and a few Constables (number ranging from 3 to 10) were posted as additional protection. No extra force of Railway Police was deputed at Howrah, but the whole of the force off duty were kept standing by from the 16th to 23rd August. Armed men of the Howrah District Police were also posted at Behur and other points. The number of the Railway Protection Force armed with lathies only in the affected area was about 100 at the beginning of the trouble, but was increased to about 250 by calling in detachments from outside stations.

(b) The normal strength of Railway Police allotted to the metre gauge section of the B A Railway including the sections serving the Districts of Dacca, Mymensingh and Tipperah is—

Superintendent of Police	1
Inspectors	4
Sub-Inspectors	18
Assistant Sub-Inspectors	21
Sergeants	3
Head Constables	25
Constables	112
Others	4

Government are informed that the Government of Bengal have taken steps to protect the metre gauge section of the line in Dacca, Mymensingh and Tipperah Districts and also to ensure the safe running of trains by the deputation of a number of armed police. With regard to the last part, Railway Police force is considered adequate for normal times, but is not sufficient to meet with an emergency such as the one that arose in Calcutta in August last. This question is however receiving further consideration of Government.

(c) Government do not consider that public interest will be served by placing the correspondence on the table of the House as requested by the Honourable Member.

LAWLESSNESS ON THE DACCА, MYMENSINGH AND TIPPERAH SECTIONS OF BENGAL ASSAM RAILWAY

31. Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state whether Government are aware that certain portions of the Meter Gauge Section of the Bengal Assam Railway serving the districts of Dacca, Mymensingh and Tipperah, experienced, during the last few months, frequent acts of lawlessness, such as theft, loot, assault on passengers and kidnapping of women from trains? If so, will the Honourable Member please lay a detailed statement on the table of the House about the various incidents that took place during the last twelve months or so, giving dates? What complaints were received in this matter from time to time by the Railway authorities in Bengal and at Delhi, and what action was taken, and when, to deal with the situation?

(b) Was adequate action, both at the instance of the Railway Police and the Railway staff, taken in time for the purpose of preventing a recurrence of such occurrences and bringing the offenders to book? In how many such instances have the culprits been apprehended and put on trial, and with what result?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) The reply to the first part of the question is in the affirmative. A detailed statement of the incidents that took place during the last 12 months, together with full information regarding complaints received and action taken on them by the B. A. Railway has been called for and will be laid on the table of the House in due course. No public complaints were received in the Railway Board's office but from early this year, they received from the General Manager, B. A. Railway, periodical reports of acts of hooliganism and lawlessness as a result of which considerable damage was caused to Railway property, running of trains was adversely affected, and Railway staff assaulted. The position was so bad that the General Manager considered it necessary to suggest that the Railway should have Armed Guards in the area near Bhanab Bazaar and that for this purpose, General Headquarters (India) should be moved to authorise the retention of 200 armed personnel of the Railway Protection Company. The suggestion, however, could not be accepted as it is illegal for Railway administrations to maintain an armed force in time of peace and it is the responsibility of the Provincial Government to afford such protection. The Bengal Government were continually asked by the Railway Administration to take preventive action immediately but as there was no tangible improvement, night running of trains on the affected sections was stopped on 20th September, 1946. On 26th September, 1946 the Administration reported that the Bengal Government had arranged for a posse of armed police to be stationed at Bhanab Bazaar for the manning of Patrol trains and providing armed escorts on trains when necessary. With effect from 1st October 1946 night running of all trains was resumed on the Chandpur Laksam Section, and to a limited extent on the other sections affected. The question of temporarily increasing the strength of the Railway Police to meet the emergency is under the active consideration of Government.

(b) I am satisfied that all action that could be taken by the Railway Administration for the protection of train services in the affected area was taken in time. The Bengal Government are responsible for the maintenance of Law and Order and prevention of crime. As regards the latter part of the question, information has been called for and will be laid on the table of the House in due course.

EFFECT ON THE ACTIVITIES OF POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS DEPARTMENT AS A RESULT OF COMMUNAL DISTURBANCES IN PROVINCES

32. *Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Communications please lay a statement on the table of the House indicating how the activities of the Posts and Telegraphs Department have been affected since the 16th August, 1946, as a result of communal disturbances in each Province and local area affected?

(b) Has any property belonging to the Posts and Telegraphs Department or any article handled by its employees been damaged or lost anywhere as a result of communal disturbances since 16th August last? If so, what is the nature and extent of such damage or loss?

(c) Has there been any casualty among the employees of the Department in any part of the country as a result of the said communal disturbances?

(d) What is the normal understanding between the Department and the Provincial authorities in the matter of affording police and other necessary protection to premises of the Department and its staff as well as postal articles in transit (i) in ordinary circumstances and (ii) when any disturbances of the public peace take place?

(e) Has all necessary protection been afforded by the Provincial authorities in each place affected by the aforesaid communal disturbances?

(f) With reference to those Circles where the Postal employees were organised on a military basis during the war, has the question of resumption of militarisation of the departmental staff been under consideration, or is likely to be taken up for consideration, in order to meet any emergent situation that may prevail in such Circles or parts thereof due to communal disturbances or otherwise, as a measure of protection to the Department?

Sir Harold Shobert: (a) to (c) and (e) Information is being collected and will be placed on the table of the House in due course.

(d) Arrangements exist between the Posts and Telegraphs Department and the Provincial Governments for affording police and other protection both under ordinary circumstances and in time of disturbances wherever necessary.

(f) No.

EFFECT OF COMMUNAL DISTURBANCES ON THE WORKING OF CALCUTTA TELEPHONE SYSTEM

33. *Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Communications be pleased to make a statement indicating how the working of the telephone system in the City of Calcutta and its suburbs was affected since the outbreak of communal disturbances on the 16th August last?

(b) Did the situation on the 16th and subsequent days necessitate a curtailment of the services in different exchanges? If so, what was the nature of the curtailment in the case of each affected Exchange, and was any instruction or suggestion, as regards the method and extent of such curtailment received from any official of the Provincial Government?

(c) Is it the usual practice or understanding that, in the event of telephone services having to be "rationed" due to any emergent circumstances, the Provincial Government or its officers will be consulted as regards the services that have to be maintained and services that may be discontinued?

(d) What principles were followed in any such rationing of telephone services in the city and suburbs of Calcutta during the week beginning from the 16th August, 1946, in the case of each Exchange?

Sir Harold Shobert: (a) and (b) A statement is laid on the table of the House.

(c) and (d) No. The Department tries to maintain telephone services of essential subscribers only in emergent circumstances. The lists of essential subscribers maintained by the Department are prepared in consultation with the Provincial Governments. The list for Calcutta was actually compiled at the beginning of the year in consultation with not only the Provincial Government, but the Calcutta Corporation, the Chambers of Commerce and the Railways.

Statement

(a) and (b) The telephone connections of only those subscribers who administered Essential Services were kept alive in the various exchanges as shown below. Other connections could not be worked during these periods for want of operating and technical staff --

RESUMPTION OF NORMAL FUNCTIONS OF THE POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS DEPARTMENT SINCE THE SETTLEMENT OF STRIKE

34. *Mr. K. O. Neogy: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Communications be pleased to lay a detailed statement on the table of the House, indicating Province by Province the time when normal functioning of the Posts and Telegraphs Department was fully resumed in all aspects of its activity, since the settlement of the Postal strike?

(b) Is the Honourable Member aware that considerable delays are even now taking place in the transmission of letters and other postal articles from place to place in different areas? Have complaints been received by the Postal authorities on this subject, and if so, what action is proposed to be taken for avoiding such delays?

(c) Is the Honourable Member aware that telegrams received at the Central Telegraph Office in Calcutta are being delivered through the town Post Offices in the same manner as letters, no acknowledgment of receipt thereof being required and that as a consequence considerable interval, amounting to several days in some cases, elapses between the receipt of a telegram at the Central Telegraph Office Calcutta, and its actual delivery to the addressee?

Sir Harold Shoober: (a) and (c) The required information is being collected and will be placed on the table of the House in due course.

(b) The Government of India have no information but Heads of Circles have been addressed, and instructed to submit reports.

EFFICIENCY IN THE BENGAL TELEPHONE SERVICE

35. *Mr. Debendra Lal Khan: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Communications please state who are the present Manager and the Supervising Engineer in the Bengal Telephone Service?

(b) Are they the same officers who were serving under the Rangoon Telephone Service before the fall of that city?

(c) Have they got sufficient knowledge and efficiency to run the Calcutta Telephone Service where the number of Telephone lines is much larger than at Rangoon?

(d) Is it not a fact that they were provided with the posts as temporary officers, subject to the condition that their services would be dispensed with after the end of the war?

(e) Is the Honourable Member aware of the fact that since the Bengal Telephone Corporation had been taken over by Government, the efficiency of the Department has been considerably undermined?

Sir Harold Shoober: (a) Apparently the Honourable Member is referring to the General Manager and the Superintending Engineer of the Calcutta Telephone District. Mr. McGee is the General Manager and Mr. J. T. Duncan is the Superintending Engineer of that District at present.

(b) Yes

(c) Yes

(d) No

(e) The fall in efficiency is the result of the abnormal conditions created by the war and not due to the taking over of the system by the Government.

FAILURE OF TELEPHONE SERVICE IN CALCUTTA DURING THE COMMUNAL DISTURBANCES

(a) whether Government are aware of the fact that the Telephone Service at Calcutta had been completely paralysed on the 16th August and subsequent few days,

(b) the reason behind the complete collapse of the Telephone Service when it was possible to run the other essential services like the Electric and Water Supply Corporations,

(c) was any help sought from the Government of Bengal to maintain the service intact during the riot, and

(d) will the Honourable Member enquire into the authenticity of the Departmental note published by the Department concerned immediately after the incident, for explaining the complete failure of the Telephone system?

Sir Harold Shoobert: (a) No The service was not completely paralysed The essential telephones were maintained

(b) The dislocation was due to the mobility of the operating and other staff, to report for duty

(c) Yes, help was sought for the protection of the exchange buildings and installations and for escorts for staff Military guards and transport facilities were made available from Saturday, the 17th August

(d) The Press Note was based on the facts reported to the Government of India, who have no reason to doubt their authenticity

37. *Sree Satyapriya Banerjee: Will the Secretary of the Food Department be pleased to state

(a) the system of procurement of foodgrains followed by the various Provincial Governments and the amounts procured in the different Provinces thereunder since 1942-43 and the ratio they bear to the total production of foodgrains,

(b) how the system of procurement in Bengal has been working, and

(c) whether the system obtaining in Bengal has succeeded in procuring only a very small portion of the available rice in the Province, and if so, whether Government contemplate any change in the system of procurement of rice in that Province?

Mr. B. R. Sen: (a) Statements are placed on the table

(b) and (c) The system of procurement in Bengal has not been found to be fully satisfactory and is in the process of modification in order to be made more effective

Procurement Arrangements in various Provinces

Punjab—The Punjab Government have now introduced a system of monopoly procurement of wheat. The essential features of the scheme are as follows—

(a) Operations relating to purchase of wheat in nearly 500 mandis of the Province will be completely controlled by Government. All the pucca Atyias of a mand, or such of them who are willing to join, will be constituted into a Pucca Atyias Association, and while the producers will be free to choose their Khatia Atyias the purchases will only be made by this Association.

(b) All wheat purchased by the Atyias Association will be disposed of only under the orders of Government.

(c) The purchases will be made at a price fixed for each mand, subject to quality allowances. Except in villages within 3 miles of the mand this price will be 0.40 acries higher and for those coming within 1 to 3 miles it will be 0.66 acries less. This should have the effect of encouraging movement toward the mandis.

(d) The Atyias Association will get a commission of Rs. 12 per Rs. 100 of the value of grain and gunny bags supplied.

(e) Sale of wheat by growers in villages except for the requirements of the village, or to a consumer in a neighbouring village upto 20 seers at a time is prohibited.

(f) Movement of wheat by rail and road is prohibited except between village and market or under Government permit from the market to the recipient areas.

The Punjab Government have also recently introduced a system of monopoly procurement of rice in the rice producing areas of the province. These have been called "controlled areas." The essential features of the scheme are as follows—

(i) The rice mill will be the centre of procurement operations as all rice (except for small quantities of hand pounded rice for domestic consumption) must inevitably pass through a mill. All rice produced at a mill will be disposed of only under the orders of Government.

(ii) Minimum prices have been fixed for all varieties of paddy in the controlled areas to ensure a fair return to the producers.

(iii) Maximum prices of each variety of paddy have been fixed for both the controlled and the uncontrolled areas.

(iv) Maximum ex-mill prices of various varieties of rice have also been fixed.

(v) The movement of rice and paddy in and from control areas will be controlled generally as in the case of wheat.

2 N.W.F.P.—Till recently, procurement was done through private trade under Government supervision and the requirements of deficit districts were supplied from surplus districts through normal trade channels. In 1945, a Wheat Procurement Order was promulgated which prohibited the sale or transfer of wheat by one person to another without authority from the Provincial Government, transactions of less than 20 maunds with the grower direct being excepted. For the current Rabi crop the N.W.F.P. Government have imposed a compulsory levy on holdings of 50 acres or more. The assessment on un-irrigated land is at a flat rate of two maunds per acre. A higher assessment is to be made on irrigated land.

3 Sind—With effect from the 15th May, 1946, the Sind Government have promulgated an order titled the "The Wheat and Grain Procurement Order" under which a Purchasing Officer may order that a wholesale dealer in any area shall not, except to the extent permitted by that Officer, sell wheat or grain to any person other than a Government Agent. The Order further prohibits the retailers in non-rationalised areas from selling wheat or grain in one transaction to any person in a quantity exceeding 20 seers at a time.

The system of procurement of rice has recently been changed. Under the Sind Rice Procurement Order (1946), Rice Mills cannot dispose of the rice produced by them except in accordance with the directions issued by authorised Government Officers. Movement by rail or river is controlled.

4 United Provinces—Till lately, the system of procurement was dependent on purchase of grain coming to the markets. From the current year a direct procurement scheme for Rabi has been introduced. Small producers whose outturn of Rabi crops is less than 10 maunds or whose total annual production is less than 20 maunds have been excepted. The Provincial Government's target has been distributed among the surplus districts according to the surplus estimated to be available in each. The district demand is then broken up among homogeneous tracts and within these tracts individual assessments are made after taking into consideration the average production per acre in the tract. Committees of peoples' representatives are to be closely associated with procurement at every stage.

5 Bihar—Purchases (subject to the limits of approved prices) are made by Government officers through accredited Agents chosen from the trade. In addition, a compulsory levy on paddy has recently been imposed which prohibits a producer holding 100 acres or more from disposing of any paddy exceeding $\frac{1}{4}$ of his total produce. Individual assessments are made. Government may not, however, demand more than half the total produce if it is less than 1,000 maunds and more than $\frac{2}{3}$ of the total produce in any case. The Bihar Levy Order has since been extended to wheat.

8 Bengal—Purchases are made direct by Government Officers in certain districts and through Trade Agents called Chukl Purchasing Agents in others. All rice mills producing more than 50 maunds rice daily are required to sell their produce to Government. Rice and paddy can move only on Government account by rail or river. The Provincial Government have recently resorted also to requisitioning of stocks with the larger holders at their discretion.

7 Assam—Purchases in the Surma Valley are made direct by Government Officers on a tender system. The single trade agency which used to operate in the Assam Valley has since been replaced by an official procurement machinery.

3 Orissa—Purchases are made direct from the producers and also in the open market through a number of agents in each of the six districts of the Province. Purchase or sale of rice on private account in quantities exceeding 10 maunds and stocking of more than 100 maunds by anyone having Government Agents is prohibited. Government have fixed prices for rice and paddy payable to producers.

9 Madræs—A Scheme of intensive procurement in respect of rice, paddy, millets and other allied foodgrains is in force in the entire province. Under this scheme the entire surplus of the cultivator is acquired by Government through their Trade Agents after allowing for his annual domestic and seed requirements and for moving labour and other customary charges in kind. The Provincial Government have formed village, taluqa and town committees to assist in the procurement and distribution operations.

In the Malabar District the trade has been completely eliminated and the work of procurement and distribution has been handed over to the Co-operative Societies.

10 Central Provinces—Government are the sole buyers of foodgrains brought to the markets. In the case of Jowar there is a form of non-statutory levy under which the producer is expected to contribute a specific portion of his crop to Government. In the case of wheat a compulsory levy first introduced in 1944 and not continued in 1945 has been reintroduced this year in all the districts of the Jubbulpore Division. The levy is applicable to holdings of 10 acres or more.

11 Bombay—There is a compulsory levy on a graded scale with a minimum exemption limit of 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ maunds per producer which is allowed for domestic and seed requirements for the year. Government are the sole buyers of other surpluses.

12 Baluchistan—There is monopoly purchase by Government.

EXTENSION OF RAILWAY LINE FROM JUBBULPORE TO NAGPUR

39. *Seth Govind Das: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state

(a) whether a preliminary or regular survey for laying a broad gauge Railway line from Jubbulpore to Nagpur (via Seoni) was made during 1910-11 or at any time thereafter;

(b) if so, whether the Reports of the surveys will be placed in the Library of the House,

(c) whether it is a fact that the aforesaid extension was included in the post-war development plans or programmes and a map showing the proposed line as a part of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway extension project was published by the Government of India, and

(d) if so, whether a copy of the said map will be placed in the Library of the House?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) According to the information available, neither a preliminary nor a regular survey for constructing a Broad Gauge line from Jubbulpore to Nagpur via Seoni was made in 1910-11, or at any time thereafter. An estimate for a Traffic and Engineering survey for this line, amounting to Rs 77,000 was, however, prepared in 1927, and the C P Government were asked to bear the cost, but they declined to do so stating that they did not consider the prospects of the line warranted the outlay. In 1945, the Provincial Industries Committee Central Provinces and Berar recommended the construction of this line and the matter was referred to the G I P and B N Railways, and both of them considered that the line would be expensive and unremunerative. As the Local Government also did not ask for this line to be included in the post-war plan of railways, the matter was dropped.

(b) In the circumstances explained in part (a) of the question, no survey was carried out and therefore no reports are available.

(c) and (d) Since the Local Government have not asked for this line to be included in the post-war plan of railways, the project has not been included in the post-war development programme and as such no map showing the proposed line as a part of G I P Railway has been published by the Government.

EXTENSION OF RAILWAY LINE FROM JUBBULPORE TO NAGPUR

40. *Seth Govind Das: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state the reasons, in detail, on account of which the Railway extension referred to in the preceding question instead of being taken up was given up?

(b) Do Government propose to take up the extension now, as it has been recommended by the Central Provinces and Berar Industries Committee, 1946, the Report of which has been accepted by the local Government in question?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) The position has been fully explained in part (a) of the preceding question.

(b) Government would give prompt and due consideration to the investigation of this line if recommended by the Local Government, who have so far not asked for this line to be included in the post-war plan of railways.

PERCENTAGE OF EMPLOYEES IN BENGAL-NAGPUR RAILWAY FROM MADRAS, BENGAL AND ORISSA

41. *Seth Govind Das: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state how many miles the Bengal-Nagpur Railway runs in the Central Provinces, and how many miles it runs in the Provinces of Madras, Bengal, and Orissa?

(b) What is the income to the Bengal-Nagpur Railway from each of these Provinces?

(c) What is the percentage of employees from each of these Provinces in Officers' rank, Inspectors' rank, Upper and Lower subordinate services?

(d) Is any quota fixed for the people of any Province?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) I lay on the table a statement giving the required information

(b) Government are unable to give the information as statistics are not maintained showing the income to a railway from each Province

(c) Staff Statistics also are not maintained by Provinces and, therefore, the information required by the Honourable Member is not available with Government

(d) No Recruitment to Railway Services is not made on a territorial basis

PROMOTION IN BENGAL NAGPUR RAILWAY

42. *Seth Govind Das: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state:

(a) the criterion for promotion in the Bengal-Nagpur Railway,

(b) whether Government are aware that academical qualifications are a disqualification in the Bengal Nagpur Railway, and

(c) the reason why fresh recruits are given preference over more qualified permanent employees of the Railway and why fresh graduates are appointed as Yard apprentices and fresh law-graduates as Claims Inspectors and Labour Inspectors, over the head of many law-graduates already serving the Railway who have much better knowledge of the Railway than the new recruits?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) The Bengal Nagpur Railway follow the rules regarding promotion prescribed in Appendix II-A to the State Railway Establishment Code, Vol I, as amended by Correction Slip No N566. A copy of the rules will be found in the Library of the House. Briefly, the principle is that promotion to non-selection posts is made in order of seniority, the senior man being superseded only if he has been declared unfit for such promotion. Promotion to selection posts is made on the basis primarily of merit, due consideration being given to seniority

(b) Government are informed that this is not so

(c) I have called for the facts and will lay a statement on the table of the House in due course

PROMOTION IN BENGAL NAGPUR RAILWAY

43. *Seth Govind Das: Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state why the Bengal Nagpur Railway does not adopt a uniform policy regarding all promotions by holding competitive examinations through competent authorities to be constituted for the purpose?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: As I have just stated in my reply to part (a) of Question No 42, the Bengal Nagpur Railway follow the rules regarding promotion prescribed in Appendix II-A to the State Railway Establishment Code, Vol I, as amended by Correction Slip No N566. A copy of the rules will be found in the Library of the House. Government do not consider that competitive examinations are suitable for the purpose of regulating promotions in non-gazetted railway services

FOOD SITUATION IN INDIA

44. *Mr. Madandhari Singh: Will the Secretary of the Food Department be pleased to lay on the table of the House a statement regarding the food situation in the country and the measures that have been taken or are proposed to be taken to cope with it?

Mr. B. R. Sen: The Honourable Member is referred to the Memorandum on Food Position laid on the table of the House †

ENQUIRY INTO THE CO-OPERATIVE MOVEMENT IN INDIA

45. *Sree Satyapriya Banerjee: Will the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture be pleased to state

(a) whether there has been any enquiry by Government into the Co-operative movement in India since the MacLagon Committee published its report on Co-operation, and

(b) whether the Government of India propose to co-ordinate the Co-operative movements in different Provinces, if so, whether the Government of India propose for this purpose, to enquire into the condition of the Co-operative movement in the country and take necessary action thereafter?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: (a) A number of enquiries into the working of the Co-operative movement in the different provinces have been held by the Provincial Governments concerned. The subject was also dealt with by the Royal Commission on Agriculture and by the Central Banking Enquiry Committee. A Committee, under the Chairmanship of Mr R. G. Saraya, was appointed by the Government of India in January 1945 to draw up a plan of Co-operative Development. The report of this Committee is expected to be published shortly.

(b) With a view to co-ordinate the Co-operative movements in different Provinces, Conferences of Registrars of Co-operative Societies and non official workers have been convened by the Government of India periodically in the past. It is proposed to hold such a Conference early next year to consider the recommendations of the Saraya Committee which was set up on the recommendation of the 14th Conference of Registrars of Co-operative Societies. The question of setting up a Central Co-ordinating body will be considered by the Government of India after the Conference has examined the recommendation of the Saraya Committee in this respect.

(b) whether his attention has been drawn to the reports in the Press of deaths from starvation,

(c) the steps taken so far by Government to control the price, supply and distribution of food-stuff, specially in Bengal,

(d) the quantity of import of food-grains from foreign countries during the last six months, the names of those countries and their quantities, and

(e) the quantity of export, if any, of foodgrains from India to other countries?

Mr. B. R. Sen: (i) Yes Sir

(b) Yes Sir but no authentic reports of deaths from starvation have been received from any of the districts

(c) Government stocks are being sent to the deficit districts where prices are high and distributed at controlled rates under a system of modified rationing

(d) A statement is laid on the table of the House

The Honourable Mr M Asaf Ali (a) Government are informed that the Divisional Accounts Officer Karachi called for a list of clerks who although being in Government employment were attending colleges as regular students

(b) The Divisional Accounts Officer warned them that their continuance as regular students of a college particularly when on occasions they had to attend classes during office hours would interfere with their official duties

(c) Does not arise I would however invite the Honourable Member's attention to Rule 2004 of the State Railway Establishment Code a copy of which is in the Library of the House According to this rule the whole time of a railway servant is at the disposal of Government

(d) In view of my reply to part (b) above this does not arise

SEPARATE SERVICE FOR TRANSIT CLERKS AND VAN SORTERS ON N W RAILWAY

2 Seth Sukhdev (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state whether it was proposed to have on the North Western Railway a separate service for Transit Clerks and Van Sorters? If so has this proposal materialised?

(b) What were the main features of this proposal? Are Goods Markers likely to be promoted as Transit Clerks or Van Sorters under the scheme? What other channel of promotion has been laid down for them?

(c) If no channel of promotion exists for non-Matriculate Goods Markers, is it proposed to promote them in the Transit Clerks Branch?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) There was no proposal to have a separate service for Transit Clerks and Van Sorters on the M.W. Railway. It was, however, proposed to have a separate cadre for Transit Clerks as distinct from Goods Clerks, but the proposal did not materialise.

(b) The main feature of the proposal was to have separate cadres for Goods and Transit Clerks due to the fact that, Transit duties being unpopular, Goods Clerks evaded performing such duties on one pretext or the other when posted to the work. The question of opportunities for promotion of Goods Markers as Transit Clerks or Van Sorters did not arise in this scheme.

As regards the last part of the question, there is no regular channel of promotion for Goods Markers, but if any of them is a Matriculate and fulfils certain conditions regarding service and age and is also considered fit by his Divisional Superintendent to undergo the requisite course of training, he is allowed to qualify as a Commercial Clerk (which term includes Transit Clerk, Goods Clerk and Parcel Clerk), through the Railway Service Commission and the Walton Training School, after which he is eligible to be posted as a Commercial Clerk.

(c) As Transit duty forms part of the duties of Goods Clerks and Parcel Clerks, Transit Clerks are drawn from among qualified persons in these two categories. Goods Markers who are not so qualified are not eligible for appointment to the grade of Transit Clerks.

3. Pandit Sri Krishna Dutt Paliwal: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state if Government intend to construct a Central Station at Agra? If so, when and where?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: The Railways concerned have under consideration the construction of a Central Station at Agra. As the matter is still in its very early stages, it cannot be stated definitely whether a new station will ultimately be constructed and, if so, when and where.

CONSTITUTION OF INDEPENDENT BAR COUNCIL

4. Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable the Law Member be pleased to state whether Government are considering taking steps for the constitution of an independent Bar Council for dealing with all classes of lawyers (barristers, advocates, vakils, pleaders, muktears, etc.) on one common and uniform basis?

Sir George Spence: This question is not at the moment under the consideration of Government who however understand that the All-India Bar Councils Conference has set up a committee to consider and draft relevant amendments to the Bar Councils Act. Government presume that a copy of the committee's report will be furnished to them and in that event it will receive their careful consideration.

OVER-BRIDGE ON THE AGRA JOGNER ROAD CROSSING OF AGRA CANTONMENT RAILWAY STATION ON THE G I P RAILWAY

5. Pandit Sri Krishna Dutt Paliwal: Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state if Government intend to remove the longstanding grievances of the Agra public by constructing an over-bridge on the Agra-Jogner road crossing of the Agra Cantonment Railway Station on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway? If so, when? If not, why not?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: The proposal to construct a Central Station at Agra, which is being examined by the Railways concerned, will ultimately affect the decision whether an overbridge should be constructed on the Agra-Jogner road crossing near Agra Cantonment railway station. Till a decision is reached on the former issue, it cannot be decided whether an overbridge will be necessary.

ABSENCE OF RAILWAY IN HAMIRPUR DISTRICT OF THE UNITED PROVINCES

6. Pandit Sri Krishna Dutt Paliwal: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state

(a) whether Govt. are aware that there is no Railway line in the Hamirpur District of the United Provinces,

(b) whether Govt. are aware that if a small line about twenty miles long from Harpalpore to Rath is constructed, it will go a long way to meet the demand of the Hamirpur public,

(c) whether Govt. are aware that there is no river or rivulet in the above twenty mile long patch, and

(d) whether Government propose to consider the advisability of constructing this line, if so, when?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) Yes, except that a portion of the Candupore-Kharanda line, which is being restored, will pass through this area

(b) There has been no demand either from the public or the Provincial Government for a railway line from Harpalpore to Rath.

(c) It appears from the Survey Map that there are some rivulets in the area

(d) Government would first like to receive the views of the United Provinces Government

PLATFORMS OF THE KHARAGPUR STATION AND DEFECTIVE ROOFS OF TRAIN COMPARTMENTS ON BENGAL NAGPUR RAILWAY

7. Mr. Debendra Lal Khan: (a) Is the Honourable the Railway Member aware of the fact that the platforms of the Kharagpur Station, the longest one in India, are totally uncovered, causing thereby much inconvenience and discomfort to the passengers during rains and in the summer?

(b) Are Government aware that most of the roofs of the compartments of the Bengal Nagpur Railway trains are defective due to innumerable leakage, causing much inconvenience to the passengers during incessant rainfall?

(c) Are Government aware that first class compartments of the local trains between Midnapore and Howrah, etc. in fact no better than third classes, consisting of wooden benches only and are without any light?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) Yes. It is, however, understood from the Railway Administration that necessary provision has been made for the carrying out of this work in the post-war programme of that railway

(b) Due to the shortage of supplies during the war, some carriages on the railway had to be re-roofed with painted canvas. Supplies of standard materials have now been received and carriages are being re-roofed at the rate of 38 per month. It is expected that before the beginning of the next monsoon, all carriages will have been re-roofed with standard material

(c) The seats of 1st and 2nd class compartments of suburban trains running between Midnapur and Howrah had to be fitted with wooden slats on account of continuous thefts of and damage to reene and canvas upholstery and the war-time impossibility of obtaining the necessary materials for replacement purposes. There has been also lack of lighting due to excessive thefts of lamps, lamp-holders, and other electric fittings and the war-time difficulty of obtaining the necessary supplies. The position will be adjusted as materials and fittings become available

TRAINS AND THIRD CLASS WAITING ROOMS ON BENGAL NAGPUR RAILWAY

8. Mr. Debendra Lal Khan: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state whether Government are aware of the fact that though the war emergency has long since ceased to exist, the number of trains on Bengal Nagpur Railway are still extremely limited and consequently the passengers are compelled to travel on the board of compartments or even on the roofs, causing the apprehension of great risk to human lives?

(b) Are Government aware of the fact that the Bengal Nagpur Railway stations have practically no arrangements of waiting rooms for the third class passengers and only inadequate arrangements for the first, second and inter class passengers?

(c) What is the Government policy regarding the amelioration of the condition of the third class passengers specially in the Bengal Nagpur Railway?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) Since the cessation of hostilities, many trains have been restored and on the Bengal Nagpur Railway train services are now only 82 per cent less in number than before the war. Government have no doubt that foot board travel has had to be restored to, but it is hoped that such conditions will soon disappear.

(b) Government are aware that there is room for much improvement in the provision of waiting room facilities for all classes of passengers. The following provisions for additional waiting rooms have been made in the Bengal-Nagpur Railway's post-war programme

	Rs
1947-48	99,000
1948-49	194,100
1949-50	164,000
1950-51	56,000
1951-52	12,000
Total	525,000

(c) Government intend to do everything possible to improve the conditions of III Class travel at the earliest possible time.

EFFICIENCY IN THE POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS DEPARTMENT

9. Mr. Debendra Lal Khan: (a) Is the Honourable Member for Communications aware of the fact that the efficiency of the Posts and Telegraphs Department has been considerably undermined during recent times, causing unusual delay in the delivery of letters and telegrams?

(b) Do Government propose to see that the former efficiency of the Department is restored at the earliest possible time and thereby save the people in general from lot of inconvenience?

Sir Harold Shobert: (a) and (b) Yes, Government are taking steps to improve the efficiency of the Department and remove the inconvenience to the public.

STATEMENT RE FOOD SITUATION PROVINCE BY PROVINCE

10. Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) Will the Secretary of the Food Department be pleased to lay on the table of the House a statement in continuation of the one made on the 5th February, 1946, in the Legislative Assembly in answer to unstarred question No. 7, dealing with the food situation, Province by Province, and specially indicating—

(i) the crop prospects, (ii) the progress of the basic plan, (iii) stocks and supply position, (iv) prevailing prices in rationed as well as non-rationed areas, (v) imports received from outside India and their allocation to different Provinces, and (vi) imports expected in future, month by month, and their probable allocation?

(b) Are Government aware of the acute shortage of rice and prevailing high prices thereof in certain parts of Bengal? If so, will a separate statement be made dealing with the situation?

Mr. B. R. Sen: (a) A memorandum on the food position is laid on the table of the House †

(b) In Bengal, shortages have occurred in the deficit districts particularly in East Bengal and prices have risen considerably. Supplies to these areas were disorganised as a result of the disturbances in Calcutta in August 1946 and further dislocations have been caused by recent unrest in the districts of Noakhali and Tipperah. The Government of Bengal are trying to meet the situation by sending Government stocks to these districts, which are released at controlled rates under a system of modified rationing. Normal despatches are being supplemented by air-borne supplies to Tipperah and Noakhali.

CONSTRUCTION OF ROADS IN BENGAL

11. Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable Member for Transport be pleased to state how many miles of roads of different descriptions have been constructed in the Province of Bengal etc. since the Standing Committee for Roads met last, and when it last met?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: The Standing Committee for Roads last met on the 16th March 1946.

The mileages of roads of various descriptions constructed by the Government of Bengal since March 1946 are not known to the Government of India, and it has not been possible to obtain the information in the time available, but it will be called for, if the Honourable Member will kindly indicate whether he is referring to new construction or improvements.

ACTION ON RESOLUTION RE MORE YARN FOR HANDLOOM WEAVERS

12. Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state

(a) what steps have been taken or are being taken for implementing the resolution which was adopted with amendments by the House after the debates on the 31st January and the 4th of February, 1946, over the question of having more yarn for handloom weavers, and

(b) whether Government have considered the question of popularising Uharika for the purpose of getting increased output of yarn?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: (a) In February 1945, an all-India Handloom Board was constituted to safeguard the interests of handloom weavers. It has not been found practicable to compel cotton textile mills to release one-third of the yarn manufactured by them for the use of handlooms. Handloom weavers at present are getting roughly one-quarter of the total yarn manufactured in India or about 90,000 bales a month. A reservation of 25 per cent. for handloom consumption has been made in respect of all further expansion of production.

ACTION BY THE POLICE AND RAILWAY AUTHORITIES re CONSIGNMENTS OF DAGGERS AND KNIVES IN TRANSIT

13. Mr. K. C. Neogy: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to lay on the table a statement giving instances in which consignments of knives, daggers or other lethal weapons were discovered by the Railway authorities or the Railway Police while in transit in different parts of the country since July last, and indicating in each case, the date and place of such discovery, the place of origin of such consignments and their destination, the nature and number of weapons, and the action taken at the instance of the Railway authorities or the Railway Police?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: The information required by the Honourable Member is not readily available. In order to obtain the information, a reference is being made to all railway administrations. On receipt of the information a reply will be laid on the table.

If so, will the Honourable Member please lay on the table of the House particulars of each such instance, giving the date and place of such discovery, the place of origin of such parcels and their destination, the nature and number of weapons, and the action taken at the instance of the Postal authorities or the Police?

Sir Harold Shobert: The Government of India have no official information but enquiries are being made from the Heads of the Circles

DIFFICULTIES OF OVERSEAS INDIAN STUDENTS SEEKING ADMISSION TO COLLEGES IN INDIA

(a) Government of India are not aware that any great difficulty is experienced by candidates from overseas (particularly from South and East Africa) in securing admission in Arts and Science Colleges in India, except when the degrees possessed by them are not recognised by the Universities concerned. The question of recognition of the degrees and diplomas of South African Universities possessed by Indian students by the Universities in India was referred to the Registrars of all the Universities in India and practically all the Universities have expressed their willingness to consider these cases sympathetically. The matter was also placed before the Inter-Universities Board at its meeting in December, 1945. They have also recommended that the Universities in India should consider sympathetically the question of the recognition of the degrees and diplomas of South African Universities possessed by Indian nationals.

(b) The Universities do not charge any capitation fees but Provincial Governments who run technical or professional institutions of their own do so for admitting students belonging to other Provinces. The Provincial Governments pay capitation fees only in respect of those candidates who are deputed by them.

PRICES OF ESSENTIAL COMMODITIES FOR INDIAN LABOURERS IN BURMA

Further inquiries made from the Representative of the Government of India in Burma have revealed that the difference in the prices prevailing in Bombay and Rangoon varies substantially. Without house rent, the total of all the commodities is about 300 per cent cheaper than in Bombay, but the other food items average more than 200 per cent above Bombay. The items relating to cloth are over 300 per cent higher than in Bombay. The conditions in Rangoon are still fluid and vary frequently. At times certain amenities may not be purchasable at all and in some cases these are substituted by others. In the circumstances it is not possible to estimate the cost at which amenities purchasable for Rs 60 in Bombay by Indian labourers can be purchased in Rangoon by persons of the same class.

CAPITAL AND RECURRING EXPENDITURE ON PILGRIMS AND STAFF AT KAMARAN

No. 722(c) —There are no military huts at Kamaran The question, therefore, does not arise.

SUPPLY OF WATER BY CONDENSERS AT KAMARAN

No 723(a) —No Water is very seldom supplied to H M's ships. Before the last war any water supplied was paid for by Royal Navy. During the war in one or two isolated cases some water was supplied to H M's ships in emergency but only in lieu of services rendered such as demolition of enemy sea mines, sitting and relaying buoys, and bringing food supplies from Aden.

(b) No prisoners of war were accommodated during both the wars.

A military garrison was established after occupation of the island in 1915. The expenditure was included in the sums advanced by the British and Indian Governments to meet deficits which were incurred in the administration of the Quarantine Station and recovered out of the revenue of the Quarantine Station according to Anglo-Dutch Agreement.

During the second war some detainees were accommodated in the barracks which had never been used by pilgrims. All expenses including repairs to the barracks were recovered from the Governments concerned and no expenses were charged to the Kamaran Quarantine Station Fund. Information regarding the amount recovered is not available.

(d) The reply is in the negative

(e) No, the subject of the correspondence between the Divisional Personnel Officer, Karachi, and the Senior Assistant, Personnel, was in regard to the propriety of appointing an Assistant Food Inspector as Food Inspector

(f) The officers holding these appointments in January 1946 were Muslims

(g) As non observance of the rules is not right as soon as it comes to notice, Government do not consider any special steps are necessary

SELECTION FOR POSTS ON N W RAILWAY

No 982—(a) Selections on the N W Railway are made in accordance with the provisions of the rules contained in Appendices II and II-A of the State Railway Establishment Code, Volume I, a copy of which is available in the library of the House

(b) and (d) Government are informed that the post of Food Inspector on the N W Railway is ordinarily filled by posting persons, in order of merit from the list of persons approved for appointment as Assistant Staff Writers. The post has so far not been declared a selection post but it was erroneously treated as such by the Divisional Superintendent at Karachi, and a selection was held in January 1946 at which some of the persons eligible for promotion as Food Inspector were not called up, while some of those not eligible had been considered. The error was in the meantime noticed by the Divisional Superintendent and accordingly the result of the selection was not announced

(c) The reply to the first position is in the affirmative

(e) I would refer the Honble Member to rule 6(c) of Appendix II A to the State Railway Establishment Code Vol I a copy of which is available in the library of the House, and would remind him that as the post had not been declared a selection post, a reference to the General Manager did not arise

TENDERS FOR WORK IN E I RAILWAY LOCO RUNNING SHEDS

(b) Either the Divisional Superintendent or the General Manager according to the annual value of the contract

(c) Gaya 3, Moghalsara 3, Jhajha 2

(d) The lowest tenders were not always accepted for the following reasons —

(i) Unsatisfactory work of the lowest tenderers at other sheds,

(ii) The lowest tenderers were unknown. As the administration was unable to ascertain their capabilities or financial reliability it was undesirable to entrust the work to them,

(iii) The tenderers were found to be petty contractors with no previous experience and the rates quoted were so low that they could not have been sufficiently remunerative to ensure efficiency of service and fair dealings with labour employed

PAYMENT TO COOLIES FOR HANDLING OF PARCELS AT HOWRAH STATION

It has been ascertained that in order that the full benefit of the subsidy is passed on to the licensed coolies, the contractor is authorised to charge from each coolie a reduced licence fee of Rs 3 p m only, instead of Rs 4 p m, which he would ordinarily have recovered. For the Honourable Member's information I would state that in order to get greater uniformity in the procedure on Railways, a matter to which I referred in reply to Supplementaries, it is proposed to insert in the standard form of agreement for Government Railways a clause to read as follows —

"The contractor will be paid by the Railway Administration for all work required to be done by coolies on behalf of the Railway Administration and detailed in Schedule II annexed to this agreement at the rate of _____ per month or as determined by the Railway Administration from time to time. The Contractor shall distribute the whole sum so paid by the Administration amongst the coolies required to do the said railway work according to the work performed by them, keep a proper record of such payment, viz., a register or Acquittance Roll containing the signature or thumb impressions of each coolie for the payment received by him from the contractor, and submit a certificate every month to the Railway Administration of his having done so. The contractor shall see that for doing the work detailed in Schedule II, no coolie is employed more than _____ hours per day."

AWARD BY SPECIAL ARBITRATION COURT RE COMPENSATION FOR BETELNUT GARDENS IN SOUTH KANARA

No 1315—(a) 201 cases in all were referred to the Special Arbitrator out of a total of 1148 awards made. Of these 201 cases, 37 were referred because the whereabouts of the ryots concerned were not known or because the cases involved apportionment of compensation among several claimants. The number of cases in which there was actual disagreement with regard to the amount of compensation was therefore only 164, i.e., 14 per cent of the total.

(b) The total amount of annual recurring compensation originally fixed by Government in these disputed cases was Rs 47 014-12-0

(c) Rs 82,341-14 3

(d) No definite observation to this effect was made by the Special Arbitrator. The yield estimated was generally accepted as correct. The main point of difference was about the income from the other fruit trees in areca gardens. According to the practice obtaining in South Kanara, the rental of an areca garden includes the income and rental of the other fruit trees in the garden and no separate rent is fixed for these trees. This fact is borne out by the lease deeds also. The court of the Special Arbitrator however allowed separate rentals for these trees.

COMPENSATION FOR ACQUIRED LAND IN SOUTH KANARA

No 1316 (a) In 947 out of the 1148 awards made by the Special Deputy Collectors in the South Kanara District the compensation fixed by Government was accepted and the necessary agreements executed by the ryots concerned without objection. The remaining 201 cases (i.e. 18 per cent of the total number) were referred to arbitration is explained in the answer to question 1315 (a).

(b) Of the persons who filed objection petitions, only one desired payment of compensation in advance. In this case the claim had to be rejected because the claimant was not the sole and undisputed person entitled to payment.

(c) No

(d) Yes, two such representations were received. The suggestion was that even in cases which did not go up to the Court of the Special Arbitrator, the compensation fixed should be revised and enhanced on the basis of the Arbitrator's award. This is not possible as there is no provision for a revision of the amount of compensation awarded in cases which were not referred to the arbitrator and which were accepted voluntarily by the parties concerned. Offer notices were served by January 1945 and although there was ample time to do so, no objection was raised.

ASSESSMENT OF DAMAGES ON DE-REQUISITIONED PROPERTIES

No 1317—(a) The procedure for assessing damage to properties when they are derequisitioned is laid down in Section 19 of the Defence of India Act, 1939.

(i) When property is derequisitioned an endeavour is made in the first instance to reach an agreement with the owner as to the amount of the terminal compensation. This procedure being in accordance with clause (a) of sub-section (1) of section 19 of the Act and in these negotiations Government is normally represented by the Collector of the District in which the property is situated. For the purpose of the negotiations the Collector, usually through his revenue staff, estimates what in his opinion is a fair amount of compensation.

(ii) If the amount of compensation cannot be fixed by agreement, the matter is referred to arbitration in accordance with clause (b) of sub-section (1) of section 19 of the Act, which provides that the arbitrator shall be a person who is qualified for appointment as a judge of the High Court and, in particular cases, the Government may nominate an assessor having expert knowledge of the property to assist the arbitrator, in which even the owner is also entitled to nominate an assessor for the same purpose.

(b) Yes

(c) As stated in the answer to part (a) of the question, provision for this already exists in the Defence of India Act.

In accordance with the existing practice, the stalls are allotted to Government servants and Municipal employees in order of priority with reference to their date of application, and surplus stalls, if any are left with the contractor for keeping his own cattle, or for allotment to private individuals, i.e., gowalas, etc

(c) This is not borne out by the details of actual allotments for the current year

(d) Yes The procedure in vogue for the allotment of stalls by the Committee is strictly in accordance with this principle

(e) The answer to the first part is in the negative The number of stalls allotted to ministerial staff has steadily increased from 67 in 1941 to 225 in 1945 and that of stalls allotted to gowalas has decreased from 357 in 1941 to 50 in 1945 The second part of the question does not arise.

PERMISSION TO BUILD MORE SUGAR FACTORIES IN CERTAIN CANAL IRRIGATED DECCAN AREA OF BOMBAY PROVINCE

- (a) Yes
- (b) The reply to the first part of the question is in the affirmative. The second part does not arise.
- (c) 3,76,123 acres in 1943-44, out of this 24,380 acres were utilised by Sugar Factories for their sugai cane crops.
- (d) The Government of Bombay who have been consulted do not propose to allow the construction of more Sugai Factories in this area. Under the existing policy of the Provincial Government only 35 per cent of the available supply in each storage is reserved for industrial purposes inclusive of sugar factory irrigation. The remaining 65 per cent is reserved for agricultural purposes. 35 per cent of the available supply from the various storages reserved for industrial purposes has been almost fully utilised under the existing guarantees. There is therefore hardly any scope for establishment of new sugai factories. A proposal to sanction new sugai factories using water from rivers, drains and nallas, supplemented to a very small extent by canal water, is however under consideration of the Government of Bombay.

PUNISHMENT TO CERTAIN I N A MEN

The following statement answers the points made by Honorable Members in connection with the trial of 15 members of No 4 Indian Coast Battery I A by Summary General Court Martial between the 6th July and 5th August 1943

Points Made	Answers
(a) That some of the prosecution witnesses admitted that they had been tutored	(a) Yes, but the Court was fully aware of this and bore it in mind when weighing the evidence and, in convicting the accused, took into consideration only such evidence as was worthy of acceptance
(b) That copies of the proceedings were refused to the accused	(b) No there is nothing on record to show that any of the accused made a request under IAA Rule 133 for copies of the proceedings, or that such a request, having been made, was refused
(c) That the Lawyer whom they selected for the defence was not allowed to appear	(c) Under Rule 82 (b) of the Indian Army Act Rules, permission for the appearance of civilian counsel was refused as trial was by Summary General Court Martial. It is, however, pointed out that the accused were defended by an Indian Commissioned Officer who in civil life was an advocate of a Presidency High Court, assisted by two other officers with legal experience.

- (d) That the defence witnesses were afterwards prosecuted and ill-treated
- (e) That the relatives of the accused were not informed of the charges
- (f) That the ICO who defended the accused was prosecuted after the proceedings
- (g) That the correspondence between Mr D M Sen, an Advocate of Calcutta, and the Army authorities should be released to the House
- (h) That the proceedings of the Summary General Court Martial Trial should be placed on the table of the House
- (d) Eight of the defence witnesses were tried and convicted for perjury and were sentenced to dismissal and imprisonment. There is no evidence to show that they were ill-treated
- (e) Yes, but it is not incumbent on the authorities to do so, nor has it been the practice in the past
- (f) There is nothing on record to show that this officer was prosecuted as alleged
- (g) All the correspondence available in this connection have now been obtained from the military authorities and copy is placed on the table
- (h) It has not been the practice here nor in the U K where we have sought for precedents, to lay before the House Court Martial proceedings, except for very special reasons, as this would tend to make the House a Court of Appeal from the decisions of Courts Martial which would be most undesirable. In this particular case 9 out of the 12 sentences being death sentences, are irrevocable and cannot be affected by further enquiry. Moreover, there is in fact, nothing in the Court Martial proceedings relevant to the allegations made by Hon'ble Members. It is therefore, considered that there are no special reasons in this case which justify making an exception to the general convention, established both in the U K and in India against placing the proceedings of Courts Martial before the House

They are the highest bids actually received in public auction held in accordance with section 200(i) of the Cantonments Act 1924. WANT OF GOOD CATTLE AND HANDICAP IN GROWING FOODGRAIN IN NORTH KANARA DISTRICT IN BOMBAY

(a) According to the information supplied by the Provincial Government, the Kanara Cattle are generally of poor constitution due chiefly to climatic conditions including the fact that though there is adequate grazing the grass is not very nutritious. This does handicap the agriculturist in growing food crops to a certain extent in as much as the unit of cultivated area per pair of cattle is smaller in Kanara than in other parts of the province.

(b) The Provincial Government are considering improvement of grasses and introduction of wider use of concentrates. Research work has been taken up on grass land improvement and on predigestion of rice straw with chemical agent to improve its nutritive value. Taguri loans for purchases of good cattle are freely sanctioned. Improvement of local cattle is being attempted by importing good variety of breeding bulls. The cattle Farm at Taguri is doing work on the breeding and improvement of Dangri and Nimer cattle with special reference to coastal areas including Kanara.

(c) Yes. The cotton seed imported is given mainly to buffaloes in Milk.

(d) Supply of cotton seed being very limited due to reduction of acreage under cotton. Only a small quantity could be imported from the Dharwar District.

(e) There is no proposal to sell cotton seed through Government agency.

Retail distribution of cotton seed to milch cattle is arranged through authorised retail distributors and rural distribution centres on rationed basis.

DEATHS OF MR BHULABHAI DESAI AND DR HASSAN SUHRAWARDY

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru (Leader of the House) May 1 12 Noon with your permission, Sir, refer to the passing away since this House last met, of two eminent Members of this Assembly, Mr. Bhulabhai J. Desai and Dr Hassan Suhrawardy. Some of us here who are new comers to this House were not associated with them in their work in this House. Most others had intimate association with them. We also, in other fields, knew them and worked with them. Mr Bhulabhai Desai played during the last many years a very important part in this House. His brilliant intellect was directed to the service of the cause of the country's freedom, and in this House, as well as outside, he served that cause not only by the brilliance of his intellect but by the sacrifices which he made. His last great feat which is enshrined in the minds of his countrymen was his brilliant defence of the trials known as I N A. trials and the last speech which he delivered at that trial will long be found to be enshrined in the annals of freedom. Perhaps it was that great feat of his that hastened his death. He was an ill man at the time, but he preserved and when he went away it was only gradually to fade away.

Dr Hassan Suhrawardy was eminent in many walks of life. He shone as an educationist, as a physician and in public life. I knew Mr Bhulabhai Desai very intimately outside this House. We were colleagues. Dr Hassan Suhrawardy was a much older acquaintance, with whom I first came into contact 27 years ago. In spite of the fact that during the intervening years, we did not see much of each other, yet the memory of our old acquaintance and friendship endured, for Dr Hassan Suhrawardy was eminently an attractive and likeable person.

Well, Sir, death comes to all of us and it is an odd thing that though death is a certainty, yet we grieve for it. Life and death come one after another and hordes of people die unremembered and live unremembered also. But the question is how a person has lived his life and how he has met the final challenge of death. If he has lived worthily for a worthy cause, and if he has died bravely, then it has been well with him. But if he has not lived worthily, is does not matter much whether he is alive or is dead. I am afraid that most people are tied up in their petty interests and do not pay much attention to the big things of life. But to those of us who have the honour of coming to this House or serving large causes elsewhere, it is given to some extent to shoulder these burdens, sometimes as with some of us here, who are new comers to this House—and may I say personally for myself, a novice, a complete novice in the ways of this House. I seek your indulgence and the indulgence of this House for my inexperience in any errors or mistakes that I may commit—we have been here some of us for some little time past facing days and nights full of toil and responsibility and worry which is no light task, and when I say this and when I think of those who have in their own way, in the past carried this burden, I sympathise with them very greatly. And, so, when I think of those who have in other days and in other manners faced this Assembly and carried on the work of this Assembly not from this side of this House but from the other and laid the foundations in many ways for the present, I am thankful to them. I am somewhat apprehensive at the same time whether we who follow them will also live up to the mark they set down. Therefore, Sir, I should like to pay on behalf of the House this homage to the memory of the two great members of this House who served not only this House but the country in the cause of freedom.

Mr. P. J. Griffiths (Assam European). Sir, I rise to associate this Group and myself wholeheartedly with everything which has been said by the Leader of the House in regard to those two of our colleagues whose loss we all mourn today. We are particularly grateful to you, Sir, for dispensing with the normal convention and allowing us to express our feelings on this subject, for we feel that special circumstances demand and make it fitting, that we should in the first place, in the happily changed political circumstances, pay a great tribute to one whose highest aspiration was to see popular Government established in this country. Mr. Bhulabhai Desai was known to many of us, not only by his performance in this House, but outside, as an intimate friend. I myself first met him not in his capacity of the leader of the Congress party, but as a charming and courteous host and distinguished scholar. I once began to engage him in conversation about the history and the literature of my own country. I soon discovered that even on these subjects, his knowledge was so much greater and more profound than my own, that the conversation necessarily had to be one-sided. I next met him, as we all met him, in this House, where besides being a leader of a great party, he was unrivalled as an orator. Day by day we listened to his stately periods and his mellifluous eloquence. We listened with admiration and if indeed it were possible for any of us who fell so far short of his eloquence to envy him,—we listened with envy too. We recognised in him not only a great orator but a man who meant what he said, a man who had the courage of his convictions and who was never afraid of putting them forward in the most forcible possible manner. It is particularly fitting that we should think of him today, for in the presence on the Government benches of the representatives of both the major parties of this country, he would have seen the consummation of his highest hopes. As far as we in this group are concerned, it is still more appropriate that we should join in this expression of condolence because we shared his hopes then and we share now the satisfaction which would have been his, at the presence on those benches of parties representing the people of this country. We hope too as he would have hoped had he still been alive—that their presence on those benches today is but a prelude to a rapid solution of the long-term constitutional problem and to the final establishment of self-government for this country without qualification of any kind. That hope and that desire, provide the background of our thoughts today when we remember Bhulabhai Desai and when we ask you to convey to his bereaved relatives our deep sense of loss,—a loss which includes him not only as a politician and as an orator, but as a friend.

We would wish also, Sir, to be associated with what has been said regarding Dr Hassan Suhrawardy. Many of us in this group knew him intimately and had long learnt to regard him with affection and respect. It is one of the many virtues of this House that, though opinions and parties may divide, the tie of friendship unites, and the loss of any Member of this House is a loss to all of us. That applies with particular force in the case of Dr Hassan Suhrawardy, whose charming personality and character had long endeared him to every section of this House. We would therefore wish to join in expressing our condolences to his bereaved relatives regarding the loss of our distinguished colleague.

Khan Muhammad Yamin Khan (Agra Division, Muhammadan Rural). Sir, on my own behalf as well as on behalf of the Muslim League Party, I associate myself with everything that has been said by the Leader of the House and the Leader of the Opposition about the two gentlemen who have departed from amongst us. Mr Desai was one of the most charming Members who ever sat in this House and he was a friend not only of the Members of his own party of the Opposition Members but also equally a friend of those whom he criticised from day to day in this House. His great efforts in the cause of the country and in uplifting the status and keeping up the dignity of this House will be remembered by everyone. The House lost when he did not come here and his death is now a loss to the whole country.

Dr Hassan Suhrawardy was a Member who held high positions and gained a lot of experience in administration and public life. He was selected by the Muslim League Party as a Member of this House because the party thought that his valuable experience would be an asset to this House. We have lost in him a valuable colleague and we think that our loss is irreparable. The loss of both these Honourable Members is mourned by our party. We associate ourselves with all that has been said about them and we hope you, Sir, will include our party when you convey the message of condolence to their bereaved families.

Mr President I fully associate myself with all that has been said by the Leader of the House, the Leader of the Opposition and the spokesman of the Muslim League party. I shall convey to the relatives of the deceased Members the feelings which have been expressed in this House.

MOTIONS FOR ADJOURNMENT

TREATMENT OF INDIANS IN SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. President I have received notices of nineteen motions for adjournment two of which have since been withdrawn leaving seventeen for disposal. I shall take up each of them in the order in which it has been received.

The first motion stands in the name of Sardar Mangal Singh, who wishes to discuss the 'inability of the Government of India to prevent humiliating treatment being meted out to Indians in South Africa at the hands of the Union Government'. I will state my reactions to this. A number of adjournment motions on this question have been discussed in this House, and I understand that, since the last session, trade relations with South Africa have been broken, the High Commissioner has been recalled and there has been a reference of this question in the U. N. O. Does the Honourable Mover still think that this is an urgent matter for discussion?

Sardar Mangal Singh (East Punjab. Sikh) Sir, the fact that this matter is now before the U. N. O. should not be a bar to its being taken up here. Our countrymen in South Africa feel very deeply about it and they have started a civil disobedience movement there. The country feels strongly about it and it is surely an urgent matter which should be discussed here.

Mr. President I take it that the intention of the motion is to convey to the South African Government the quantum of strength of Indian feeling on this question. I should like to know what the Leader of the House has to say about this.

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru (Leader of the House) Sir, it is surely a strange way of conveying that quantum or strength of feeling by condemning the Government and by making them feel perhaps in South Africa that Government are not doing what they should do in the matter. As a matter of fact, as you yourself remarked, a very great deal has been done in this matter and I shall be very glad indeed if the Honourable Member Sardar Mangal Singh could tell us what more we could do and in what directions we could pursue this matter further, short of sending an army across from here for purposes of war. At the present moment, as the House no doubt knows, the matter is before the United Nations General Assembly and I may say that the delegation we have sent have already justified themselves not only by the great ability with which they have conducted the fight in the preliminary rounds but also by a certain measure of success that they have already achieved. I do not wish to mention names or say that some people have done better than others but so far two names stand out prominently—the names of the Leader of the delegation and Mr. Chagla who very ably conducted the legal part of the argument there and who won his point in spite of stout opposition. I may also express in this connection our gratitude to the other nations who supported us notably the Soviet, the U.S.A., China, Syria, Ukraine and France. I do not remember all, but only last night we received in our office a long telegram giving us some details of those arguments before the United Nations Assembly and telling us of the significant success that our delegation has achieved in this preliminary round and of the great sympathy of the various nations represented in the Assembly for India and for Indians in South Africa. Therefore I think that all that we can do at present is being done with vigour and I hope that in the United Nations Assembly the position will go in our favour, but whether it goes in our favour or not we shall stand by our countrymen in South Africa to the end.

Sardar Mangal Singh: I did not quite follow the point which the Honourable the Leader of the House wanted to make. He admits that the question is before the United Nations Organisation and is very important and urgent, but his only idea is that this motion has been brought forward here to condemn the Government of India. I wish he had waited for my speech which I will make when I introduce the motion and seen whether my object is to condemn the Government of India or what I want. In this House rules are such that we can only bring forward questions in this form. That is my difficulty. I would have brought forward this question in some other form, but the rules do not permit. Therefore I was forced to bring this question in this form and I hold, Sir, that the motion is quite in order and it should be discussed today.

Mr. President I do not think any argument on this question is now necessary. The wording of the motion makes it very clear—'the inability of the Government of India', whatever that means. However, I do not propose to discuss this matter any further. I do not think I can give my assent to this motion.

COMMUNAL DISTURBANCES IN BENGAL, BOMBAY, U P, BIHAR, ETC

Mr. President The next motion is from the Honourable Member, Mr. Sunyal, which reads as follows —

"This Assembly do now adjourn for discussing a definite matter of urgency and of public importance, namely the duty of the Government of India to advise the Governor General to take such steps as would ensure peace and tranquillity in the Province of Bengal where the Governor as also the Government have failed to protect the life, property and honour of a large section of men and women from the 16th of August 1946 (the Direct Action Day of the Muslim League) onwards, such failure still subsisting"

There are five other similar motions from different Honourable Members containing the same substance, and in some cases the same language, only with the difference that the places where these disturbances have occurred are differently mentioned. Otherwise, so far as the substance goes, all these motions practically stand on the same footing. I may just read them out, and I propose to consider all these together as the subject matter of all these motions is almost identical —

Mr. Killedar's motion reads as follows —

"This Assembly do now adjourn for discussing the definite matter of urgency and public importance, namely the failure of the Government of India to advise the Governor General to take such steps as would ensure peace and tranquillity in the City of Ahmedabad where the Governor of Bombay as well as the Government of Bombay have failed to protect the life, property and honour of a large section of men and women in the City of Ahmedabad from 1st August 1946 onwards, such failure still subsisting"

Mr. Ahmed Jaffer's motion is this —

"This Assembly do now adjourn for discussing the definite matter of urgency and public importance, namely the failure of the Government of India to advise the Governor General to take such steps as would ensure peace and tranquillity in the Province of Bombay where the Governor of Bombay as well as the Government of Bombay have failed to protect the life, property and honour of a large section of men and women in the District of Nasik from the 2nd September 1946 onwards, such failure still subsisting"

Mr. Killedar's second motion runs thus —

"This Assembly do now adjourn for discussing the definite matter of urgency and public importance, namely the failure of the Government of India to advise the Governor General to take such steps as would ensure peace and tranquillity in the City of Bombay where the Governor of Bombay as well as the Government of Bombay have failed to protect the life, property and honour of a large section of men and women in the city and suburbs of Bombay from 1st September 1946 onwards, such failure still subsisting"

The next motion is from Mr. Ghazanfarulla which reads as follows —

"This Assembly do now adjourn for discussing the definite matter of urgency and public importance, namely the failure of the Government of India to advise the Governor General to take such steps as would ensure peace and tranquillity in Allahabad where the Governor of the United Provinces as well as the Government of the United Provinces have failed to protect the life, property and honour of a large section of men and women in the city of Allahabad from June 1946 onwards, such failure still subsisting"

And the last one on this subject is from Mr. Muhammad Nauman, which reads as follows —

"That this Assembly do now adjourn for discussing the definite matter of urgency and public importance, namely the failure of the Government of India to advise the Governor General to take such steps as would ensure peace and tranquillity in the village Benabad, P.O. Kufra District Mazaffarpore Bihar where the Governor of Bihar as well as the Government of Bihar Province have failed to protect the life, property and honour of a large section of men and women in the village and its locality since the month of October 1945 onwards, such failure still subsisting"

I do not see how these motions, which deal with practically a provincial subject and which take it for granted that the Provincial Governments and Governors have failed in their duties could be discussed here in this House. May I know from the Honourable Member as to how this motion is in order and as to how the Government of India figure in this?

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal (Presidency Division Non-Muhammādan Rural) Mr. President, I am very glad that I have got so many friends and followers in the Muslim League. Without being competent to say anything on these motions, I will confine myself to mine on Bengal.

Mr. President: I may make the position clear. I do not wish to have a separate argument on each of these motions. The substance of the motions is identical in all cases.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: So far as I am concerned, I submit that the people of Bengal owe as much allegiance to this Government as they do to the Provincial Government. They pay large revenues to this Government also, and they expect that in this dire hour of crisis, which has no parallel and precedent in history, they will get some protection from the Government of India. I do not like to enter into the question of admissibility but I will expect the Government of India, if it is possible for them, to make such a statement, as in their wisdom they can at the present moment, which may give an impression as to how they can help these people who are suffering enormously even within the limitations of the Constitution Act. May I expect a statement from the Government of India? If the Honourable Member makes a statement giving an indication as to how they propose to help these men (even within the limitations of the Constitution Act, the question of entering into a formal debate will not arise).

To-day, Sir, on the very first day, when the nation is represented on the Treasury Bench, nothing should be done by any member of the House to prejudice that concord and harmony for which we are going ahead. At the same time we expect that the Government will make such a statement and give such a gesture not only consistent with their limitations, but also assuring to their countrymen.

Mr. President: What we are concerned with is the question of the admissibility of the motions, not their merits.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: In that case irrespective of the question how the Provincial Governments deal with the matter, it is within the competence of the Government of India to take cognizance of the situation and to send such relief and such organizations which come to the aid of the people. If they cannot directly interfere, they can seek the aid of His Majesty's Government in this matter. After all, if the life and honour of women and men are not safe, I do not know for what purpose a Government exists!

Miss Maniben Kara (Nominated Non-Official) Even on the point of the advisability of the admission of this question I would draw the attention of this House that it is the primary duty of the Government of India to safeguard the lives of the people of this country, no matter in what province?

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is going into the merits and feelings seem to be getting the better of the legal argument. What I am concerned with is to see as to whether within the four corners of the Statute, the rules and standing orders such a motion can be permitted to be discussed. I am not concerned with the desirability or otherwise of discussing these questions. But if it is pointed out to me that there is a duty of the Government of India in which they have failed—the Government of India would mean, not the Governor-General acting in his discretion, but the Governor-General in Council—then only I can see my way to admit the motions. But I find a difficulty there, so far as my own reading of the provisions is concerned.

I might invite Honourable Members' attention to Rule 23 which is to be read with Rule 12.

Rule 23 lays down restrictions on the subjects for discussion. It says

"Every resolution shall be in the form of a specific recommendation addressed to the Governor-General in Council."

[Mr. President.]

I am reading this Rule because Rule 12 provides, that an adjournment motion cannot be made on a subject on which a resolution cannot be moved; it reads as under:—

"The motion must not deal with a matter on which a resolution could not be moved or save with the consent of the Governor-General in his discretion with a matter on which a resolution could not, save with such consent, be moved."

So where there is a matter which is for the Governor-General to decide in his discretion, then the consent of the Governor-General will be necessary, and one may now refer to rule 23 which says:

"No resolution shall be moved—

(u) save with the consent of the Governor-General in his discretion,—

(c) on any action taken in his discretion by the Governor-General in relation to the affairs of a Province,"

That is the difficulty. Will the Honourable Member please just enlighten me on this point and show how the motions are admissible? None of the movers of these motions has obtained the consent of the Governor-General.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer (Bombay Southern Division Muhammadan Rural) The consent can be obtained. We can get that tomorrow, if you like.

Mr. President: It is not a question of my liking. An Honourable Member who brings in a motion of adjournment is supposed to know, the form in which it is to be brought. I am pointing out the difficulties. I cannot advise Honourable Members here in the House as to the proper way in which they could have framed their motions or obtained consent.

Pandit Govind Malaviya (Allahabad and Jhansi Divisions Non-Muhammadan Rural) May I take a minute, Sir? I wish to refer to the legal aspect. I am quite sure, as my Honourable friend, Mr. Sanyal has said, that on this day nobody would like to move any adjournment motion or to raise any point of discord. Things are very grave in Bengal. Words cannot describe it. The whole country is distressed and agitated over it. But we know that the Government which sits in charge today in this House is more competent than anyone else can be to look after things. Therefore while we feel most deeply concerned, we need not raise the point, and can leave it to our present National Government to deal with the situation. I only wish to refer to the legal and constitutional aspect. The legal point is very simple. The Government of India Act does contemplate interference in provincial administration by the Governor-General under certain circumstances. If this House, Sir, under a certain set of circumstances thought fit and you permitted it, it would be open to it to have a resolution recommending to the Governor-General that in view of those circumstances the Governor-General might bring into operation certain sections of the Government of India Act which would result in interference with the provincial administration. To that extent that matter can be discussed by a resolution. Similarly, I submit, Sir, that this motion can be taken up and discussed by this House. I am not going into the merits. Personally I am not for any adjournments to be moved or pressed today. I am dealing with the legal aspect only.

Therefore, Sir, it is open to us to suggest that since resolutions of that type can be discussed there should be no ban against a motion of this type in view of the situation. Circumstances may arise in a province or in any part of the country which would justify this Assembly to say that even as the law stands the Government of India, under those circumstances, could, do certain things in those parts to protect people's lives and property and honour, and to protect the fair name of this country from being sullied. Certain sections implying active interference could have no meaning except that if the necessity arose, we could go into such matters. Therefore, I submit that these motions can be in order. This is only the constitutional and legal aspect, and I hope and trust that, if agreeing with this view you are pleased to say that the motions are in order, even then in view of the special circumstances of this historic day—I shall not go into it—no adjournment motion will be pressed.

Maharajkumar Dr. Sir Vijaya Ananda (United Provinces Landholders) In 1942, when Congress passed a resolution the Viceroy and the Executive Council Members took immediate action, although

Mr. President: Order, order, The Honourable Member is going into the merits of the question.

Maharajkumar Dr. Sir Vijaya Ananda: That is very in ch'ice the present situation. The Government of India can interfere as they did in 1942, that was when we were fighting for the freedom of the country.

Mr. President: Will the Honourable Member point out any section which imposes on the Government of India that means the Governor-General-in-Council, the statutory duty of advising?

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir (Nominated Non-Official) May I point out that there is a certain amount of confusion. We are working under the Act of 1919. The Provincial Governments are acting under the Act of 1935. The Act of 1935 gives complete provincial autonomy. It was a different matter when Section 93 was in operation. Section 93 is no longer in operation, and I contend, Mr. President that this House has no right under the Act of 1935 to interfere with the Provincial Government. It is an extraordinary position that a Central Government should be working under the Act of 1919 and the Provincial Governments are working under a different Act. But that is to be taken as it is. Besides, may I point out that circumstances today are completely different to the circumstances that existed during the last session when a different Government was on the treasury Benches.

Today we have an Indian Government on the Treasury Benches and Indian Governments in the Provinces and therefore the wholesome practice of not interfering with Provincial Governments should prevail. Whatever your ruling may be even if it be by convention, it should now be established that the Government of India should not interfere in such domestic matters except what is provided for by the law in the Act of 1935.

Mr. President: I would like to know what the views of Government are on the matter.

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: This matter relates specially to the Home Department and my colleague here may speak on it. But may I say one word in regard to this particular motion? I am zealous of the powers of this House and I should not like anyone to limit those powers. I am not such a big constitutional lawyer as many present here but I would resist any decision. (Pandit Govind Malaviya I am sorry I have to mention again that we cannot hear anything that the Honourable the Leader of the House says.) Naturally the Home Member will say what he has to say about the attitude of the Government in regard to these motions. Naturally any motion which is in the nature of a condemnatory motion against Government has to be resisted by us. As a legal argument I do submit that the matter is a very intricate one and I hope no decision will be given that will in future limit the powers of this House.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel (Member for Home and Information and Broadcasting) Sir, I fully appreciate and deeply sympathise with the feelings of representatives of Bengal and of others whose feelings have been deeply wounded by what has happened in the Eastern parts of Bengal and I wish to say that whilst I fully sympathise with them I would appeal to them and to all others to say nothing.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman (Batra and Chota Nagpur cum Orissa Muhammadan) Sir, on a point of order, I want you to say one thing in this connection.

[Mr Muhammad Nauman]

The Honourable the Home Member is referring to only one adjournment motion regarding Eastern Bengal. He has not made any mention of the other five adjournment motions.

Mr. President. The Honourable the Home Member has not finished his speech. The Honourable Member would do well to hear him first and then say what he has to say.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: Whilst I fully sympathise with them I would appeal to them and to all others to say nothing or to do nothing which would have repercussions outside this House. You all know the situation in the country. We are meeting under peculiar circumstances. You will appreciate the difficult and delicate nature of the task that we have undertaken of governing this country. You also know that the constitutional position, whatever it may be, is being evolved and it would not be right for this House to take a position, a definite position, in which impediments may be created which would bind this House and limit its powers. At the same time if it comes to taking a position in which a censure motion is to be passed, this Government has to resist it. You will all appreciate that the time is not for a debate, a debate will not solve the problem—but the time is for action, such action as would prevent the shocking and disgraceful happenings that have taken place and we must all hope and expect that vigorous steps, adequate steps, will be taken to prevent such occurrences and at the same time to prevent disorder or the breaking down of Government. Therefore I can only say that I can assure you on behalf of the Government that whatever is possible will be done without any hesitation and at this stage I can only appeal to you all to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Sir, I do not press my motion.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: What about the minority Provinces?

Mr. President: The Honourable the Home Member said in respect to the whole of India.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman. He was only referring to Bengal and nowhere else.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Not a word has been said about the happenings in Bombay, Ahmedabad and Nadi.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: I said about all and I mentioned particularly the representatives of East Bengal, because they have suffered more. I said all whose feelings have been wounded by the happenings in the country.

Mr. Abdur Rahaman Siddiqi (Calcutta and Suburbs, Muhammadan Urban). Sir, I want your guidance on a phrase used by the Honourable the Home Member—"Whatever is possible will be done by the Government of India." And therefore if the Government of India can use its influence, why debar me from telling it how I want it to work and what are my grievances. This House has certainly the right to discuss in every aspect all matters in which the Government of India through the Home Department will do every thing possible—do this and the other. Therefore may I submit that this House has the fullest right to discuss these matters, if the Government of India can interfere in them.

Mr. President: I do not think any further arguments over this question are now necessary. As I said in the beginning I have been entertaining doubts as to whether such motions would be in order, specially when they refer to provincial matters and want to criticise the actions of Provincial Governments or even the conduct of Provincial Governors. But I do see the point made by the Honourable the Leader of the House and the Honourable the Home Member and I should not be taken to have decided the question by any views expressed today. I think at present, it is sufficient for me to state that I do not feel satisfied that I should give my consent to this motion. The point which has arisen now might be duly considered and studied, because it cannot be dealt with merely by references or arguments as to what is desirable, but by arguments on what is actually contained in the Government of India Act or the Rules and Standing Orders.

After thus clearing the position, I dispose of the motions by stating that I am unable to give my consent to them. That disposes of these motions and one which I omitted to mention—No 11 from Mr. Satvapriya Banerjee who wants to discuss—

"The situation in Noakhali arising out of mass massacre of Hindus, the burning of thousands of houses belonging to Hindus, the looting of Hindu properties, the forcible conversion of Hindus by Muslims, abduction of Hindu women and their forcible marriage with Mohammedans and blocking of all roads to affected areas."

WITHDRAWAL OF INDIAN TROOPS FROM INDONESIA

Mr. President. The next is by Sardar Mangal Singh who wants to discuss—

"The failure of the Government of India to arrange the withdrawal of the Indian troops from Indonesia."

I think this is in pursuance of a promise given by government during the last session that they would withdraw the troops by a certain date. What is the position?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: The present position is that Indian troops will be withdrawn from Indonesia at the latest by the end of November. I believe some delay has occurred partly owing to shipping difficulties—transport etc. But there is no doubt that this decision that has been made is being carried out, and by the end of November we hope it will be complete.

Sardar Mangal Singh: In view of the assurance given by the Leader of the House, I do not press the motion.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: The assurance given, does not satisfy me. Will the Honourable Leader of the House give us also an assurance that in case the Netherlands Government is unable to despatch its own soldiers, there shall be no delay beyond the 30th November in withdrawing our troops from Indonesia?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: The Honourable Member will appreciate that the kind of assurance he asks from me is not very easy to give, but I will give him an assurance that so far as this government is concerned, we are not going to tolerate any delays or any subterfuges in the way of getting our troops back from Indonesia.

COMMUNAL DISTURBANCES IN CALCUTTA

Mr. President: The next one is by Mr. Satvapriya Banerjee, to discuss—

"The terrible tragedy that overtook Calcutta on the 16th August, last and the following days and has been since continuing and which has caused the loss of thousands of human lives, the destruction and looting of property worth several crores and the utter ruination of a large number of families."

This also shares the same fate as the other motions on the subject.

COLLECTION OF ARMS AND OTHER LETHAL WEAPONS FOR VIOLENCE AND TERRORISM

Mr. President: The next one is by Mr. K. C. Nigoy, to discuss—

"The failure of the Central Intelligence Bureau to watch and discover in time traffic in, and collection of arms and other lethal weapons by lawless elements, preparatory to outbursts of violence and terrorism on an organised scale, as revealed in the grave happenings in certain parts of the country on and after the 16th August 1946."

Has the Honourable the Home Member anything to say on this?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: Sir, the ingenuity with which this motion has been drafted will make it clear that the Honourable Member is conscious of the constitutional difficulties involved in this and the other motions that have been brought forward in this House. The Honourable Member's motion involves two questions—one, the functions of the Central Intelligence

[Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel]

Bureau, and two, the traffic in and collection of arms. As regards one, the functions of the Bureau, it has to gather information which would be useful and which in the main is of a political nature. The Central Intelligence Bureau does not perform the functions contemplated in this motion, it only gets returns from the provinces about arms and ammunition of a major nature—if there is any loss of such munitions as machine guns or rifles or pistols etc., then they get returns from the provinces. For arms of a minor character, if there is any serious trouble, then such returns are called for, but from the nature of the arms contemplated in this motion which were detected probably in Bombay and in some other places coming from either the frontier or the border areas, which arms were not of the same nature but were lethal weapons. It is very difficult to say whether they are not intended for domestic use or whether the intelligence Bureau has to gather information of this nature. It does not perform this function and therefore I must resist this motion. At the same time I must say that the Arms Act would have to be amended if this kind of arms is to be included in the category of weapons which are prevented under the Arms Act. Therefore, the present motion, although worded cleverly and brought in for a different purpose altogether is not, I think, such as can be admitted. I resist it.

Mr K. C. Neogy (Dacca Division Non-Muhammadan Rural) I should not like to give a reply to the arguments that the Honourable the Home Member has put forward. I shall content myself with saying that I do not desire to move this motion.

JUTE CONTROL

Mr President: The next is by Mr. Sanyal about jute control—

The situation that has arisen as a result of the Government of India and the Government of Bengal having acted differently and in opposite directions in the matter of fixation of price of jute.”

The Jute control Order is cancelled, I believe. It has been published in the press.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: I do not wish to move this.

COMMUNAL DISTURBANCES IN CALCUTTA

Mr. President: Then there is another which has already been disposed of, about the failure of the Government of India to advise the Governor General regarding the happenings in Calcutta from the 16th August—I need not read it out to the House.

RICE SHORTAGE IN BENGAL

Mr President: The next is from Mr Satyapriya Banerjee about the non-availability of rice in various parts of Bengal and the consequent rise in its price, reported death from starvation as a result thereof and the failure of the Government to meet the situation. May I know about the urgency of this matter?

Sree Satyapriya Banerjee (Chittagong and Rajshahi Division Non-Muhammadan Rural) The situation, Sir, has assumed serious proportions. The food problem has been engaging the attention of this House since 1943 and I think there has been very little progress, if any, in this matter of supplying rice to the poorer sections of the people of Bengal. If the Honourable the Food Member can give us an assurance that there will be a food debate in this House in this session, I will not press this motion.

The Honourable Dr. Rajendra Prasad (Member for Food and Agriculture) I have no difficulty whatever in giving the assurance that the Honourable Member wants. I propose that a day should be set apart for discussion of the food situation.

Sree Satyapriya Banerjee: In view of the assurance, Sir, I withdraw my motion.

JUTE CONTROL

Mr. President: There is next the motion by Mr Tamizuddin Khan about the jute position that has been disposed of. It raises the same point as the other motion.

BOMBING OF TRIBAL AREAS IN WAZIRISTAN

Mr. President: There is another motion by the same member, Mr Tamizuddin Khan. He wants to discuss—

"The recent aerial bombing of tribal areas in Waziristan and the destruction of life and property caused thereby."

This requires the consent of the Governor General. It has not been received. As the Honourable Member has moved for his consent, we shall have to postpone this motion till the consent is received.

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: The Governor General is prepared to grant his consent.

Mr. President: The Honourable the Leader of the House informs me that the Governor General is prepared to give his consent.

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: I have just been informed by Sir George Spence to that effect. On his authority I stated that he had received a message from the Governor General that he was prepared to grant his consent.

Seth Yusuf Abdoolah Haroon (Sind Muhammadan Rural): Has the Honourable the Leader of the House received the consent?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: I have not received the formal consent.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: The statement of the Honourable the Leader of the House is a vicarious one. He says that so and so tells me that the permission is likely to be given.

Mr. President: In any case I may fix up the motion for 4 o'clock today and in the meanwhile we shall await the formal receipt of the consent.

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: I merely informed you what I was told but apart from that how this question arises at the present stage does not appear to be very clear. I have not got this motion before me. I have just heard from you.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah (Bombay City Muhammadan Urban): Until you have got the consent of the Governor General no further discussion can take place. You cannot deal with the motion until you have got the consent.

Mr. President: I am suggesting that this matter might be taken up at 4, if the consent is received in the meantime.

Mr. M. A. Jinnah: You cannot do it until this motion has been admitted by you. Therefore all that you can say is this—that you can allow it to stand over.

Mr. President: I will have the matter postponed and will consider it when the consent is received. I shall then decide whether it is admissible or not. It can be taken up for consideration tomorrow.

COMMUNAL DISTURBANCES IN CALCUTTA

Mr. President: There is another motion from Mr Tamizuddin Khan to discuss—

"The failure of Government to arrange prompt military intervention for quelling the recent mid August disturbances in Calcutta."

I do not think it is admissible. May I know how this is admissible? It is a question of intervention by the Government of India in provincial affairs. Did the Provincial Government make a request for intervention?

Mr. Tamizuddin Khan (Dacca cum Mymensingh Muhammadan Rural). Oh yes Request was made but some how or other the request was not considered

Mr. President: May I know what the facts are about this?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: It is not a thing that has happened at all

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: We became members of the Government a little more than 2 weeks after this occurrence but no doubt some information could be supplied, if the Honourable Member wants it, of the failings and errors of the previous caretaker Government

Shri D. P. Karmarkar (Bombay Southern Division Non-Muhammadan Rural) We cannot hear what the Honourable the Leader of the House is saying May I suggest that a microphone be installed before we meet next tomorrow

Mr. President: I cannot hear what the Honourable Member is saying

Sreejot Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri (Assam Valley Non-Muhammadan) We could hear our leaders before even when they were far away—1000 yards away and we cannot hear them, now that they are so near

Mr. President: So far as the terms of this motion are concerned, the facts have not been stated clearly I do not think I could admit this

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S ASSENT TO BILLS

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT

USE OF TEAR GAS OUTSIDE THE COUNCIL HOUSE

Mr. Muhammad Nauman (Patna and Chota Nagpur cum Orissa Muhammadan) I have given notice of an adjournment motion which the Honourable President did not read

Mr. President. I have gone through all the motions

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: I have given notice about the use of tear gas outside the Chamber. I gave it to the Secretary and the Chief Whip

Mr. President: I do not know what has happened. I am in the House. I have not received any notice

Haji Abdus Sattar Haji Ishaq Seth (West Coast and Nilgiris Muhammadan) It was delivered to the Chief Whip

Mr. President: Was any notice given to the President

Haji Abdus Sattar Haji Ishaq Seth: Yes Sir

Mr. President: I have not received it. I would draw the attention of the Honourable Member to paragraph 50 of the manual of Business [Rule 11 (2) and Standing Order 22]. Notice of an adjournment motion shall be given before the commencement of the sitting on the day on which the motion is proposed to be made to each of the following

(1) the President,

(2) the Member of the Government to whose department the motion relates, and

(3) the Secretary

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: It does not mean that I should hand it to the President in person

Mr. President: Has the Honourable Member given notice to the Member of the Government

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: It has been given to the Chief Whip

Mr. President: It seems nobody has received it

Haji Abdus Sattar Haji Ishaq Seth: The practice is that the notice to the President and the Secretary is given in the Secretary's room. And the notice which was meant for the Honourable Member in charge of the Department was handed over in the Official Whip's room. All the motions which you have just now read out were handed over either to the Secretary personally or sent to his office room. When the notice of this adjournment motion was taken, the Secretary was inside your room and therefore it was left on his table and the notice for the Honourable Member was given to the official Whip. Probably, it is lying on his table and here is the copy of it

Mr. President: I can read out this notice, but the difficulty is that we won't be able to have the correct facts on both sides just at the moment. I therefore propose to take it up tomorrow

MOTION RE THIRD REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON 'BREITON WOODS AGREEMENTS

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan (Finance Member) Sir, I move

"That this Assembly having considered the third report of the Committee on the Bretton Woods Agreements do hereby approve India's continued membership of the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development"

As you are aware, Sir, I took over charge of this department only about 50 hours ago. In ordinary circumstances I would have requested this House to postpone discussion of this motion, but as I had the privilege of sitting on the other side—and I am not yet quite sure which side is better—and listening to the debates that have taken place in the past on this very subject, I felt that it would be wrong of me to allow this House to waste any time and not consider this matter which is indeed of very great importance. Honourable Members of this House are aware of all the arguments that have been advanced in favour of this and against it, and it is not my intention on this occasion to traverse the same ground. I will as briefly as possible place before the House the case for the acceptance of the motion which I have the honour to move on this occasion.

Sir, you will remember that on a previous occasion this Assembly adopted a motion accepting the recommendation contained in the second report of the Committee which was to this effect:

"That Government should take advantage of every possible provision in the Articles to postpone payment of the subscriptions due to the Fund and the Bank till the last moment, but if after consultation with these institutions it became necessary to take a final decision before the Assembly meets again Government should summon the Committee and a decision should be taken in consultation with them, the Committee being specially summoned for this purpose."

Sir, the Committee was informed and Government found that there was no provision in the Articles of the Bank or the Fund whereby the postponement could take place without India being disqualified. At that time the demand was for payment of 2 per cent of the contribution on or before 24th August if India was to continue to possess the qualification which was required. The Committee recommended that that amount should be paid and therefore this 2 per cent of the subscription which came to 8 million less 40,000 dollars, which had already been paid in U.S. dollars was paid before the 24th August 1946. On the 19th June Government were informed by the International Bank that it would start operations on the 24th June and were asked to make the following payments:

One payment I have already referred to. The other payment which Government were asked to make was 3 per cent of the subscription in rupees on or before the 25th November 1946 and a further 5 per cent in rupees on or before the 25th November, 1946, formal demand for which would follow later. It will be seen from the report of the Committee that the Committee decided that they would not feel justified in sanctioning this further demand without the matter being placed before the Assembly and the Committee recommended that a special session of the Assembly, irrespective of the political conditions that may prevail in the country, should be summoned before the 10th November. I am glad that it was possible to summon a session of this Assembly long before the time which was specified by this Committee, and now in accordance with the recommendation of the Committee Government have taken the first opportunity of coming before the House and seeking its sanction and approval to the continuation of the membership of Government in these organisations.

[Mr Liaquat Ali Khan]

I stated in the beginning that the object of this motion is to obtain, as was suggested by the Committee, the sanction of this House, but the motion has been so worded that we are asking the approval of this House not only to the immediate requirements of 8 per cent which we have to make, but for a declaration of its policy with regard to these international organisations. I personally feel that it is not very nice that we should keep this matter in suspense and every time when a demand is made we should come forward and say that we should pay so much, and postpone the final decision to some future date. It is really a matter which should be decided once and for all by this House, whether or not India is to continue as a member of these international organisations. And here I want Honourable Members to look at this problem only from the point of view of India's interests and of no other interests. Those of the Honourable Members who had occasion to listen to the debates in the past would recollect that it was suggested that we should not commit ourselves unless the question of sterling balances was settled. Now, Sir, this argument would imply that really speaking it was in the interest of the United Kingdom that India should join these international organisations. I want the House to divorce that idea from their minds, whether it is in the interest of U.K. or whether it is not. That should not be our consideration when we are discussing this motion. Our consideration should be whether it is in the interest of India or whether it is not in the interest of India. Much as we have sympathy for U.K. and all other countries of the world because India's hospitality is well known, yet I believe in the proverb that charity begins at home, and I must look to the interest of my own country first and to the interest of the rest of the world thereafter. Therefore Sir I think my Honourable friend Mr. Mann Sirdar has been the greatest advocate of this proposition that we must settle this question of sterling balances with United Kingdom before we take any final decision in this respect. I think he is right to a certain extent. But at the same time as I have stated just now, we should not really adhere to this position unless it can be shown that by our not joining this Fund and the Bank we could put a lever on the United Kingdom. I am afraid from the little examination that I have been able to make of this matter I do not see any connection between the two. I know that Honourable Members of this House feel very strongly with regard to our sterling balances. I can assure them that the Government of India today feel as strongly about these sterling balances if not more than Honourable Members of this House.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil (Bombay Central District, Van Muhammadan Rural)
As urgently

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan: We know that these sterling balances have been accumulated through the sacrifices through the trials, sweat and tears that the peoples of this country have gone through and we cannot be unmindful of the interest of these millions of people who have been responsible for making the position of this country as a creditor country. With regard to this matter I would like to tell Honourable Members of this House, and I am sure they will be glad to know that the Government of India have been pursuing this matter with great vigour and I am able to relate to you that His Majesty's Government are as anxious as we are that this matter of sterling balances should be settled that negotiations should be started as soon as possible. I am not using this expression 'as soon as possible', as a bumper and this expression has not the same meaning as it had in the past. When I say 'as soon as possible' I mean not the meaning of the bureaucratic language but I mean the straightforward meaning which you can place on these words. I am unable at this stage to indicate any definite date. But Honourable Members may rest assured that not a moment will be lost by the Government of India in starting negotiations with regard to this matter of sterling balances, and here, I would like to repeat once again that we are sensible, we know how these sterling balances have been accumulated and we shall see that India's interests are safeguarded and justice is done to India. I think with your permission, Sir, I would like to quote the points which were raised from the speeches and the note of my friend Mr. Manu Subedar because that in fact is the fear, and that in fact is the position of those who are opposed to our joining this international Fund and this Bank. Sir, the apprehensions that were expressed in the Previous debates and as I have said just now particularly by Mr. Manu Subedar who has in his Note of Dissent in the third report of the committee clarified his position are really in respect of membership of the Bank more than in respect of membership of the Fund. But even here after weighing the pros and cons we consider that we should continue our membership. I would not like to waste the time of the House by reading out in detail the extracts from the report or the Minute of Dissent. I can briefly put the point of view of my Honourable friend Mr. Manu Subedar. Firstly his objection is that he feels rather uncertain about the future of these organisations. His fear is based on our past experience of such organisations. He fears that the position of these organisations may be like U.N.R.R.A. or the League of Nations and we may suffer loss and these organisations may not be able to achieve all that is claimed for them. In this respect I would like to say that if we are interested and I hope we are, in the rehabilitation and the prosperity of the world at large because I am sure no Honourable Member of this House would deny that our prosperity will depend on the prosperity of the rest of the world if he believes that it is necessary to help in the rehabilitation of these countries which have been devastated on account of the last war if it is necessary in the interest of economic advancement of all the countries including India that those countries which are today in a deplorable condition should be brought up, then I submit Mr. President we should be prepared to take that risk. I am of the opinion that India cannot keep itself aloof from the economic repercussions in other parts of the world. If economically the other countries are bankrupt we cannot hope to prosper. It is absolutely essential that our trade should be on a very large scale with other countries and we cannot hope to achieve that unless those other countries are economically in a position to carry on trade with us.

The second fear that was expressed by my Honourable friend was that this money will be spent on rehabilitation of European countries only. I hope my Honourable friend will correct me if anywhere I put a wrong interpretation on what he has said. On that point Mr. President the object of this Bank is two-fold. Firstly to help in the rehabilitation of those countries which have been devastated on account of the war and secondly to assist those countries which are industrially backward. So it is not a question that will concern only those countries which were affected during the war. I believe and I think I am right that even those countries which are economically backward will be entitled to receive help and loans from this Bank.

The third point which was raised on previous occasions was that as we have got such large sterling balances— I think the value of which today is something like £700 crores as far as India is concerned we shall not need any loans. I would not agree with my Honourable friend if he thinks that it is possible for India to get this money either in lump sum or in a very short time. I think with the greatest amount of optimism it would be wrong to presume that I feel that with the industrial expansion of India which is absolutely necessary, the settlement which may be arrived at with regard to these sterling balances, the repayment will have to be done in instalments and I feel that the instalments which may be fixed may not give us sufficient money to meet all our requirements of industrialization. Therefore Sir I do not think that we will be justified in assuming that India will not receive or will not require any help from the Bank for future industrialization.

Now, Sir there is another point which was raised with regard to the Fund. It is suggested that by joining this Fund and because the Fund refers to exchanges we shall be losing our sovereignty as far as the monetary exchanges are concerned. On that point I think my Honourable friend, Mr. Manu Subedar, has got greater experience and knowledge than I have. He would [Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan] agree with me that it would be in the interest of economic development of all the countries if there was some machinery by means of which exchanges of the currencies of various countries could be stabilized. I think it would be in the interest of every country, and when you are thinking of the good of every country in this world including yourself you will have to give up some of that sovereignty. It will not in fact be a question of giving up that sovereignty because every country that comes into this Organisation will have come after giving up that certain amount of sovereignty, and therefore it will be really like independent people joining in a free partnership, and therefore, Sir, seriously speaking I do not think that that is an argument which should deter us from entering this Bank.

There is another fear which has been expressed, that this Bank may go into liquidation because of the shady transactions that may be carried on by its executive, and I think when we put forward that argument what looms large before us is the example of some of the very small banks which have gone into liquidation in this country and have not been able to meet their obligations. But, Sir, I think the Honourable Members of this House will agree that the same argument cannot apply to an organisation like the one which we are discussing today. It will be in the hands of responsible people representing responsible Governments, and we are one of those who will be represented on the Board of this Bank. And therefore I do not think that this fear, that thoughtless transactions may land this Bank into trouble should deter us from following a line if it is the right line on other grounds. And apart from that, Mr. President, the conditions for advancing loans have been laid down and they are very stringent and I feel that on that point we should really not have unnecessary fear.

Taking everything into consideration and keeping in view the importance of the question of settlement of the sterling balances, I feel that there is a good case, a justifiable case for India remaining a member of this Organisation. On this occasion Mr. President I want the House to consider this question very carefully and I want this House to give its verdict on this matter not only with regard to the immediate payments which have got to be made but with regard to the whole policy—whether we should continue to remain a member or whether we should not, whether we should contribute and in future meet all the liabilities that are there or whether we should not—and therefore, Sir, the motion which I have placed before the House has been worded in the language in which I have moved it, and I hope that the Honourable Members will feel about this matter in the same way as the Government do. In other words, that they would feel that it is in the interest of India to join these international organisations. If this Honourable House is of the opinion that it is not in the interests of India, then I would request the Honourable Members not to vote for my motion. I want the Honourable Members of this House to vote on merits not on sentiments. Because after all we have got to take into consideration the question of the millions of our countrymen. I do not want that on this motion the votes should be cast because of the composition of this Government. I want that the House should really consider this question on its merits and that the House will find itself in agreement with us that it is in the best interests of India that we should join these international organisations.

Mr. President: Motion moved.

"That this Assembly having considered the Third Report of the Committee on the Bretton Woods Agreements, do hereby approve India's continued membership of the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development."

Mr. Manu Subedar (Indian Merchants' Chamber and Bureau, Indian Commerce) I have listened with interest to the statement made by the Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan, the Finance Member whom we all welcome on the Treasury Benches and whose presence as well as the expressions used by him—the patriotic and reassuring expressions used by him—inspire great confidence in us that in financial matters the affairs of our country are in very strong, stout and patriotic hands

On previous occasions when speaking on this subject, I was speaking with my back to the wall. I was speaking with the feeling that I was fighting a foreign octopus, a foreign government that was more interested in the welfare of their country than in the welfare of this country. I was feeling that the so-called mixed personnel of the Government of India was drifting and that the real direction of affairs came from London—that in these financial matters at all events London gave the instructions and London's representative in the British Finance Member in this House, followed those instructions regardless of the fact that this country's interests were wrongly involved and were sacrificed.

Now, Sir, that is not the case. Now we have every confidence with the Government which is there which is composed of popular representatives, of men of our choice, with men of our confidence, that this and other matters will be in safe hands, and whatever we say today is not necessarily a destructive comment, is not necessary in a spirit of controversy, but it is in the spirit of friendship with a view to help in very complicated and far-reaching problems. Indeed, Sir, the statement of my honourable friend himself shows that there is much more to this than the simple motion which he has moved. I regard this motion merely as this: Does this House have full confidence in this Government with regard to India's adherence or with regard to the exercise of powers which are inherent in the constitution of those institutions for withdrawal from them if the situation so arises? This House has absolute confidence and in that sense I am not going to oppose this motion.

Let me, however, explain the position of the numerous complications which arise. First of all, we are face to face with a very large question, a question of 17 to 18 hundred crores of rupees of this country's assets which were compulsorily removed to England, which are not being returned and on which no interest is being given to us. When so much of the assets of this country is—not quite in jeopardy but rather at least—held somewhere else against our wishes, is it right for this country to involve itself in an obligation of membership to these institutions which involve no less a liability than Rs. 320 crores. If, Sir, these assets were carrying interest, we would get every year a sum that would cover almost the whole interest charges payable by the Government of India in their budget. If these sums were made available earlier, it would betimes have been useful for the industrial purposes to which the Honourable the Finance Member referred. In other words, these matters have been held up and delayed by one excuse or the other. What is the excuse for the United Kingdom to say that it will not pay, that it will not even begin to pay, that it will not even start the negotiations. It may be possible to drop the curtain over the past in a more favourable atmosphere which we are all endeavouring to bring about. But this is really a very large issue. As I mentioned once before, the Rs. 1,800 crores is equivalent to 18 years net income of the Central Government of this country before the war. It is equivalent to about 25 years' trade balance of this country. These are not small matters, and if some of us felt worried, if some of us felt that it would be proper if India settled her own internal affairs first if India first got hold of the assets which have been removed, these assets which are the basic reserve for the currency of this country, if some of us felt not necessarily that we should not join but that we should defer, that we should delay till our own House was in order—at least it would be recognised that it was a sensible course, particularly when the decision to join was taken not by a Government responsible to this House.

Now what I wish to indicate is this: that even the foreign Government in that delegation which they sent to the Bretton Woods Conference took up a particular attitude that until and unless the sterling balance issues were definitely discharged, India would be in no position to join or finally decide with regard to her membership of these institutions. I have quotations from Sir Jeremy Raisman and Mr. A. D. Shroff. But I shall not waste the time of the House by going over the whole ground again. When the Bretton Woods Committee of this House first met in February, it emphasized—and this report was signed by a British Finance Member—

“In our view the final decision whether it would be to India's advantage to remain a member of the Bretton Woods institutions may be determined to a very considerable extent by the outcome of the negotiations which His Majesty's Government are committed to undertake with the Government of India on the subject of liquidation of sterling credits. If these negotiations are unduly delayed, it may be necessary for India to withdraw before these negotiations take place, because it may happen that India will be called upon under the agreement to undertake commitments which she may feel unable to shoulder in the absence of a satisfactory solution of the sterling credits.”

This same sentiment expressed on the 26th February, 1946 was reiterated by the Committee on the 17th April, 1946. We have to remember that India has not been able to start these negotiations or to get a satisfactory mention and further of the fact that the assurances which were sought from February have not been received from His Majesty's Government. I will read the assurance part.

Not only were no negotiations fixed but the assurances sought for as early as February, 1946 were not forthcoming, until the third report which we wrote on the 29th July, and where I am sorry I had to differ from my colleagues. Under these circumstances is it very strange that the position which I was taking up then was the position of the Government of India as was then constituted. It was that the representatives of the Government of India tried at the Bretton Woods Conference to induce the Conference to permit the new institutions that were being instituted to be used for the liquidation of England's debt to India. Did they succeed in this effort? They were foiled in this effort by the combination of British as well as the U. S. A. representatives at that conference. India's case was lost. Even the then Government felt bitter about it. This conspiracy between Britain and the U. S. A. representatives against India was continued thereafter in the Anglo-American Loan Agreement. In the Anglo-American Loan Agreement there are two clauses, clauses 6 and 10(c)—which are specifically antagonistic to the interests of India. This agreement was made behind the back of this country. No reference was made to the Government of India with regard to this agreement and the then Government of India, I am sorry to say, failed to intervene when they knew and were informed that something was being done which was prejudicial to the interests of this country. Not only with regard to the Fund and the Bank specific provisions were made that these particular debts owing to India by the U. K. should not be included, not only was that done, but in the Anglo-American Loan Agreement it was specifically provided that no part of the loan which was given by the U. S. A. to England should be used for the purpose of giving back the moneys which England was owing to this country. Not only that but more specifically it was provided that the manner in which these negotiations should take place and the settlements should be made should be that the debt would be divided into three parts—part of it would be immediately converted, part would be consolidated and part would be scaled down. It was provided that if at any time England wanted relief in the matter of interest charges on the loan which she had raised in the U. S. A. that relief was to be given only when England came to the U. S. A. with her hands free—that is to say after repudiation of whatever was due to India by way of capital as well as by way of interest. In other words this issue is not as simple as it looks and with all due deference to members of the Government, who are the most prominent men and chosen leaders of the people of this country may I humbly point out that this is a financial chess game and there is a pitfall. There is a specific pitfall in which more powerful interests are stampeding this country into a position which it will not otherwise take and more powerful interests are conspiring in order to do harm to this country and it is my duty, more specific duty, now with the Government as now constituted to point this out to the best of my ability

On every occasion this country has been called upon to take hurried decisions with regard to the Bretton Woods institutions. We have been jockeyed or thrust into these decisions. In the first instance we were told to join up immediately, otherwise we would not be an original member. Then we were told that we would not get a representative to attend these institutions and that they would be kept out. Now we are told that we would be defaulters if we came out. Let me put the point of view of other countries, as they are deciding on these issues.

Did the U. K. in spite of the glib talk rush into the decision to join these institutions? The objective of the U. K. was a very large loan from the U. S. A. for this Dollar Loan Agreement; the late Lord Keynes and Lord Halifax had to wait with their hats in hand for more than six months. This Dollar Loan Agreement came about on the 6th December 1945. On the 13th of December Parliament met and not only approved of the Anglo-American Loan Agreement but also approved of England's membership in these two institutions and, generally, I think, of the Union Trade Organisation which was being set up. In other words England had a particular objective. As soon as that objective was achieved, she joined these institutions but not till then. We also have and have had—and on this there is no difference of opinion on either side of the House—one singular and principal objective, namely that with the creditor status which has been forced on India involuntarily, with the money which they have taken away in the course of five years from this country at very great sacrifice on the part of this country, there should be no uncertainty about these moneys. These moneys are badly wanted as currency reserve and in order to deal with the stability of internal prices they should be forthcoming and every thing should be in order before we go into these institutions. This is the point which we have always urged and which I still urge on the Government, not in the form of immediate withdrawal or in any other way. As a matter of fact the Committee themselves wrote in the first report that a situation might arise in which this country may have to withdraw from these institutions.

By way of this Anglo-American Loan the U. K. got from America no less in amount than 1,466 crores of rupees. The U. K. then contributed 2,600 million dollars, which is equivalent to about 800 crores of rupees, in other words the whole of the contribution to this Fund and Bank, so far as the U. K. is concerned, arises out of a loan which she was able to raise. It does not arise out of any basic money or reserve which the U. K. people hold. It comes from outside and it is disposed of outside. It is a singular point to note that the U. K. regarded the membership of these two institutions—which was opposed by large sections in the Parliament itself—as a sort of price to pay for the loan which she was receiving, that the international enthusiasm was not there, that it was purely a calculating financial game.

Take Russia, another large country which is also after a large dollar loan. Russia is not thinking of joining these institutions unless and until she gets the dollar loan. Take Australia and New Zealand. These two Empire countries have kept away from these institutions and are only attending them by means of a representative observer. There is nothing which finally determines India's attitude towards international affairs, towards these particular institutions. It is simply a question of judging which is the best moment. Is the best moment after we have put our sterling matter issue right or is it now? All the same I commend these ideas to this Government in order that they may consider them if and when the occasion arose.

[Mr. Manu Subedar]

What has annoyed me throughout the last 12 months is the amount of persistent propaganda, persistent anti-Indian propaganda which has come from the U. K. We challenged it in this House and Sir Archibald Rowlands was not able to deny that certain semi-official propaganda was sanctioned by the Treasury officials of the U. K. These pin-pricks and propaganda have been frequently sent down and I am sorry to say that the Indian press has given them an unworthy circulation, creating a sort of feeling that Indian money was as good as gone and that Indian claims were false and exaggerated and that something should be done. I want to mention this specific propaganda because, whatever position our government takes up on this issue, it is their duty and I shall request them most earnestly to counter this propaganda, to put India's case forward, which is a robust case and a good case, but it has never been put forward—the previous financial authorities had no interest in weakening the case of their own country against India. It is now only, and in the hands of my honourable friend, Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan, that we can confidently hope that such case as India has got will be put forward, that such wrong propaganda which is coming out will be put right. I had to take enormous trouble to counter some of this propaganda. I recall the very bold interview which Sardar Patel gave on this issue, in which he said that any Indian who talks of scaling down these sums which were taken from the blood and tears of the population of this country was a traitor to this country. It was the only effort of this kind, but it was an isolated effort; these were not the efforts of the then government of the country, the then government of the country was more interested in doing India down than in collecting the just dues and monies which were owing to India. What was this propaganda? Mr. Churchill, speaking in the parliamentary debates said that India was saved from the Nazis and from Japan. I have got the quotation here but I will not take up the time of the house reading it—in other words he said “Is there no consideration for all this? We did this for you, you gave us so many commodities worth about 1,800 crores. What does it matter? Call it off.” Mr. Churchill is a sinking sun in the world, he no longer counts, he lives in the 18th century, he is an ally of Kipling where he should go now. Nobody takes Mr. Churchill seriously in his own country now, but I am sorry that Mr. Dalton, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, did not on that occasion get up and say that this was not the official view of His Majesty's Government. On the contrary, Mr. Dalton has very recently made the declaration which I will bring to the notice of my honourable friend the Finance Minister in which he says that he knows of no misunderstanding between Britain and the United States as regards Britain's obligation under the Anglo-American Loan Agreement, particularly in regard to Britain's forthcoming negotiations in settlement of the sterling balances with India, Egypt and other countries. In other words, instead of assuring us and giving us the assurance which we sought from the government of the day at that time in February, 1946 that these debts were honourably incurred and they would be honourably repaid, the Chancellor of the Exchequer of the United Kingdom in his recent visit—17th September—actually says that he will carry out in the negotiations which are going to take place with India the understandings and the undertakings and the obligations of the United Kingdom under the Anglo-American Loan Agreement. May I know whether our government have considered what these implications and obligations involve? I have already made reference to clauses 6 and 10 of those agreements which are highly pernicious, highly objectionable, from the point of view of India. It is true Sir Archibald Rowlands said that India is not bound by this agreement to which he was no party, but England contends that she is bound by it and England is about to negotiate with us. Let our government gather up all its strength and give a punch in the nose to the United Kingdom statesmen who want to impose on India obligations which they incurred behind our back in their negotiations with the United States. They incurred those obligations for their own interests, they wanted a big loan and they got this loan and this was part of the terms which the United States imposed on the United Kingdom, and we are going now to be saddled with the full implications of these obligations.

The other point was that India had overcharged and profiteered. This is one of the issues which the Parliamentary Committee themselves have disposed of, and I am glad that in recent months nobody has said that India had overcharged. On the contrary, what are the facts? The tea which the United Kingdom population had during the last five years of the war was purchased at controlled prices in India between five and a half annas and eight annas—it was better tea, it was big leaf which we did not get in this country. Not only tea, but hides, jute, rubber, mica, manganese, groundnuts and numerous other articles were all taken up at controlled prices, so that the Indian producers got less. Not only His Majesty's Government and the allies, but the civilian population of the eastern group countries and of the United Kingdom got benefits out of this at our expense. After that, it is certainly remarkable if any country representatives can claim that India had overcharged them and the sterling balances represent an element of profiteering.

Now, Sir, we were told that Britain could not pay because they have no ability to pay. There again this argument was made much of until some of us pointed out that Britain had considerable assets in this country. In my country, when a debtor wanted to plead that he could not pay, he brought whatever he had and put it in front of the creditor and said "I have with great difficulty collected this. Please take this, and now consider some delay, some relief with regard to the balance." Did the United Kingdom do this? Did they ever have the decency to consider that vast British assets still exist in India itself and that it was just and right that these assets should be liquidated and handed over in discharge of the debt which was fastened on this country? Some of these assets are being sold now, and I am sorry to say that the capital realised in respect of these assets is, on account of the neglect of the Government of India, being worked off against the current liability of England for goods which she buys from here.

The question of scaling down was boosted so much that some of our own men, fifth columnists of India, who were under the dominant influence of Britishers in this country, actually came out with the idea that England cannot pay and let us give away 200 or 400 crores out of this money. Some of the so-called financial press of this country, I am sorry to say, was not independent or patriotic enough to take the right line, and some of the so-called economic press of this country also came out with this weakening idea—let us give away something. To which country were we trying to give away? We are here suffering from inflation, high prices, famines, floods, strike fever, unlawful activities on a scale unprecedented—and this poor country was being asked to give away nothing less than 200 or 400 crores merely because it was British propaganda. Now, it is the duty of our government to counter this propaganda. Is the United Kingdom a pauper country? Is it not in the forefront of all the European countries today in prosperity? Has it not already built up an export drive beyond their own expectations? Are they not already flourishing in a measure in which it would be ages before we bring up our country to that level? Is it right and just that arguments of that type ought to be put forward at any time? I expect that our Government and the stout hearted men of our Government who have taken charge of the finances of the country will never stand any nonsense of this kind from any quarter.

Then, Sir, there was another ramp in connection with this which I would like to bring to the notice of this House and of the Government. That was at the hands of the industrialists of this country. Now, Sir, I wish well of the industrialists so long as they remain within their proper sphere but no industrialists could be allowed to interfere with the larger affairs of the country in a manner in which some of these fellows try to do. What was the driving force to them? Some of them were very anxious to bring some machinery and they wanted dollars. The British Government by a whispering campaign had created dollar scarcity artificially for this Government. I have shown in the third report, which I will not read and waste the time of the House but I will commend to all friends here to read a portion of that third report made by me in which I am showing how India's dollar position was and how we were artificially denied the use of those dollars, so much so that when men who spend here on their livelihood something like Rs. 100 a day, when they went to America they got two or three dollars a day. In other words, artificial scarcity of dollars was created by a whispering campaign amongst British officials of the Government of India and the industrialists outside who were denied even little things like small machinery which they wanted—they came out with the lamp—let us joint this bank and fund and also scale down the sterling balances if we get dollars immediately. In other words, the sterling balances belonging to the masses of this country were to be scaled down in order to meet the convenience of the short sighted industrialists who merely wanted then dollars. Sir, these short sighted men did not consider,—just as the Honourable the Finance Minister himself in his opening remarks—I trust that my Honourable friend will forgive me for saying so, that there are other means of getting dollars than merely from the bank, the new institution which is being instituted. That bank has very strict conditions, as my friend mentioned. I am not sure whether India will be eligible for loans from the bank. Anyway there are other means of getting dollars from what we may call the normal banking channel of the U S A. I had a talk with important American bankers and I pointed out to them that we had no debt owing to anybody outside. We had considerable assets in the United Kingdom. I asked—don't you consider us a fit and proper party to borrow from America for our immediate purposes so long as we spend the money in America for equipment and he said—Not only would I consider you fit but I would be most anxious to give such advances to India. In other words the immediate dollar need could be met by other means but did the Government of the previous day, their predecessors, did they ever try to negotiate with the United States for a free loan from the normal channel? They would not. Why? Because they wanted to create an artificial scarcity of dollars in this country in order to get the industrialists worked up, in order to get them to support Britain's proposals with regard to the scaling down of the sterling balances as well as with regard to the membership of these two institutions.

Now, Sir, I was told by an official whom I will not name, as he is not here to answer me, "we could join this bank. You say it is an international experiment and might fail. We will guard ourselves by taking as much loan as our subscription is." Sir, I listened to him and I laughed just as some of my friends are laughing here. This cannot safeguard India. A solvent debtor has got to pay even when the creditor institution fails. And then, Sir, Sri Chintaman Deshmukh was with us on the last occasion. I have great regard for him and I feel that he means well. He said we have got a provision for coming out of this institution any time we like and a mere intimation in writing to our representative in the U S A. would do the trick and any obligations which the bank may incur from that date will not be binding and we shall give instructions to our representative to see that our resignation is handed in as soon as loans were proposed which in our view would not be forthcoming and which would be risky and dangerous loans. I think this is a device which we could still use if the occasion came. My Honourable friend mentioned which other countries would borrow—the war ravaged countries whose capacity to pay is limited by the fact that the destruction caused by the war cannot be replaced by human agency for a century and also by the fact that in their own country there is no settled government. Take China. I have great feeling for the Chinese people. I would like to help but there is some difficulty. Take Greece, the pet of Mr. Churchill, for whom he would try to get vast sums. As a matter of fact the United Kingdom, even when they had no money to pay us, gave a free gift of ten million sterling to Greece only about three months ago. Greece is in the throes of difficulties. So also is France, between communists on the one hand and the other parties on the other. The Polish people can be hardly regarded as settled down. Italy is in a horrible condition politically. It is these countries whom you would select for giving your money. I say that there is a certain amount of risk involved in these international experiments and we may take the risk fully when our own money is freed but whether we should take the risk now is a matter on which I must say, with all respect, I differ from the Honourable the Finance Member.

Now, we were told that India would default if we did not pay subscriptions now. If we remain members, naturally we pay the subscription and rather than be called defaulters we would come out of the bank for the time being without any serious harm but this defaulting idea as applied to India is again very funny. When we were owing England sterling loans, my friend K. T. Shah raised the issue and rightly too whether some of these loans were rightly chargeable to India and whether we could not refuse some of them. Immediately there was a hullabaloo and a suggestion was made that India was trying to default and to repudiate public debt but the same United Kingdom did not pay war debts incurred in the previous war to the United States. Germany took enormous sums both from America and the United Kingdom after the last war and did not pay one pie. In other words other countries could do these things and nothing happens. It is poor India who is always pointed out with the finger. India is the culprit when there is any question of defaulting. India cannot suit her own convenience or judge her own time to go and join these institutions.

Now, Sir, the motion before the House involves not only the bank but the fund. Many things would have to be done about the fund and I am not sure of what has been done. In view of what the Honourable the Finance Member said I would not ask him to give an explanation straightaway or make a statement but I do think that before the close of the session he should take a special occasion to enlighten some of us on these points, either in the House or outside.

Sir, the position is that India is a highly inflated country. Our prices have risen from 100, roughly speaking, to 300. The American prices have risen from 100 to 143 and the English prices have risen from 100 to 174. In this situation is this the best time to fix external parity as my Honourable friend said? He said: Is it not an advantage to have a mechanism for fixing the exchanges of the world? I admit it is an advantage, but if I have a choice between internal stability and foreign exchange, I would not hesitate for a moment that it is internal stability which I want, because it is the inflation in India which is the papa and mama of all the strikes and of all the economic distresses. I would say, in so far as economic distress could lead to lawlessness, even the lawlessness from which the country suffers is due to high inflation. The welfare of the poor wage-earner, of the man with fixed income, the welfare of your vast body of teachers and State servants and others is a matter of some importance, and I want to get internal stability of this country first. It is worth while to pay something for this.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad (United Provinces Southern Divisions, Muhammadan Rural). Even sterling balances!

Mr. Manu Subedar: You speak when your turn comes.

Now, Sir, on what basis are we going to fix the par of exchange which we are required to fix some time, I think, in the middle of December? Are we going to fix it on the existing gold prices in the United States, in India and in the United Kingdom? According to the prices at present prevailing for gold in the United Kingdom and in the United States, those are not the prices of free gold, those are the prices on which the Government buys but it does not sell, though I do not understand how the British Government gave to Australia no less than 26 million sterling during the last 12 months in gold. Anyway, the price of gold as defined in the United States is 35 dollars an ounce and in the United Kingdom it is £8-12-6. According to these prices, the gold, apart from the cost of transport, insurance, etc., would be roughly half the price of gold ruling in this country. Are you going to assume that your prices shall be as high as they are now, namely, from 100 to 300 and still threatening to rise? Are you going to assume that price level as permanent? Are you going to bring down the value of gold in this country to half of what it is now and then fix the par of exchange or in what way are you going to fix it? What is the provision which you are making with regard to these internal prices? Government's own policy with regard to the exchange control, capital control and several other kinds of controls is not yet finally settled. It is still undetermined. Meanwhile, the price levels of different countries are different. I could not trade with the world if my prices are very high everybody can sell to me but I cannot sell to anybody. This is the position which we have to consider.

Sir, I pointed out to the previous Finance Member and I point out to our friend, the Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan now, that this Government does not even possess full information about the exchanges. While we are trying to set up and, as a member of the Monetary Fund, to have complete control over the exchange, we do not know who buys how much exchange and for what purpose except in the matter of dollars and hard currency, where the Reserve Bank is exercising a very strict control. But with regard to other purposes, as I pointed out before, the Britishers are selling off capital goods here and they are converting the money realised by them into sterling. This money is not falling into the hands of the Reserve Bank, it goes to the Chartered Bank and is set off against the trade bills which the Chartered Bank has received in connection with current transactions.

And lastly, and this is very important, there is a certain amount of speculative activity in the field now. Speculation is the bane of society. My Honourable friend who wants to abolish all speculation has got the just and correct instinct, but I think even if you cannot abolish it, you can certainly check it and there is no field in which speculation can play greater havoc than in the field of exchange. And yet this Government has not yet woken up to their full difficulties and responsibilities in this matter and I commend these ideas to them. My Honourable friend Dr. John Matthai very acutely and shrewdly sent a circular round to the Chambers of Commerce and others to give them ideas as to what should be the par of exchange. He may have as well sent round the Finance Secretary into the Connaught Circus and instructed him to ask every passerby as to what his idea was of the par of exchange. No useful information will be received by this Government, in my opinion, by this method, though of course, technically it was befitting a democratic government that they were trying to take people into their confidence.

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir (Nominated Non-Official) Was not your opinion asked for?

Mr. Manu Subedar: It was asked for but they have not yet received it; they will have it when they want it.

Now, Sir, Dr. Dalton has recently said—and this is another thing which I must put to the Honourable the Finance Member—what steps have Government of India taken to increase the gold resources of the Reserve Bank? If you are going into this Fund and if you are going to accept dollar or gold as the standard by which you will stand and through which you will defray all your obligations incurred in the course of trade or capital movements, how much gold resources should the Reserve Bank have? In my opinion what they have is very meagre. What steps have the Government of India taken in this direction? Dr. Dalton, the Chancellor of the Exchequer of no less a country than the United Kingdom with all this dollar loan in its pocket, is still worried about this very point. He says

"As we move into a period when sterling will once more become freely convertible in respect of current trading, we shall need large reserves of gold and dollars. We must, therefore, keep such reserves well built up now, even at the cost of continuing deliberate and sometimes severe restriction on imports."

Now, Sir, if a country of the order of the United Kingdom is worried on this point, is it not right that the Government of India should itself take some steps? Are the Government aware that all those little shopkeepers who have made money during these times on account of the scarcity of goods are ordering recklessly? They are ordering anything, anyhow and at any price because they have the money in the Bank. Now, if these chaotic conditions continue, have Government realised what the position of India would be as a member of the Fund into which we are going. I do not want to say it in any nasty or sarcastic spirit. I am sure the Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan will take very prompt steps to have all these issues cleared and brought before him and I am sure he will take decisions which are in the highest interests of this country. Now, Sir, what is wanted in this country is the stabilisation of internal prices and then to bring them down a little. That, in my opinion, is of much more overwhelming importance but that cannot be done until we are through that sterling balance issue, because the bulk of the sterling balances are the basic reserve against our currency. In any case, Sir, as the Honourable the Finance Member has mentioned to us, very early steps are being taken in order to negotiate with the United Kingdom, one thing is satisfactory. It was Mr. Molotov who said at the beginning of the United Nations conference that he wanted to hear the voice of free India. It is the voice of free India which Mrs. Vijayalakshmi Pandit and Mr. Chagla, with whom I had the privilege of long friendship, it is the voice of free India in the shape of these persons that has made itself felt in international fields. I am not opposed to India participating in international institutions, on the contrary, I am a great enthusiast for it. I feel that in due course, and in due time, India will take her place according to her size and conditions and not be tied to the apron strings of the United Kingdom as in the old days, but freely and independently. Nothing makes me more happy to feel than the fact that no more deputations from this country will be headed by Englishmen, no more deputations of the kind which we had in the last and most disastrous one, the Waugh deputation which went to America and got us a settlement which was not a settlement, even Shylock could not have got more out of us than United States had made from her deal with India over the lease-lend transaction. I will not put before the House now, but before this session is over, the House will hear more about it, anyway it is a matter of profound satisfaction that no more Englishman will lead a deputation from this country and particularly that on the sterling balances personnel. In my country, generally it is the debtor who goes to the creditor's door and I hope my Honourable friend will be able to arrange accordingly. But if it is not so, then I take it that any deputation from India will be led by the stout and patriotic man whom we have got in charge of India's finances—I mean stout hearted. Sir, as I said we want to husband our own resources and to put the economy of this country right. This issue of international institutions is irrevocably bound up with not only the question of sterling balances but the issue of price levels in this country, the issue of the price of gold and the par value of the rupee in terms of gold and many other issues, and unless our Government had a complete picture, they would not be able to come to the right and the final decision. I trust therefore, that some of the ideas which I have placed in no spirit of controversy or carping criticism but as a help, as a humble help from one who has been watching these financial chess boards for many years very closely, I hope Sir, that some of the ideas which I have placed will be used by the Government when the time comes. I commend them to their attention.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai (Member for Industries and Supplies). Mr. President, Sir, I listened with very great interest to the speech which has just been delivered by my old friend and college fellow, Mr. Manu Subedar

[Dr John Matthai]

The main point that Mr Manu Subedar made this afternoon is the point to which he has referred more than once in the speeches and the reports which he has made in this House from time to time on the Bretton Woods questions. Now, Sir, I am entirely in sympathy with him as regards all that he said about the sterling balances proper. I think our delegates at the Bretton Woods conference put up an extremely able and extremely competent case for bringing international indebtedness arising out of the war within the scope of the International Monetary Fund. But their efforts did not unfortunately succeed for no fault of theirs. For the time being, we have got to accept that as a settled fact and the question therefore that we have to consider this afternoon is, taking the position which has been arrived at as regards the relation of the operations of the International Monetary Fund to the question of liquidating the international debts which were created by the war, taking that as an accomplished fact, are we or are we not going to ratify our membership of the International Fund and the International Bank? This, I want to say, as regards the sterling balances both as a member of the present Government and also as a student interested in these problems. I have, for many years past, had opportunities of examining with some care the demands which have been put up from time to time by the financial press in the United Kingdom regarding the scaling down of the sterling balances. Since I became a member of the Government I have had certain special opportunities for examining the data bearing upon this question of the scaling down of sterling balances. I do not mind saying that it is my considered opinion on such data as I have been able to examine, that by no conceivable process of reasoning can there be a demand for the scaling down of these balances and I think it ought to be the endeavour of whoever happens to represent this country in the forthcoming discussions to take as firm and as determined a stand as the facts warrant.

Mr Manu Subedar referred to the question of inflation and the hearing it has on the problem of determining the par value of our currency. I certainly agree with him that the question of internal level of prices is a question of primary and first class importance. We are of course rather at a disadvantage in tackling this question of internal level of prices because as Mr Manu Subedar pointed out, it is bound up to a very large extent with the problem of sterling balances. But apart from that, I feel and I realise deeply the enormous obligation that rests upon the Government of this country to apply whatever remedies lie in their power to cure the inflation which now prevails in the country, and unless we are in a position at any rate to check a further increase in the level of prices, unless we make up our minds to cut in and break this vicious circle, unless we do that, the social and economic problems that we shall be faced with in the near future would be almost beyond our powers to tackle.

Now, Sir, apart from these questions, I want today to tell the House the simple straightforward lines on which for myself I have come to the conclusion that in spite of all the arguments that may be urged against it, it is in our interest to ratify our membership of both these international institutions. I realise that when we go into the International Fund as a member we are facing some risk. We are going to do that with our eyes open. The risk is this that we are accepting a certain amount of restriction upon our freedom of action regarding adjustment of the external value of our currency. It is a restriction which conceivably may act to our detriment in certain circumstances. You will remember Sir, that fifteen years ago the industries of this country were up against very severe competition from abroad, and some of our leading industries were very nearly wiped out of existence. It was not merely our industries but our agriculture also was up against severe competition from abroad. You will remember that there was a time when we had to impose an import duty on wheat in order to protect the growers of wheat in the Punjab and the U P and a duty on rice from Siam and Indo-China in order to protect our rice growers. Suppose a time comes again when we are up against competition of this kind, when our industries are faced with severe opposition and our agriculture is also faced with severe competition. There are two remedies that are open to us in conditions of that kind. It is open to us to suitably adjust the external value of our currency, because in many cases it does operate as a safeguard against competition from other countries. The other remedy of course is protection. As regards adjusting the external value of the rupee as a means of safeguarding our industrial and agricultural interests, it may be admitted straightaway that certain real limitations will be placed upon us if we accept membership of the Fund. There is no getting away from that. But my answer to this question is this,—and I have given a great deal of thought to it. Suppose that kind of competition arises, that it continues for a prolonged period and continues on a scale which makes it difficult for us to carry on our industries and our agriculture at a normal level, I feel pretty convinced in my own mind that there would be a strong case we could put up before the International Fund for adjusting our currency on the ground that those conditions constitute what on any reasonable basis may be described as a fundamental disequilibrium. Suppose it was not a question of prolonged competition, but sporadic competition, competition that arises now here and now there, but does not last for a long period. Then obviously we have got this remedy of protection either by tariffs or by subsidies. I want to say a thing or two on that because that is a matter which is likely to provoke misunderstanding. It is in close relation to the proposal of an international fund that the United States of America have made the proposal for an international trade organisation. The two things hang together. As far as we are concerned, the position that we are going to take up is this.

We accept as an ultimate objective for this country free-movement of trade,—multilateralism as it is called, in matters of trade. As an ultimate objective we are prepared to do that because, as my colleague the Finance Member pointed out, world prosperity is prosperity that can be achieved only by the co-operation of all the countries concerned with it.

Supposing we have to do this, that is to say, we find ourselves faced with the question of giving protection to our industries in a time of acute competition, the line that we are going to take is this. As one of the backward countries of the world we hold that whatever our ultimate objective may be, during a transitional period, which may be short or long, we propose to reserve entirely our right to take whatever measures in the way of protection we consider necessary for the safeguarding of our industrial and agricultural interests.

Whatever assurances we may give at this international trade conference which is coming off next year in America, we are not going to surrender our right to take whatever measures may be required during the transitional period for raising the status of this country in economic matters so that it may approximate in time to the status of other countries of the world.

I may be told that I profess faith in free movement of trade as the ultimate objective and at the same time I want also a fairly extensive use of the expedient of protection, there is an obvious inconsistency and I may be told, if I put that forward in an international conference, that this is oriental duplicity. I want to say this. We are beginning to realise in the internal economy of a country that it is not merely an increase in the aggregate income of a country that makes for its prosperity, but also, the way that that increased income is going to be distributed, because it is only by a wider and more equitable distribution of the national income that you can create that high level of purchasing power which is the stimulus to all economic activity. That analogy in my opinion applies equally to international economics. You are not going to raise the standard of world prosperity by simply increasing the aggregate income of the world, what you have got to do if you want to achieve world prosperity in a reasonable period of time is to see that that aggregate income is fairly distributed among the various countries of the world. It is only on that basis that we can proceed to achieve all the objectives which international institutions of this kind have before them.

As regards the question of the Bank I want to say quite frankly that there are certain aspects of it which sometimes give me quite a degree of concern.

[Dr John Mattha]

Mr Manu Subedar rightly points out in the dissenting minutes which he has attached to the interim report that we are going to face a risk in case of our membership of the Bank in this way that if after a period of years when loans have been given to the devastated countries of Europe a situation arises somewhat similar to the situation which arose in Europe about 10 or 15 years ago when the loans granted to the European countries got frozen, then the reserve liability which we accept in respect of the Bank which would amount to somewhere about 105 crores of rupees, the Bank would be required to meet calls made on it as and when required. If these calls could be met in our own currency the position would not be too bad. But when calls are made on our reserve liability the provision is that those calls would have to be met in gold or in dollars or in any other currency which might be required by the Bank. I admit we are undertaking here a risk, but in spite of that I am prepared to go into the Bank for this reason. We are one of the original members of the Bank. I do not want to attach too much importance to the status of an original member, but at any rate it carries the right of our having an appointed as distinct from an elected director. It gives us certain privileges as regards the currency in which our funds in these institutions are held. But our greatest safeguard, it seems to me with regard to seeing that the affairs of the Bank are carried on fairly, is that we happen to be the holder of one of the largest quotas, and since voting power is related to quota, although we might not be able to play anything like a decisive part, our representatives would have an effective voice in determining the kind of operations in which the Bank might be involved. The main point about the Bank is this. Mr Manu Subedar raised the question why do you want to go into this Bank? Why don't you try and raise your loans in the ordinary way as businessmen would do? That is a possibility that we are entitled to consider and we ought to consider. But I was looking at the question in relation to the circumstances which prevail today in the United States of America. I do not know if my Honourable friend, knows that out of about six or seven European countries which had applied to the Export-Import Bank of America for accommodation, as soon as the Bank was organised and started operations these applications, either wholly or partially, were transferred from the Export-Import Bank to the International Bank because they considered that the International Bank was the proper financial institution for helping these countries. I am not speaking with any particular authority on that question, but I believe, as regards the Export Import Bank of America, that you cannot get a loan from the Export-Import Bank except on the basis of what they call a 'tied loan', in other words if you get a loan from the Export Import Bank in America you have got to spend that loan in America. That provision is perfectly all right as far as we concerned in the next few years, because if you want to get capital goods, for all your industries it is very likely that we shall have to go in a large measure to the United States of America. But it is conceivable that a time may come fairly soon when countries on the Continent of Europe could produce machinery of equal efficiency at lower cost than the United States of America. Supposing a situation of that kind arises, and it is extremely probable it may, then it seems to me it is much better that we go to an institution from which we can get accommodation which would be utilizable in any country of the world. I consider the positive advantage of this Bank is that it is a supplementary source of external finance of the highest importance and value to this country. We cannot afford any longer to be tied down to any particular country of the world for the capital goods that we want. We must be in a position to go to any country in the world where we can get the best equipment and the best skill on the best possible terms, and therefore unless you can get external finance of a kind which can be made available in any country of the world, you are not going to achieve the purpose that you have in view. I do not mean for a moment to say that all our requirements of external finance would be met in this way, but I do think it might provide us with a considerable supplementary source of external finance which is not to be despised.

My main reason in spite of all considerations to the contrary for finally coming to the conclusion that we should decide to join, is the provision of which Mr Manu Subedar seems to make light, regarding the right of withdrawal. It is possible for us simply by giving notice to withdraw from the Fund. As far as the Fund is concerned, I believe we can withdraw without any sort of continuing liability. We cannot withdraw from the Bank quite with that kind of facility because when you withdraw from the Bank you have got to accept a pro rata liability for the obligations which the Bank undertook up to the date of your withdrawal. That of course is a risk. The way I react to it is this. If at any time our representatives on the Governing Board and the Directorate of the Bank feel that things are moving in a direction which is likely to result in serious difficulties to the Bank then we should make it our duty to withdraw from the Bank. As regards the Fund if we find that the Fund is of little use to us, or that it is placing upon us an undue amount of restriction regarding our freedom of action in these matters, then we should withdraw. As regards the Bank again if we find that it is of little use to us, or that it is placing upon us an amount of liability which may land us in difficulties then also we should withdraw. If we do that, it seems to me the risk involved could be greatly minimized. I think, Sir, I have covered most of the points that are really relevant to the subject.

On this question of sterling balances there is one thing more I want to say and with that I resume my seat. My colleague, the Finance Member, has already stated the general view of Government regarding it. We are not by any means happy that the liquidation of the sterling balances was not brought within the purview of the International Fund, we are not by any means happy at the views which we find often expressed in the financial papers of other countries regarding the extent to which these obligations should be honoured. I think on behalf of Government I can give the assurance that we would do all that lies in our power to see that the fullest justice is done to India's rights. It would be our aim to see that as large a portion of these balances as possible is released as freely convertible currency in the shortest possible period, and that whatever balance is left should be funded over for as short a period as possible at a rate of interest which could be regarded as reasonable. Sir, I have no hesitation in asking the House to accept the motion before it.

Mr. Geoffrey W. Tyson (Bengal European). Mr President, this as you know is not the first time that the question of the Bretton Woods Agreements has come before this House. We devoted a considerable amount of time in the last Session to this subject and the Select Committee has held a number of meetings from the last of which emerged the third interim report. Although I had the honour to represent the European Group on the Committee, I was not able to attend the last meeting which produced this report and the minority vote by my Honourable friend, Mr Manu Subedar. But this debate does give me an opportunity of associating myself personally, and my group, with the major recommendations of the Committee. I think we all agree with the Honourable the Finance Member that it is a good thing that this Assembly should decide the issue of continuing membership of the Bank and the Fund finally once and for all, instead of the matter coming up periodically and being dealt with in instalments as has been the case up till now.

I and my colleagues in the European Group fully associate ourselves with the desire of the Honourable Mr Liaquat Ali Khan that so far as an irrevocable decision can now be made, it should be made. Furthermore, Sir, we take our stand on the principle, which I put forward on our behalf when this subject was first brought before the House some months ago, that India's membership of the Fund and the Bank should first, last and all the time be in the interests of India herself and not in the interests of India plus any one other country or group of countries. One has to remember, of course in that connection, as Dr. Mathai has pointed out, and as I think the Honourable the Finance Member pointed out also that membership of the Fund does imply a certain limitation of monetary sovereignty. But that limitation is no more and no less than that it will be voluntarily assumed by some 29 or 30 other countries who are adhering to the agreement. When the Committee had produced its second interim report—the one before the report which is now before the House—it laid down some fairly stringent conditions which it wished should be observed if India continued to be a member of the Fund. I think anybody who has read the third interim report will agree that those conditions have been fulfilled, and that in so far as the further payments of India's subscriptions to the Bank and the Fund are contingent upon the fulfilment of those conditions, then India is entitled, and the House is entitled to recommend the Government to go ahead and make the necessary payments with a clear conscience.

Mr Liaquat Ali Khan rightly stressed what we may call, one of the secondary aspects of this debate. I have already said that primarily India goes into the Fund as a measure of self-interest and self-protection. The Honourable the Finance Member emphasized quite early in his speech, that India's prosperity, that her monetary stability, that an increase in her national income and all the other various other manifestations of economic satisfaction were dependent upon a similar state of affairs generally prevailing amongst the other countries of the world. For that reason, quite apart from the reasons of self-interest, he said that constituted very good grounds for India making her adherence to the Fund and the Bank clear and unequivocal from now onwards.

I would like also by way of emphasis from the purely Indian point of view, to mention what my friend the Honourable the Finance Member probably already knows, to recall to the House that in a recent statement the Governor of the Reserve Bank predicted that India would probably have to apply for an increased quota under the Fund if her trade continued to expand and to enlarge at the rate which he envisaged. Well, there we have a cogent argument at the purely technical level which seems to me to be decisively in favour of making the decision for which the Government of India are asking us today.

It would, I suppose, have been imprudent to expect that we would get through a debate in this context without some sustained reference to the question of the sterling balances with which my friend, Mr Manu Subedar has dealt exhaustively on this and on previous occasions. In the circumstances, I would like, if I may, on behalf of my colleagues, to make it clear to the new Government which has assumed its seats in this House today, that we of the European Group, recognise fully and clearly that the future trade atmosphere—and it is that in which we are chiefly interested as representatives of what is mainly a merchant community—between the two countries depends to a very large extent upon a settlement of the question of the sterling balances—a settlement which will be practicable, that will be honourable and far-minded from the point of view of both countries. I have said before in this House, and I say it again for all my colleagues, that if a settlement possessing those qualities, can be arrived at—and to my mind there is no reason why it should not—it will do much to cement the commercial relations between the two countries in the years that lie ahead of us.

A great deal of apprehension, and not unnaturally, has been expressed about the implications of the Anglo-American Loan Agreement and their bearing upon the question of India's sterling assets. My honourable friend, Mr Manu Subedar, quoted today, as he has quoted before, clauses 6 and 10 of that Agreement. I would like to point out to him because he sees in clause 10 (a), (b) and (c) what I must assume he regards as a very real danger to India, that that paragraph of the Loan Agreement really only makes suggestions and recommendations for the general pattern of the settlement of accumulated war sterling balances. There is so far as I understand the position, nothing obligatory at all in that particular clause. What is obligatory is that His Majesty's Government undertakes to commence negotiations, within a certain specified time and in each case from the date of the signature on the Agreement, and Section 10 (a), (b) and (c) is merely a suggested pattern of the method by which the sterling accumulate war debts can be settled; and I think my Honourable friend, the Finance Member, and my Honourable friends Dr Matthai and Mr Manu Subedar will regard it as significant that in the admittedly much smaller case of Argentine there has been no question of scaling down the debt. So far as I know, no pressure was ever applied to the Argentine Government to scale down any part of the debt and certainly in the final draft of the Anglo-Argentine Agreement, as it has emerged, there is no provision for any scaling down. Quite apart from any moral or sentimental considerations India may take heart from that fact. Now, Sir, only a very brief reference in the course of debate has been made to some of the other ancillary aspects of the decision, if this House takes it, finally to adhere to the Fund and the Bank. Sir, certain important departures in policy are likely to take place in the future. My Honourable friend Mr. Manu Subedar drew attention to the fact that India will have to communicate to the Fund the external parity of the rupee by some date in December—I think the 12th or the 16th. He also drew attention to the fact that commercial sections of opinion had been invited to express their views to the Finance Department, and for once I find myself in entire agreement with him when he says that the method employed will not produce results of which the Finance Department could make any more than proximate use. Actually the invitation to individuals and associations, irrespective of their ability or qualifications, for the purpose of expressing opinions on the future of rupee parity has led, as my Honourable friend has pointed out, to a country-wide debate from which, he will agree with me, the honest merchant or the honest trader will not benefit at all. The man who has benefitted by this debate is the man who is building up a speculative position in rupees and sterling. I think there are two or three days left for the Finance Department to receive opinions, but I do entirely endorse Mr. Manu Subedar's request that sometime during this session this House should be given an opportunity to consider important matters such as the external parity of the rupee. There will also be the amendment of the Reserve Bank Act, Sections 40 and 41, or its abolition arising out of the agreement and various other matters which up to now have only been the subject of loose and somewhat informal debate. If we are later on to be given an opportunity of expressing our views on those aspects of the agreement which I have mentioned, which are only incidentally before the House today, I will not now attempt to state our case on matters which are largely technical in character but I will merely reiterate what I have already said, namely that we on these benches entirely support the decision of Government, if a decision it has to be, to adhere finally and once for all to the Fund and the Bank. We endorse the line of policy which has been indicated, namely that India's membership shall be operated in India's interests primarily and on behalf of my colleagues I commend this resolution to the House.

[At this stage Mr. President vacated the chair which was then occupied by Mr. Deputy President (Khan Mohammad Yamin Khan)]

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: Sir, there is a difference in the atmosphere in which this question was substantially debated last January and April and the atmosphere in which we are discussing it now but the merits of the case have not changed at all and I agree with the Honourable the Finance Member that the issue should be considered from one supreme but simple point of view and that is, is it in the best interests of this country to continue our membership of the Brettonwoods institutions? Mr. Deputy President, that was exactly the ~~test~~ that, speaking for myself, I put up before me to judge the merits of the case both in the month of January as well as in the month of April. I am glad that the point of view that I then pressed has now become unanimously acceptable. At that time the question of sterling balances was given much more importance than it deserved. The same thing is done today. Although I do not agree with the Honourable the Finance Member that this question has no relevance to the main motion that is under discussion, I will not say that it is so important relatively speaking, as to affect our judgment on the merits of the proposition that is before us. In fact I was led to consider that I should support the membership of India both with respect to the International Bank and the International Fund for the simple reason that it would help us in clearing our sterling balances. The position then was this. India had accumulated, as has been stated by my Honourable friend Mr Manu Subedar, huge sterling balances. It had two aspects then and it has two aspects now—financial as well as trade. Our representatives at the Brettonwoods institutions knew India's need, especially in the matter of expanding Indian industries. They wanted multilateral convertibility of a portion of the sterling balances. If England then was not willing for one reason or the other, there must be some agency or some mechanism by the use of which this could be secured. I submit, Mr Deputy President, that from that point of view these two institutions are the agencies with the help of which we could and we can secure what we want. India's need today is capital goods. India wants industrial expansion. India wants to import machinery. Now it is possible that India may not get machinery of the requisite quality in sufficient quantity from England. Are we to wait if we cannot get it from England, because England is not prepared? If that is the only way of getting a solution of our sterling balances, then there must be a complete stop to our industrial expansion. But the Articles of the Bank lay down that in the case of countries which are industrially less developed the Bank will come and help them in order to develop industrially. The Bank will help these and also countries which have suffered on account of war. In the Minute of Dissent which has been written by my friend Mr Manu Subedar he seems to be under the misapprehension that special regard is to be paid only to the reconstruction of the countries overrun by the war whereas I find from the Articles, that it is clearly one of the objects or purposes of the Bank to help "in the encouragement and the development of productive facilities and resources in less developed countries." And as regards the actual allotment of resources, in article 3 (1), it is laid down—

"The resources and facilities of the Bank shall be used exclusively for the benefit of members with equitable consideration—a phrase that has now become very popular for projects of new development and projects of reconstruction alike."

My submission is that if we fail to get any satisfactory solution of our sterling balances from England, we cannot wait indefinitely for the industrial expansion of this country. We must find out credit elsewhere. That private credit is not available or cannot be made available in the way in which credits from this bank are available has been made amply clear by the Honourable Dr John Mathai. If India wants to take her proper place in the international sphere, it is not enough that she should have it only in the political sphere. Trade is the source of all prosperity. More trade, more industry, more production and more employment, and the result is less poverty. Today our country is faced with poverty, ignorance, squalor, the three enemies as they were described by the Finance Member who was in charge of this country's finance in 1935. January. Although that Finance Member has gone, the enemies are still there. The only way in which we can fight them is to increase the prosperity of the country, by increasing the trade both internal and external, and we can only do that if we can increase production, and if we increase production we do increase employment. One of the objects of the fund and one of the objects of the bank also is full employment. That is not possible unless there is more industrialisation and more industrialisation is not possible unless India is equipped with necessary capital goods. In the course of the last six years, industrial plant in this country has not been kept up to date because it had probably no opportunity or could not possibly replace and repair some of its parts, owing to shortage of supply. That leeway has got to be made up, plus we want to advance further. If that is to be done, it can only be done as things stand today—by building heavy industries and if we want to have heavy industries we must import necessary material and necessary machinery from other countries. Why should we depend upon one country in this matter? We should take advantage of such machinery through the agency of which we can buy, where we can get the best and at a fair cost. Therefore from this point of view our membership is absolutely necessary. I agree that there is some risk, but in what banking is there no risk? In every banking enterprise

the risk is there, but at the same time if we go carefully through the provisions of the banks constitution as they are embodied in the final Act, I respectfully submit the risks are considerably lessened

As regards the membership of the fund, I find my friend Mr Subedar has not now the same intensity of objection which he had in last January, and in April. You cannot have foreign trade unless there is exchange stability and we know what want of exchange stability means. The history of Indian currency is enough proof how the masses have been ruined because there has been no stability of exchange. If we are to profit by experience, if we are not to discard experience as the wisdom of the unlettered, let us go to any place which secures stability of exchange and let us not be swayed by sentimental considerations. Let us consider this subject calmly and coolly and as was suggested by the Finance Member in the best interests of this country.

As regards the sterling balances the Honourable Finance Member I am sure may be knowing that during the Bretton Woods Conference the British representative Lord Keynes stated that 'when the end is reached and we can see our way into the daylight, we shall take it up without any delay to settle honourably what was honourably and generously given'. The point has been raised today as was raised in April and January last, and in all the meetings of the ad hoc committee, that clauses 6 and 10 of the Anglo-American agreement have prejudiced the Indian case. The position is very simple. If two men settle between themselves, that agreement is binding only on them. How can it bind me a third party? Therefore I do not attach any importance to whether the agreement was negotiated in my presence or behind my back. So long as I am not a party to it, I am not bound by it, and as was stated by the Finance Member in January very clearly, that there was no intention of sealing down whatsoever. Difficulties will arise. I know, in settling this question of sterling balances. The Honourable Finance Member may well remember that there are British owned assets in this country. When he goes there with his stout body and stouter heart, he may remember that there are British assets in this country. As regards an exact estimate of these assets, there is a difference of opinion. Mr Birla calculates them at £1,000 millions. The Statist of London calculated them at £1,100 millions roughly. The Associated Chambers of Commerce in their evidence before the Simon Commission gave an estimate approximately the same that has been given by Mr Birla. To take the most modest estimate which has been given by Professor Sheno in his latest book, 'The Sterling Assets of the Reserve Bank of India' it comes to £820 millions. The sterling balances, whatever they are today, and whatever they may be when negotiations actually start, the Honourable Member for Finance will, I am sure, have a scheme of priority as to how these balances should be cleared, whether he would put the taking over of the British assets as the first item or whether he would put the purchase of capital goods from England of such quality and in such quantity as the requirements of this country justify, or whether, if he agrees with—I cannot say Sir but Dr Ziauddin Ahmad, who is always enamoured of gold—would like to have it in gold—whether it is in goods or gold or in the form of assets, but both from the economic point of view and also from the political point of view if you ask my personal opinion, I would give the first priority to taking over the assets of those who are now opposing us both in appearance and in reality. It does not mean that we have any enmity against them. We have given them enough during 150 years, and if we sit down for really making up accounts, I do not know what huge sums will be found against them when a complete balance sheet is drawn up. But I do not want to refer to the past. But whatever assets they have now must be taken over because to allow foreign capital in one's country without any limitation and when there is no need for it is to invite political trouble if not further ill. Mr Deputy President, at the time of the third interim report when it was drafted we were assured by His Majesty's Government that they were very anxious to open negotiations. I am glad that the Finance Member today said that they would start as early as possible and he was good enough, lest he should be misunderstood, to explain that the phrase 'as early' meant as early. There are pressing problems which will not stand delay. In this country we have famine commission and the agricultural commission recommended certain schemes and every time those schemes have been shelved. It is not that we do not know how to frame schemes. The real difficulty is how to put it into action, how to translate it in deeds. In other words it really means how to get the material to implement the schemes. No scheme for the removal of Indian poverty can be conceived unless this main question of the sterling balances is solved. I therefore submit that as the Finance Member is conscious of the urgency of this problem he will tackle it and I am glad that he said that in spite of the composition of the Government he will solve it as befits this country. He said that poverty spreads, if one country is poor, the other countries of the world are bound to be poor. I would add simply that prosperity has no limits. If poverty is a crime prosperity is a virtue and I ask the Finance Member to enable us, poor masses to conquer poverty and secure for us an opportunity to be virtuous—prosperous. So far as he and I are concerned, I am learner. Help us to put on a little more fat. The other day in the press interview he said that his policy would be not to make the rich richer and the poor poorer. I entirely agree with him but that policy cannot be implemented by merely giving expression to it on occasions both irrelevant and irrelevant and as he said it is time for action, let him take any action which will remove poverty of this country. Let him take any action which will drive out the illiteracy of this country. Let him take any action which will remove the squalor. He will find that whatever may be the difference of opinion, whatever may be happening outside this House at least in this House he will have the unanimous support of every one of us. I hope that the way in which he has moved his proposition and the line which he has adopted in moving that proposition is bound to meet with general approval of this House and I am glad that the way in which this proposition has been framed finally disposes of this question. For the last nine months we have been agitating for it. At one stage we were almost inclined to move for withdrawal from the institutions and I almost fell a prey to the eloquence of my friend Mr. Mann Subedar but somehow or other my native commonsense got the better of my sentiment and ultimately I was able to persuade the gentleman from the South and also Dr. Zia Uddin who was always with me and our Chairman of that particular meeting, Mr. Neogy and we made this report and we saved membership and avoided default. I hope now, after, having secured approval the Finance Member, in fact, whole Government will act and go ahead and do what we expect of it.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: I was very delighted to hear from one of the members of the Treasury Bench that the stabilisation of prices should be one of the foremost aims of the financial policy of the Government of India. On the 16th February, 1932 I pressed that the stabilisation of prices should be the foremost aim of the monetary policy of the Government. At that time the Finance Member paid no attention to my request and I must acknowledge that I did not have a single supporter in the Assembly. My friend who is a trained economist will remember that before the war the prosperity of every country was judged by the favourable balance of trade. India had a very favourable balance of trade amounting to about 50 crores per annum before the war. After the last war Germany had a very favourable balance of trade but its currency broke down, it was on the verge of ruin. The condition of Germany and other countries in Central Europe forced the economists to think that the stability of exchange should be the foremost object of the financial policy of every country. This theory had cost us 213 crores in our efforts to stabilise the exchange at unnatural ratio. After a great deal of useless struggle about the stabilisation of exchange, it was set at rest in 1926 when the exchange was fixed at 1s 6d but a section was not satisfied and the struggle continued. In 1932 particularly after the publication of Macmillan's report, opinion was crystallised and they thought that the stabilisation of prices rather than stabilisation of exchange should be the foremost object of the financial policy of the Government I had been pressing ever since 1932 that the Finance Members were proceeding in the wrong direction. Sir George Schuster concentrated on 1s 6d ratio, and Sir J. Raisman and others thought that the stabilisation of the bank rate of interest is a question of foremost importance for the prosperity of the country and he really sacrificed all the resources of the country in his efforts to stabilise the bank rate of interest. This policy brought on inflation, prices rose very high and brought the country to the position in which it finds itself today. I am glad that the Government of India now think that the stabilisation of prices is an important issue. The prices are three times of what they were before the war and the price index is much higher than in America or the United Kingdom or any other country. Therefore we ought to make every effort to lower the price level. It cannot be done all at once. You must gradually bring it down to 150 and it must eventually be brought to a figure between 125 and 140.

Mr. Deputy President: The Honourable Member can continue his speech on the next occasion.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Tuesday, the 29th October, 1946.

THIRD INTERIM REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE BRETTON WOODS CONFERENCE AGREEMENTS

We were given an account by the Honourable the Finance Member Sri Eric Coates, of the developments which had taken place since we presented our second interim report on the 17th April 1946. In accordance with the recommendation contained in paragraph 4 of that report, which was adopted by the Legislative Assembly on the 18th April 1946, the Government of India, having been informed that the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development was likely to start making calls on the share capital towards the end of June, instructed its Executive Director to ask the Bank for the longest possible postponement of the date of payment in order that the final decision to continue membership of the Bank might be taken by the new Government in consultation with the Legislative Assembly. The Executive Director, after informal consultations, reported that no postponement was permissible under the Articles, and that non payment by the due date would inevitably be interpreted by the Bank as a default on the Government of India's obligations. On the 19th June 1946 the Bank informed the Government of India that it would start operation on the 25th June 1946 and asked for the payment of the following sums —

- (i) 2 per cent of the subscription (i.e. 8 million less $40,000 already paid) in gold or U.S. dollars on or before August 24, 1946
- (ii) 3 per cent of the subscription in rupees on or before November 25, 1946 and
- (iii) a further 5 per cent in rupees on or before November 25, 1946, a formal demand for which would however, follow later

2 We were assured by the Finance Member that the dollars required for the purpose would be made available from the Empire Dollar Pool, the effect of which would be a corresponding reduction in the sterling balances. He also informed us that His Majesty's Government had indicated that they believed that in the interests of a satisfactory and final settlement of the problem the negotiations on the sterling balances should be conducted with as representative an Indian Government as possible and that they would be ready to issue an invitation as soon as a representative Government was formed.

3 The alternatives before this Committee now are either

- (a) to authorise the payment of that portion of the subscription for which demand has been made, or
- (b) to instruct Government to withdraw from the membership of the Bank.
- (c) to continue membership but default in payment, thereby making India liable to suspension under Art. VI, Section 2 of the Articles of Agreement.

In the consideration of these alternatives we have the benefit of the advice of Sri Chittaman Deshmukh, India's Governor of the International Bank. The last named course we unhesitatingly reject for the reason that we are not prepared to recommend any course of action which is not in conformity with the dignity of India and might well affect her credit. As for the second alternative, we are not sure that we would be correctly interpreting the wishes of the Assembly in recommending withdrawal. In any case, we do not think it proper to take so important a decision ourselves.

4 The only decision we can, therefore, possibly take is to recommend to Government to pay that portion of the subscription without the payment of which India would be committing a default, namely the $7,960,000 which have to be paid on or before August 24, 1946 and thus we accordingly do. We do not wish, however, to take upon ourselves the responsibility of authorising payment of the remaining 8 per cent of the subscription which has to be paid by the 25th of November. We strongly recommend therefore that, irrespective of the political situation at the time a session of the Legislative Assembly should be called on or about the 10th November 1946 at the latest, in order to allow the Assembly to make up its mind finally whether it wishes to continue India's membership of the Bank or whether it wishes India to withdraw from that institution.

5 As the Assembly is not in session and it is necessary for the advice of this Committee to be made available to Government in terms of paragraph 4 of the Second Interim Report as adopted by the Assembly in time enough for them to take action on it before the due date of payment of the subscription, we suggest that a copy of the Report should be sent to Government by the Secretary of the Legislative Assembly even before it is presented to the House.

6 Our colleague, Mr. Manu Subedar, does not agree with us and is submitting a separate Report.

SEPARATE MINORITY REPORT TO THE THIRD INTERIM REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE BRETON WOODS CONFERENCE AGREEMENTS

The question put for the consideration of the Committee was —

- (1) whether India should pay the subscription as demanded, or
- (2) whether India should withdraw from the membership of the Bank

I have no hesitation in saying that India should withdraw from the membership of the Bank at this stage. I support this conclusion on the following grounds —

(1) His Majesty's Government were not willing to negotiate the repayment of sterling balances earlier because they were awaiting the outcome of the Anglo-American loan. In a message three days ago, they have expressed their unwillingness to open negotiations until a representative Government is installed at New Delhi. In the second interim report the whole Committee had agreed that

"If these negotiations are unduly delayed, it may be necessary for India to withdraw before these negotiations take place, because it may happen that India will be called upon under the Agreement to undertake commitments which she may feel unable to shoulder in the absence of a satisfactory solution of the sterling credits."

I think that the moment has come for India to withdraw because of the delay in these negotiations, as India will be called upon to undertake commitments, which she would be unable to shoulder in the absence of a "satisfactory solution of sterling credits."

(2) The creditor status has been forced on India. In five years Rs. 1,800 crores worth of commodities were taken at controlled prices for Allied purposes without consent. Even after the war Rs. 300 crores have been added to the sterling balances, and even during the current period Government balances are being converted into sterling. With her own needs unsatisfied and with famines and privations and want, India is being invited to join an institution for lending out to various countries by a process in which "special consideration" is to be "given to the needs of countries which have suffered from enemy occupation and hostilities." This international experiment might fail, as other experiments like the League of Nations (to which India contributed heavily) have failed. Having regard to her own needs, India is in no position to assume further creditor obligations towards any part of the world until her position with regard to the repayment of sterling balances has been definitely and finally made clear.

(3) India's own need to borrow dollars for capital equipment from U. S. A. was mentioned more than once as an argument for continued adherence to the Bank at any cost. The normal channels for loans to India are open, but no negotiation on behalf of India has been started. India, not having any foreign debt and having considerable assets in sterling is more eligible for such loans than the countries, who have succeeded in getting money from U. S. A. But it would be very strange to suggest that if India wishes to borrow, she should start with being a lender on a scale, which involves an ultimate liability of Rs. 132 crores. Besides the dollar requirement in so far as it is merely an exchange conversion problem, is only temporary accommodation for which the Fund and not the Bank is the proper channel. It will be noticed from the figures below that full use has not yet been made of dollars which have accrued to India. Further, during recent months India's balance with U. S. A. has been favourable.

The payment of two per cent of 400 million dollars i.e. 8 million dollars (about two and a half crores of rupees) was to be made out of the Dollar Pool. The following particulars were elicited by me with regard to India's position in connection with the Dollar Pool and hard currencies —

(Figures in Rs. crores)

Accrued to India	405	40	1½	2	4½	453

The contention that Rs. 57 crores worth of gold at London price that was sold at a profit in India by U. K., should be deducted from the balance of Rs. 114 crores, is untenable, as goods were taken away from India of the full Indian value of this gold.

The following rough particulars were elicited by me with regard to the 20 million dollars per year for capital goods from U S A agreed to be given to India by H M G from the Dollar Pool (vide para 35 of the Budget Speech for 1945-46 at page 873 of the Legislative Assembly Debates of the 28th February 1945)

Accrued to India for calendar years 1944, 1945 and 1946		60 million dollars
Licenses issued upto May 1946	15 00		"
Further release offered for purchase of ships	6 00	21 00	"
	Balance	39 00	"

The credits used against the licences issued upto April 1946 were only 2.5 million dollars

The advantage of recovering 8 million dollars from the Pool, being two per cent of the subscription of the Bank, is more than outweighed by the ultimate liability, which India incurs, viz. Rs. 132 crores. Eighty per cent of this liability, which will not be collected at present, would be payable in dollars or in gold. About Rs. 100 crores worth of gold for this purpose would be wanted at the world price of between Rs. 42 and 45 per tola. The Reserve Bank's own gold, even if revalued, would not be less than Rs. 90 crores. The balance would have to be acquired from the market at double the value and surrendered at half the value. India would be giving back to the international field gold for which she has paid Rs. 73, 84 and 90 at roughly half the price paid. This is a position, which I cannot contemplate without grave anxiety for the costly membership of an institution which has no direct bearing on India's life, however high and laudable the object may be. The Bank is for giving long period loans, mostly to war-torn countries, including late enemy countries for reconstruction. India is in no position to assume this responsibility. The fact, that the financing of these loans through guarantees or debentures or otherwise will not involve all this liability at once, and that India would be in a position to withdraw if loans are given on a basis, which is regarded as risky, was mentioned in the Committee. It is much better for India not to participate in this institution with any mental reservation. I therefore advocate the withdrawal now on purely financial and economic grounds.

(4) On political grounds, the Interim Government when they are installed, may take a decision to join, making their own terms with the Bank. India's status in the international field will not be enhanced by any action under the Caretaker Government and it is my firm belief that a Committee of the Assembly ought not to take the responsibility for eventual losses of big magnitude beyond India's capacity to bear. Such a decision must be taken by a responsible Government after they make proper enquiry and it should be left for them.

(5) India has been dragged into international organizations and tied up to the chariot wheels of U K. After the position taken up by India's representatives at the Bretton Woods Conference was definitely turned down in July, 1944, it would have been to India's interests to stay away from these institutions until her own affairs at home and with her debtor the United Kingdom were properly settled. In order to gain original membership, Government joined these institutions without the Assembly's consent, and ever since then each successive step has been taken on the plea of urgency with reference to other people and not with reference to India's own convenience or interest. Both the conditions laid down by the Committee itself in their previous reports and accepted by the Assembly have remained until filled viz. that the repayment of sterling balances has not taken place and also that a representative Government has not been installed.

Under these circumstances it is better for India to come out of the Bank now laying no commitments behind and making it possible for the future representative Government to take a decision, which they consider proper.

(6) My colleagues were impressed with American reaction to any action, which India took. It is important to keep good relations with the U S A after India is free to act on her own. In the meanwhile some of us notice, that America drove a particularly hard bargain in the matter of Lend-Lease with India, in comparison with her treatment of other countries, and that, behind India's back, provisions were put in the Anglo-American Loan Agreement, viz. clauses 6 and 10, which are definitely prejudicial to the interests of this country. The conditions, under which the proposal for India to withdraw from the International Bank is mooted will not be misunderstood in U S A. The refusal to incur finally obligations of a very large magnitude until her own position is a little more clear, is a straight forward course, dictated by financial considerations, and does not betoken any hostility to U S A. What the U S A ought to resent and what we in India are resenting, is the exercise of import control so as to hold up hundreds of transactions fully negotiated and finalised between American and Indians, for which the import licence (and therefore the dollars) are refused. The canalising of trade between India and the sterling area, to the exclusion of U S A, is something for which U S A public opinion will not hold Indians responsible.

(7) The position of the Fund is different, and some of these considerations do not apply to the Fund. The political breach with England must necessarily involve an independent currency arrangement with U K and the rest of the world. The Fund is, however, not functioning till the first of January, though there are very important steps to be taken in the interval such as the determination of the gold par of exchange, the suspension of the operations of sections 40 and 41 of the Reserve Bank of India Act, and a definite provision for the transition period between now and when the Fund operates fully. These are important issues, on which decisions cannot be left to the Caretaker Executive, and it is necessary that either the Interim Government should be installed, or the Legislature should be called to take decisions on these subjects.

I regret that I should be obliged to write a separate report through holding a different opinion from my colleagues on the Committee, but the compelling necessity of the interests of the country has induced me to take this step.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

Tuesday, 29th October 1946

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr President (The Honourable Mr G V Mavalankar) in the Chair

STARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

(a) ORAL ANSWERS

POLICY RE TEMPORARY BRICK STRUCTURES ERECTED FOR WAR PURPOSES IN DELHI AND ELSEWHERE

47. *Mr. C. P. Lawson: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Works, Mines and Power be pleased to indicate the policy of Government in respect of temporary brick structures erected for war purposes, particularly in Delhi?

(b) Is it intended to remove such structures where they offend against the general planning of the city or where the cost of upkeep is likely to be uneconomical?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: (a) In the case of temporary structures put up at Delhi, Government decided—

(1) that all structures constructed to temporary specifications during the war should be demolished as early as possible,

(2) that while keeping the above aim in view, demolition should be so ordered that no building is demolished so long as it can be used for a purpose for which it is more suited than other buildings that would otherwise have to be used or in the case of residential buildings to provide a standard of living higher than would otherwise be available at a reasonable price

Provided that the retention of a temporary building does not interfere with the immediate construction of a building required for a permanent purpose

They also set up a small Committee under the Chief Commissioner, Delhi, which has adopted two main principles—

(1) that temporary buildings which are still in good usable condition should not be demolished until all requisitioned buildings have been released except where the demolition of temporary buildings is necessary on a plot required for the construction of permanent buildings either for residential or other purposes, and

(2) that steps should be taken to build permanent residential and office buildings as quickly as possible to meet the permanent increased demand for the same, and in this way facilitate the replacement of temporary accommodation by permanent accommodation

The whole question is however again being reviewed in the light of the present constitutional situation

As regards temporary brick structures erected for war purposes outside Delhi, no general policy has been laid down but each case is separately considered on merits

(b) Both these points are kept in view while implementing the policy as stated above

Maulana Zafar Ali Khan: With reference to part (a) of the question, will the Honourable Member please tell us what is the principle with regard to the temporary brick structures which were handed over to the Americans for military purposes and when are they going to be asked to vacate them?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: Sir, I must ask for notice of that question

Mr. Manu Subedar: May I know whether in view of the difficulty of bringing into existence new permanent structures Government will consider the desirability of maintaining the old temporary structures even if they are of temporary specifications and giving them for use of the population which is short of housing and other accommodation?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: The policy which I have just read out does contemplate the retention of temporary structures under certain conditions, for instance, as long as these structures are necessary. Then, there is the question of the cost of their maintenance and the possibility of alternative accommodation. There are so many factors involved.

Mr. Manu Subedar: May I make the point clear? Government does contemplate retention, but Government also contemplates, according to the policy stated by my Honourable friend, the abolition. My suggestion is Will Government consider the postponement of all demolition for some time until they see new structures coming into existence?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: Before we can construct new structures, we have to have some demolition to make room for the new structures. Then, there are grass plots in Delhi for instance, about which Government have given an assurance in the past that the temporary structures will be pulled down as soon as possible and the grass plots will be restored to Delhi. The point raised by the Honourable Member will, however, be considered and I am prepared to put it up to Government again to see what can be done.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: May I ask whether Government proposes to consult the Standing Committee attached to the Department before any temporary buildings are demolished?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: There is no such proposal at present.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: May I ask whether Government will consider the proposal?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: That will be considered.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: Is it not a fact that assurances were given to the New Delhi Municipality when they presented addresses to Lord Linlithgow and Lord Willingdon that as these temporary structures disfigure the outlook of New Delhi they will be demolished as soon as possible after the war?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: I believe some such assurance has been given and I think that is the policy of Government. But, as I have just stated in answer to the previous question, the whole policy is still again under consideration.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Will Government consider 'use' before 'art' and will Government maintain every temporary structure which is here notwithstanding such assurances, at all events, for the next few months until new structures come into existence?

(No reply was given)

Srijiit Dharendra Kanta Lahiri Choudhury: The accommodation in Delhi is very limited and so by maintaining the present temporary structures

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is arguing.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: May I suggest a slight modification in the conditions already cited by the Honourable Secretary? It is this. The temporary structures may be demolished to give place to permanent structures provided it is definitely known that no other place is available for that permanent structure?

Mr. President: I am afraid that is a suggestion for action and not a question.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: The Honourable Member has just said that no policy has been evolved for buildings outside Delhi. Does he mean outside the Delhi province? If so, why no policy has been evolved at all?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: I said that with regard to the question of the demolition of existing temporary structures outside Delhi no policy has been evolved.

The reason is that there are very few such temporary structures. They are all situated at different places and each case has to be considered on its merits. It is difficult to establish a policy for outside Delhi, but in Delhi there are so many temporary structures that Government thought it was better to have a definite policy about them.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: The Honourable Member said that a Committee has been appointed. A similar Committee ought to have been appointed with regard to other places. If no such Committee has been appointed, what agency is there to decide whether the temporary buildings will be continued or demolished on behalf of the Government?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: Each case is considered by the Department itself. The Committee only concerns itself with Delhi.

GOVERNMENT PLANS RE MEETING SHORTAGE OF ACCOMMODATION AND CONTROL OF RENTS

48. *Mr. C. P. Lawson: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Works, Mines and Power be pleased to state whether he is aware that in spite of the fact of the termination of hostilities, the accommodation position in Delhi for all classes is showing no improvement?

(b) Has Government any specific plans for meeting this shortage of accommodation of all kinds?

(c) Is it intended to subsidise the building of new accommodation and will building materials be made available to those who are prepared to undertake the work?

(d) Do Government propose to control rents charged after the 30th September 1946 and attempt to make such control effective?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: (a) Yes

(b) Yes

Government are constructing 30 semi-detached bungalows in New Delhi. In addition they have got the following new proposals for construction under their consideration:

- (i) 200 officers' flats in New Delhi,
- (ii) 2,000 clerks' quarters in New Delhi,
- (iii) 1,000 clerks' and 250 peons' and duffry quarters in Old Delhi, and
- (iv) 1,000 peons' quarters in New Delhi.

Steps are also being taken by the Delhi Improvement Trust to expedite the construction of new houses. In the first instance the lessees of plots in Daryaganj South, Mondhewalan Road, Original Road and Gaurin Bastion Road are being asked to complete construction of new buildings within one year from the date of the notice. Similar action will be taken in respect of plots sold in other Trust areas. The Trust also propose to construct poor class quarters under the State-aided re-housing scheme. These quarters are intended primarily for those who may have to vacate their present accommodation on account of slum clearance schemes sponsored by the Trust.

(c) In order to accelerate the building of new accommodation the Government of India have asked all Provincial Governments to set up Building Material Panels to co-ordinate the requirements of building materials and efforts will be made to meet those requirements as far as possible.

The Government of India do not propose to subsidise new building.

(d) Yes

Shri Sri Prakasa: Is it a fact that numerous blocks of buildings in Canning Road are lying vacant fully furnished and a lot of furniture is even lying outside exposed to sun, wind and rain? Why not make these buildings available to the public?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: Sir, I want notice. Where are they?

Shri Sri Prakasa: Behind the Travancore House on the Canning Road

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Are the Government of India aware of the squatting incident that took place in London on account of the fact that Government allowed their own buildings to remain vacant?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: I believe Government have seen this

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: Is it a fact that the House Committee of the Legislative Assembly asked for certain more accommodation to be made available to Members of the Legislature and that the Department have not so far been able to do so?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: Sir, I am not aware of the position. As for new buildings, no new buildings have been put up

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: The House Committee made a requisition on the Department that they should construct or at least offer to the Legislative Assembly Members ten more buildings, but the Department has not done anything so far. I want to know what the Government is doing in the matter?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: I am not aware of the position

Mr. K. C. Neogy: Does the Honourable Member's Department exercise any right of disposal over those buildings that had been allotted to the American Government for housing the American fighting forces and other American personnel and which are, I understand, lying vacant fully furnished?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: Certain buildings have been placed at the disposal of the American Mission and other officers from time to time. We have been making efforts to take back as many buildings as possible, but it is a matter of negotiation with the American Government

Mr. C. P. Lawson: I think the House would be entitled to know something more definite on the question of progress of construction of quarters. Will the Honourable Member give the House any indication of the period required to accommodate a certain number of persons, for instance, of this House who cannot literally find accommodation anywhere and can the Honourable Member give any indication of the speed with which he expects to make progress either now or in the future?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: The Government are constructing some 30 semi-detached bungalows and they expect to complete the same within the next three months. So far as quarters for clerks and peons are concerned, the plans and estimates are under preparation and Government have generally approved the same. I cannot say how long it will take to complete them. I expect it will take about a year before these buildings are ready Seth Govind Das: Is the Honourable Member aware that as far as Members of this House are concerned, they are allotted houses by ballot and some Members do not get houses at all? Surely Government cannot expect the Members of this House to live and work here under a tree. Will the Government do something so that this ballot system may stop and sufficient number of houses are available for Members of both Houses of Legislature and for Members of the Constituent Assembly also?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: So far as the ballot system is concerned, I believe it is a matter for the Legislative Assembly. About the general housing condition, I have said it is very tight and Government are making efforts to construct new buildings to relieve the situation

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon: May I submit, Sir, that when an Honourable Member of this House drew attention to the fact that certain buildings were lying vacant,—this question relates to scarcity of accommodation in New Delhi—the Honourable Member should have been in possession of all the facts before giving a reply to the House. How does he say that he is not aware of the fact? He should have enquired into it before giving his reply to the question.

Mr. President: Next question.

FRESH REQUISITIONING OF ACCOMMODATION BY CHIEF COMMISSIONER, DELHI

49. *Mr. C. P. Lawson Will the Honourable Member for Works, Mines and Power be pleased to state

(a) what fresh requisitioning has taken place in Delhi in 1946 under the orders of the Chief Commissioner,

(b) whether the Chief Commissioner satisfied himself before making use of war emergency legislation for this purpose, that there was no vacant accommodation in Cantonments or elsewhere which might be used for the purposes required, and

(c) how much of the property so requisitioned has now been returned to its owners and how long will it be before the rest is returned?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: (a) A list showing the fresh requisitioning of property in Delhi in 1946 under the order of the Chief Commissioner is placed on the table

(b) Yes. The Chief Commissioner obtained all the vacant accommodation he could get from the military authorities and from the Estate Officer but nevertheless had to requisition private property owing to large quantities of food-grains allotted to Delhi and which had to be properly protected, particularly during the monsoon. Storing foodgrains in Cantonments was not feasible because to transport stocks to Cantonments and back again would have added materially to the cost which would have had to be borne by the consumer.

(c) So far none of the property requisitioned has been returned to its owners but this will be done as soon as it becomes practicable to do so.

Statement

(1) House No 9697 9689 Shamshad Manzil Subzimaundi, (2) House at Khajuri Road Karol Bagh, (3) Godown at Basti Hirpud Singh, (4) Godown at Roshanara Road, (5) Godown at Naya Bazar Delhi, (6) Godown at Naya Bazar Delhi, (7) Bungalow at Roshanara Road, (8) Godown at Maidganj Delhi, (9) Two godowns at Basti Hirpud Singh, (10) Compound in Gandhi Nagar, (11) Bungalow No 3, Ataur Rahman Lane, and (12) Godowns behind Cloth Market.

Mr. C. P. Lawson: May I point out that the Honourable Member has not replied to my question. My question was

"whether the Chief Commissioner satisfied himself before making use of war emergency legislation for this purpose, that there was no vacant accommodation."

The Honourable Member simply said that the Chief Commissioner obtained all the vacant accommodation that was given to him. This is a very different thing. I should like the Honourable Member to give a specific answer to my question.

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: So what the Chief Commissioner could do was to get as much accommodation as he could whether from the Estate Officer or from the War Department. He tried his best to get whatever accommodation he could and then when he found that that was inadequate, he had to requisition these buildings. The Chief Commissioner is not in a position really to do anything more.

Mr. C. P. Lawson: I should like to ask the Honourable Member whether this is the policy of Government, while admitting the fact that alternative accommodation is not available, to requisition these buildings. I understand that these godowns which have been requisitioned cannot be replaced. If it is the policy of the Government to do that, would it not be better for them to face the necessary expenses for transporting Government materials for slightly longer distance?

Mr. President: He is advancing an argument. What is the Honourable Member's question?

Mr. C. P. Lawson: The Honourable Member said that certain accommodation would not be used because of transport difficulties. I am asking whether it is the policy of the Government because of that extra cost to turn out people who can find no other accommodation?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: I have stated what was actually done. The point raised will be considered. As I have already said, the Government are again examining de novo the question of policy in this respect.

RESTRICTIONS ON THE RETURN OF SARDAR AJIT SINGH FROM GERMANY

50. *Sardar Mangal Singh: Will the Honourable Member for External Affairs please state

(a) whether there are any restrictions on the return of Sardar Ajit Singh who had left this country in 1913 and whether any prosecutions are still pending against him, if so, what the particulars are,

(b) whether Government have considered this question, if so why no announcement has been made that there are no restrictions on his entry into India and that he is free to return to this country whenever he likes,

(c) whether it is a fact that he is lying ill somewhere in Germany and whether Government propose to find out the condition of his health, and

(d) whether his relatives have approached the Government of India with the request that facilities may be afforded to them to proceed there for the purpose of nursing him?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: (a) and (b) There is no restriction on the return to India of Sardar Ajit Singh and no prosecution is pending against him.

British Passport Control authorities abroad and the Indian Military Mission in Berlin have been informed accordingly.

(c) He is reported to be in a sanatorium at Bielefeld in Germany and to desire repatriation to India by sea which is being arranged.

(d) The Government of India have received no application from his relatives for facilities to proceed to Germany, one relative did, however, request that arrangements be made for Sardar Ajit Singh's early repatriation and has been informed that this is being done.

Sardar Mangal Singh: Is the Honourable Member satisfied that this decision of the Government of India has actually reached Sardar Ajit Singh?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: I cannot say absolutely definitely but I believe it has. I may add that the difficulty about his return is due to securing passages and a certain difficulty that they have to go to England first and from England get a passage for India, and in England these people are not allowed to remain for more than about three days. Until assured by the British authorities that they have got a passage within that time they are not allowed to leave Germany. We hope to approach the British authorities to relax these rules and to facilitate their return.

RESTRICTIONS ON THE ENTRY OF INDIANS INTO BURMA

51. *Sardar Mangal Singh: Will the Honourable Member for Commonwealth Relations please state

(a) the restrictions on the entry of the Indians into Burma apart from ordinary passport requirements,

(b) whether it is a fact that the Indians are not allowed to enter Burma although many of them possess a large amount of immovable and movable property in Burma, and

(c) the steps Government propose to take to help Indians to go back and claim their properties and restart their business which has been ruined by the war?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: (a) Entry of Indians into Burma is not subject to any restrictions. Even passports are not required for this.

purpose. Owing, however, to the limited shipping space available and the unsatisfactory economic conditions obtaining in Burma only evacuees, and non-evacuees in special circumstances, are being given passage facilities to go to Burma at present.

(b) and (c) No, Sir. Passages of persons having immovable and movable properties in Burma are on application sponsored by the Government of India. Persons who had business in Burma before the war and desire to restart such business are also being given passage facilities.

Sardar Mangal Singh: May I know who controls the passage to Burma? Is it the Defence Department or is it some other Department?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: I am afraid I do not know, I will have to inquire and find out.

Sardar Mangal Singh: Have Government received any complaints that Indian businessmen are not allowed passages to Burma but British commercial people are allowed to go there?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: I cannot answer for all the complaints that are received in the Government of India straight off. I am personally not aware of any such complaint but if the Honourable Member will draw our attention to any such complaint we shall certainly look into it.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is it a fact that a very large number of Indians who had gone to Burma in recent months have returned to India in large numbers because of difficult conditions of living in Burma?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: Indeed one of our big headaches has been to get back Indians to India from Burma, Malaya, Sumatra and Java. We have tried to get ships and charter them all over the world because there is such a tremendous demand from Indians to come to India from these various places.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: What are the Government of India doing in order to make our people—former refugees—aware of the difficult conditions prevailing in Burma and advise them not to go to Burma in the present circumstances?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: I imagine that those conditions are fairly well known. We have not encouraged people to go back, we have told them that conditions are now different but we have not carried on a propaganda campaign of this kind.

Seth Yusuf Abdoolah Haroon: With reference to part (a) of the question is it a fact that Indians have to submit applications to the External Affairs Department to re-enter into Burma?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: I am not quite sure, I will inquire and find out.

TRADE RELATIONS BETWEEN INDIA AND BURMA

52. *Sardar Mangal Singh: Will the Secretary of the Commerce Department please state

(a) the arrangements at present which govern the trade relations between India and Burma, and

(b) whether the Government of India contemplate to negotiate a commercial treaty with the Burma Government?

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: (a) Trade between the two countries is now conducted through commercial channels subject to such import and export regulations as each Government has found it necessary to impose in its own interests.

Exports to Burma are allowed through trade channels in the same manner as to any other destination with which private trade is permissible. In addition, the Government of India have agreed to supply, through Government channels, the goods required by the Government of Burma, up to the 31st March 1947, for implementing their programme of rehabilitation, subject, of course, to the required goods being available for export

Imports from Burma are allowed on the same basis as from any other country of the British Empire included in the sterling area. Imports by land are governed by the provisions of Open General Licence No. 111.

Tariff duties are levied in accordance with the Heads of Agreement concluded between the delegations of the Governments of India and Burma on 3rd April 1941.

(h) No, Sir, not for the present.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Will the Honourable Member tell this House—not now perhaps but later in the session—whether it is true that the Burma Government have overcharged this country for the rice supplied to us, whereas cloth and other goods which were supplied from India have gone out at controlled rates?

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: I shall require notice of that question.

ANNUAL QUOTA FOR THE ENTRY OF INDIANS INTO THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

53. *Sardar Mangal Singh: Will the Honourable Member for External Affairs please state

(a) the latest position regarding the entry of Indians into the United States of America and whether any annual quota has been fixed, if so, what it is, and

(b) whether the Government of India will press the United States of America to increase this quota?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: (a) By a measure which has recently been passed into law Indians are now eligible for immigration into, and naturalisation in, the United States of America. Under the United States Immigration Act of 1924 the immigration into the United States of all foreigners is regulated by quota, the quota for each country being calculated according to the ratio that the number of inhabitants of the United States originating in that country bore to the total population of the United States in 1920, the minimum quota for any country being one hundred. Since the number of Indians residing in the United States of America in 1920 was negligible, the quota for Indian immigrants will be one hundred.

(b) The provisions regulating these quotas apply equally to immigrants of all nationalities and it would not therefore be feasible to press for a relaxation in favour of Indians.

COMPLAINTS AGAINST THE PERSONNEL OF DELEGATIONS APPOINTED BY THE INTERIM GOVERNMENT FOR INTERNATIONAL ORGANISATIONS

54. *Sardar Mangal Singh: Will the Member for External Affairs please state

(a) the number of delegations appointed by the Interim Government to participate in the International Organisations of their personnel, and

(b) whether any section of the public has made complaints to the Government of India against their personnel?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: (a) A statement giving the required information is laid on the table of the House.

(b) A complaint was made by the Indian Federation of Labour in regard to the composition of the delegation to the 29th Session of the International Labour Conference at Montreal. No other formal complaint has been made, so far as Government are aware.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer. Will the Honourable Member give an assurance to this House that in future while sending such delegations overseas proper care will be taken to select representatives from all parties in the House so far as non-officials are concerned?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: I do not need to give any such assurance because that has been the practice, and that certainly is the way in which Government will arrange these delegations.

INVESTIGATION INTO INDUSTRIES AND RECOMMENDATIONS BY THE TARIFF BOARD

†55 Sardar Mangal Singh. (a) Will the Secretary of the Commercial Department please state how many industries have so far been investigated into by the Tariff Board?

(b) What action the Government of India have taken on their recommendations?

The Honourable Mr I. I. Chundrigar: (a) Government have so far received reports on 15 industries from the Tariff Board.

(b) Departmental examination of 12 reports has been completed and Cabinet's orders on about six reports will be issued shortly. Steps are being taken to expedite issue of orders on the remaining reports.

APPOINTMENT OF PROVINCIAL GOVERNORS

56 Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer : Will the Honourable the Leader of the House be pleased to state whether the Government of India have any hand in filling up officiating appointments of Provincial Governors?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: Governors are appointed by His Majesty under section 18(1) of the Government of India Act, 1935, but it is obviously desirable that the Government of India should be consulted in the matter and that their views should carry weight.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Will the Honourable Member communicate to His Majesty's Government that there is great dissatisfaction in this country for appointing a particular individual to all the officiating appointments as Provincial Governor, and will he also communicate to His Majesty's Government that this practice should cease forthwith and that no particular person should have a monopoly of such officiating appointments?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: I do not quite understand what particular person is referred to. I know that there is a great deal of dissatisfaction about various Governors in the country—quite a number of them—but what particular person is referred to I do not know.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Sir Henry Knight.

† Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner having exhausted his quota

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable Member be pleased to state whether the Government of India have also powers in the matter of removal of Governors?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: Obviously not legally.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable Member be pleased to state whether the Government of India is seeking to get such powers?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: The Government of India's main purpose in existence is to gain complete independence in this country.

Shri Sri Prakasa: May I know if the Honourable Member is aware that there is great dissatisfaction at the very existence of Governors?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: Naturally with the coming of independence there ceases to be any necessity for Governors.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Will the Honourable Member communicate to His Majesty's Government that there is a general feeling in this country that in future so long as these appointments of Governors are continued to be made Indians should be appointed and they should be given the first preference instead of imposing foreigners on this country?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: I am not sure that the Government is pleased with the views put forward by the Honourable Member. We want to do away with the Governors and not to replace them with others of that type though of a different complexion.

(j) the number of districts in Assam in which he has served with dates,

(k) whether he is also the Adviser to His Excellency the Agent to the Crown Representative in relation to the Khasi States and Manipur State,

(l) the proportion of his pay from the fund of the tribal areas and from the Khasi States fund and also from the Manipur State, if any,

(m) the number of improvements he has introduced since his appointment as Adviser in the sphere of education, communication, industry, agriculture and sanitation, and

(n) the amount of money spent on such improvements and the amount spent on salaries of officers whose pay is above Rs 500?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: (a) The Central Government's budget estimates for 1946-47 provide Rs 49,17,000 for the administration of tribal areas in Assam. At present the Provincial Government make no contribution.

(b) The information is given in the statement marked A which I lay on the table.

(c) The Adviser's name is Mr. J. P. Mills. His salary is Rs. 3,000 plus £13 6sh. and 8d. overseas pay p.m.

(d) He is paid from the Central Revenues.

(e) He has been in service for roughly 33 years.

(f) On the normal service terms of an officer of the Indian Civil Service.

(g) He is due to retire on the 10th December 1948.

(h) Mr. Mills was formerly Secretary to His Excellency the Governor of Assam and in that capacity had a good deal to do with the tribal tribes amongst whom especially the Nagas he had spent a great deal of his time.

(i) It is difficult to make comparisons where many factors come into play, but among the officers in the service Mr. Mills has the greatest experience for this kind of work.

(j) The information is given in the statement marked B which is placed on the table of the House.

(k) Yes, Sir.

(m) All officials on the North East Frontier carry out the policy laid down by Government and it is not possible to attribute particularly administrative measures to individual officers. Comprehensive development plans have however been drawn up and are now under examination.

(n) The amount budgeted for expenditure from Central Revenues on development schemes during 1945-46 was Agriculture—Rs. 6,000, Medical—Rs. 62,500, and a sum of Rs. 76,100 was provided by the Centre for expenditure on roads. The comprehensive plans to which I have referred will involve expenditure of much higher order to be met from education, communications, agriculture, forestry and medical schemes during the next five years. The precise financial implications have yet to be worked out. The expenditure from Central Revenues on salaries of more than Rs. 500 p.m. is Rs. 8,842 plus £53 6s 8d per month for the current year.

Sreejut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri The Honourable Member aware that Mr Mills has been consistently opposed to the introduction of any representative Government in the hills?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru No, Sir. I am not aware of that fact, but I imagine that that opposition will not count for much when we have to introduce such a system of representative Government there.

Sreejut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri In view of that fact—and coming as I do from Assam I know that he was definitely opposed to the Nagas taking any part in the Government—and if it is found to be correct, will the Honourable Member see that at least at this juncture some Indian officer of experience is appointed to this post?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru Obviously I cannot say who is going to be appointed and for what reasons. The House will remember that the question of these tribal areas like many other questions is coming up before the Constituent Assembly Advisory Committee.

Sreejut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri What I wanted to say is this. At this critical stage when the Constituent Assembly will be discussing these questions, we want to have an officer there who will be rather sympathetic than being opposed to the Nagas and other hill tribes coming under the new reforms.

Mr President What is the question? The Honourable Member is arguing.

Sreejut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri At this particular stage, will the Government assure that a more sympathetic officer is appointed?

Mr President That has been replied to.

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru The only assurance I can give is that the Government will give the utmost consideration to the wishes of the tribal people and will seek their betterment.

TRIBAL AREAS IN ASSAM

58. Sreejut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri Will the Honourable Member for External Affairs please state (a) if it is a fact that there is a budget for the tribal areas in Assam?

(b) Is it a fact that these tribal areas are called the North Eastern Agency?

(c) Is it a fact that there is a proposal by the Adviser to His Excellency the Governor of Assam for tribal areas that these areas should form a separate area to be named North Eastern Frontier Area Agency and to be placed under the Crown and not to be included in the Constitution of India ?

(d) Is it a fact that there is a proposal by the Adviser that the Khasi States also should be included in the proposed North Eastern Frontier Area Agency ?

(e) Is it a fact that a Director or a Deputy Director of Agriculture has been appointed for the tribal areas ?

(f) Is it a fact that he is a British Military Major who has no plea of agriculture ?

(g) Is it a fact that his pay is about Rs. 1,200 ?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru (a) Yes.

(b) The term has at times been used loosely and is a matter of convenience. It has no official sanction.

(c) and (d) There is no such proposal before Government.

(e) Yes, an Agricultural Officer has been appointed.

(f) He was an Emergency Commissioned Officer holding the rank of Major before he was released from military service. He has an Honours degree (Bachelor of Science) in Botany and Zoology. He has held several posts for biological research in connection with Botanical Survey and Fisheries in the United Kingdom and has had practical experience of horticulture.

(g) He is drawing Rs. 800 per month on the scale of Rs. 800 to Rs. 920 plus cost of living of Rs. 25 per month.

Sreejot Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri Is it a fact that this military Major has no experience of agriculture in India ?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru I have just told you what qualifications he has. I do not know him personally, but his paper of qualifications include knowledge of Agriculture, Botany and allied subjects.

Sreejot Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri Is it a fact that his pay and allowance is much higher than those of other Deputy Directors of Agriculture in the Province ?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru That I do not know. I will have to find out.

Sardar Mangal Singh. May I know if any part of the budget for these tribal areas is paid to the tribal chiefs, is hush money like the way in which it is done in the North West Frontier Province ?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru So far as I know it is not so, but I am not absolutely certain. I will have to enquire into the matter.

BUDGET FOR THE TRIBAL AREAS IN ASSAM

59. *Sreejot Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri (a) Will the Honourable member for External Affairs be pleased to place in the Library of the House a copy of the budget for the tribal areas of Assam ?

(b) Is it a fact that the work or action of the Adviser to His Excellency the Governor of Assam cannot be questioned in any Legislature whether Provincial or Central ?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: (a) A copy of the budget for the tribal areas of Assam for the year 1946-47 has been placed in the Library of the House.

(b) No, Sir. Relevant questions and Resolutions can be asked and moved in the Central Legislature with the consent of the Governor General under clause (ii) of the proviso to sub-rule (1) of Rule 8 and clause (ii) of sub-rule (2) of Rule 23, respectively, of the Indian Legislative Rules, and in the Provincial Legislature with the consent of the Governor referred to in clause (d) of the proviso to sub-section (1) of section 84 of the Constitution Act

POLICY OF PROTECTIVE TARIFFS AND DISCRIMINATORY PROTECTION "

80. *Miss Maniben Kara Will the Secretary of the Commerce Department please state

(a) whether it is a fact that the policy of Government in regard to India's trade as outlined by him in his speech before the Trade Policy Committee, which held its meeting at Delhi on 19th and 20th September, 1946, consists of adopting protective tariffs more effectively than has been done in the past under the policy of "Discriminating Protection";

(b) if the reply to part (a) above be in the affirmative, whether Government are aware that the application of this policy will result in the continuance of present shortages of consumer goods through restrictions on import of such goods, in view of the fact that a large increase in their production is not immediately possible; and

(c) if the reply to part (b) above is in the affirmative, what measures Government propose to take to make available to the general mass of consumers larger quantity of essential goods at cheaper prices than those prevailing at present?

The Honourable Mr I. I. Chundrigar (a) The policy of Government in regard to India's foreign trade is recently outlined by the Honourable Mr C. H. Bhabha before the Trade Policy Committee. The objective is to bring about a large scale expansion of industry and agriculture not only through the use of tariffs but also by the adoption of more direct measures.

(b) and (c) Government do not consider that the application of such a policy will result in the shortage of consumer goods in the country, as due regard will be paid to the interests of the consumers, and imports of essential consumer goods will be liberally admitted unless it can be established that these imports will be detrimental to the interests of indigenous industries or to the orderly disposal of surpluses.

Miss Maniben Kara: Is the Government aware that there is a very great shortage of the consumer goods in the country?

The Honourable Mr I. I. Chundrigar There is.

Miss Maniben Kara Will the Honourable Member tell us what he proposes to do in order to relieve the difficulty, which is experienced due to lack of consumer goods in the country?

The Honourable Mr I. I. Chundrigar The shortage of consumer goods in the country now is due to the shortage in exporting countries and is also due partly to the need of conserving foreign exchange. However, we find that there is a progressive increase in production in other countries so far as consumer goods are concerned and in cases where the import of these consumer goods will not affect Indian industries or in cases where India does not manufacture these goods in the required quantities, attempts are made to import as much of these consumer goods as possible for the requirements of the people.

Miss Maniben Kara: Do I understand that the policy of the present Government will be that they are more concerned to safeguard the interests of the industries against the interests of the consumers? If the answer is that they have to safeguard the industry even while admitting that there is a shortage of consumer goods, then I understand the policy of the present Government will be to give sufficient safeguards to Indian industries at the cost of the consumers.

The Honourable Mr I. I. Chundrigar: The Honourable Member appears to be under the impression that Government can do only one thing and not the other. Government is trying to safeguard the interests both of the consumers and the industries.

Mr. Manu Subedar. Is it a fact that the Government is helping the consumers through the Disposal Department by disposing of as much as Rs 8 crores of goods every month?

The Honourable Mr I I Chundrigar. All the surpluses in the Disposal Department are being made available to the public and those consumer goods will be also available.

Mr. N. M. Joshi. In view of the fact that the interests of the consumers should be protected, will the Government revive the Consumers' Council which they hurriedly disbanded sometime ago?

The Honourable Mr I I Chundrigar. I am not aware of the dissolution of this Council and I require notice.

Mr Muhammad Nauman. May I know if in deciding discriminatory protection to the industry Government will take full stock of the question of the parity of prices (that of the raw materials in this country as they affect other parts of the world or of the consumers of finished goods at parity of prices in other parts of the world)? I think I am clear?

The Honourable Mr I I Chundrigar. So far as the Tariff Board is concerned protection is not given to any industry off hand. The matter is referred to the Tariff Board who fully enquire into the needs of protection for a particular industry and protection is given only when Government is satisfied that certain protection is necessary.

Mr Muhammad Nauman. The question I put is whether the question of the parity of prices to be maintained in this country for the consumers will be the chief consideration or not in the matter of the finished goods?

The Honourable Mr I I Chundrigar. The question of giving protection is also the question of the parity of prices prevailing in India is before the Government.

Miss Maniben Kara. Does the Honourable Member not believe that protection to an industry will result in depressing the wages of the worker?

The Honourable Mr I I Chundrigar. That is a separate question.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar. May I know from the Honourable Member if it is not a fact that the consumer goods, meaning food and clothing, are allowed more freely than luxury goods?

The Honourable Mr I I Chundrigar. That is already the policy of the Government.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar. And therefore isn't it in the interests of India to prevent luxury, lipstick and other such goods and allow more freely food and clothing?

The Honourable Mr I I Chundrigar. That is a matter of opinion.

Mr Muhammad Nauman. What do you call luxury goods?

Mr President. Order order. Next question.

EMIGRATION OF INDIAN WORKERS TO BURMA AND MALAYA

61. Miss Maniben Kara. Will the Honourable Member for Commonwealth Relations please state

(a) the number, severally, of Indian nationals engaged in manual work and in commercial establishments who have migrated to Burma and Malaya,

(b) whether any correspondence has passed or consultation taken place between the Government of India and the Governments of Burma and Malaya in regard to resettlement of Indian nationals engaged in manual work or office establishments, displaced during the Japanese occupation,

(c) whether any request for migration of Indian Workers is received from the Government of Burma and Malaya,

(d) what policy Government propose to adopt regarding the emigration of Indian workers to those countries, and

(e) what steps Government propose to take to safeguard the interests of such workers in regard to wages, living conditions and civil and political rights?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: (a) It is presumed that the Honourable Member refers to the number of Indian nationals who have gone from India to Burma and Malaya after the war. A statement showing post-war departures of unskilled labourers and others to Burma and Malaya is placed on the table of the House. Roughly about 3,500 evanee labourers and about 58,000 others have left India. It is not possible to give separately figures of persons who were engaged on manual work and of those engaged in commercial establishments.

(b) Some correspondence as well as consultation in regard to the return of evanees (including labourers) and their resettlement in Burma and Malaya took place between the Government of India on the one hand and the Government of Burma and Mr C. D. Abenue, Colonial Office Representative in India, respectively on the other. It was decided that the evanees from Burma and Malaya had a right to return to those countries. No specific correspondence or consultations took place regarding the rehabilitation of Indians who were engaged in manual work in office establishments and were displaced due to circumstances created by the war.

(c) Two requests, one for the despatch of 25 cooks and the other for permission to recruit skilled workers (mainly clerks) in India for work in their Public Works and Audit Departments were received from the Government of Burma. 23 cooks were sent to Burma in March 1946 while in the latter case the Government of Burma were asked to apply through their nominated representative in India to the Protector of Emigrants, or accessary commission under Chapter IV of the Indian Emigration Act, 1922.

A request for the supply of 1,500 labourers for food production was received from the Government of Malaya in June but was refused.

(d) and (e). The emigration of skilled workers from India is governed by Chapter IV of the Indian Emigration Act, 1922. The emigration of unskilled labourers to Malaya and Burma was banned by the Government of India in 1938 and 1941 respectively. Evanee unskilled labourers proceeding to Burma have, however, been exempted from the operation of the ban. It is not intended to lift or relax the ban unless satisfactory conditions in respect of work and wages and status are assured by the Governments of Burma and Malaya. The conditions which the Government of India would desire the Governments of Burma and Malaya to ensure are still under consideration.

 Includes 14,000 Shubinagar refugees who are shown neither as unskilled labourers nor others.

Miss Maniben Kara: In regard to (e) will the Honourable Member tell us whether the Government will consider the advisability of appointing officers in both these countries to protect the interests of the worker regarding their wages and conditions of life as they have done by appointing Trade Commissioners to protect the interests of trade and industry.

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: We have representatives of the Government of India in Rangoon and in Singapore at the present moment with staffs attached to them. It is their chief function to look after the interests of the Indian labour population. If and when necessary we shall certainly add to their staff for this purpose.

Prof N G Ranga: Till very recently our officers in those countries have been concerning themselves more with the interests of the upper class of our own Indians than the welfare of our own Indian workers. Will Government consider the advisability of taking immediate steps to appoint some suitable officers to go and assist these agents in regard to our manual labour?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: The representatives and Agents of the Government of India are supposed to carry out the directions and instructions given to them and so far as I know I have no reason to suspect that they have acted against those instructions. If the Government of India's instructions are let us say, in favour of a particular class, they will carry them out. So far as we are concerned we are interested in protecting all interests but more especially those people who are not in a position to protect their own interests, that is the labour population.

Miss Maniben Kara: Am I to understand from the Honourable Member that he is of the opinion that one must be told to look after the interests of both industry and labour at the same time?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: There are certain interests which are national and there are other interests which might be termed class interests. National interests can certainly be looked after by one person, other interests occasionally require separate treatment and separate looking after.

Miss Maniben Kara: Does the Honourable Member not think that class interests can assess all National interests?

Mr President: Order, order. No arguments please. Next question.

ADOPTION OF MINERS' CHARTER BY THE INTERNATIONAL INDUSTRIAL COMMITTEE ON COAL

62. *Miss Maniben Kara: (a) Will the Honourable the Labour Member please state whether Government are aware that the basic principles of Miners' Charter to be prepared by the International Labour Organisation were adopted by the International Industrial Committee on Coal at its first meeting held in London in December 1945?

(b) Are Government aware that a resolution was passed at the same meeting calling upon Member Governments to give immediate effect to the principles adopted?

(c) What steps have Government taken to give effect to that resolution?

(d) In case no steps have been taken so far, do Government intend taking any?

(e) What are those steps, and when will they be taken?

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: (a) Yes.

(c) The Honourable Member is not quite accurate in saying that the committee passed a resolution calling upon member Governments to give immediate effect to the principles. But it did pass a resolution expressing its wish that while taking the situation in their respective countries into consideration, Governments should strive to give effect as soon as possible to the reforms recommended by it. Acting under instructions from the Governing Body of the International Labour Organisation the Director International Labour Office has since then communicated the Committee's resolution to the Government of India for their information and for such action as they might think appropriate.

(e) Government of India propose to set up a National Industrial Committee on Coal on a tripartite basis to advise them as regards the administrative and legislative measures to be taken by Government or to promote collective agreements between employers and workers with a view to giving effect to the eight-point charter suggested by the International Industrial Committee on Coal Mining. The Coal Mines Welfare Fund has been instituted for financing schemes designed for the social betterment of the mine workers and their families. Government of India have recently decided to set up a Committee to enquire into and make recommendations as to what would be reasonable wages for workers of different categories in the coal mines.

- (d) and (e) Government also propose to examine in consultation with the National Industrial Committee on coal mining as soon as it is set up questions relating to the provision of annual holidays with pay, reduction in hours of work, improvement of working conditions, the institution of a scheme of counselling, accident insurance and training courses for new entrants.

Miss Maniben Kara May I know the approximate time that the Honorable Member proposes to take to give effect to this resolution by setting up the tripartite machinery?

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram As a matter of fact we have asked the various Provincial Governments and organisations of employers and workers about their opinion on the formation of this tripartite conference and as soon as we get their opinion we will set up the conference.

Miss Maniben Kara Do I understand that the Honorable Member has not so far received their opinions on this point?

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram We have not so far received opinions from all of them.

Miss Maniben Kara May I know whether as the Honorable Member said in reply to one of the questions, he hopes to initiate the decision of the F. I. O.?

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram As far as possible.

DEMAND FOR A TRIPARTITE CONFERENCE IN COAL INDUSTRY IN THE STANDING LABOUR COMMITTEE

63. *Miss Maniben Kara (1) Is the Honourable the Labour Member aware that a demand for convening a tripartite conference of the coal industry was put forward by Labour representatives at the 8th meeting of the Standing Labour Committee held in March, 1946?

(b) Is it a fact that the Indian Federation of Labour put forward a similar demand?

(c) Why have Government not convened such a tripartite conference?

(d) Will Government consider the desirability of convening such a conference at an early date?

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram (1) Yes.

(b) Yes.

(c) Proposals for the constitution of a National Industrial Committee on Coal mining have been circulated to the Provincial and State Governments and organisations of employers and workers. Replies have not been received from all of them.

(d) It is Government's intention to convene a conference as soon as proposals for the constitution of the Conference have been finalised.

Miss Maniben Kara Can the Honorable Member give some idea about the setting up of the machinery for this purpose?

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram I have already replied to this in my answer to the previous question.

SUPPLY BY V. P. P. OF GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS BY THE MANAGER, GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS

64. *Shri Sri Prakasa Will the Honourable Member for Works, Mines and Power be pleased to state

(a) whether it is a fact that the Manager of Publications does not supply Government publications by V. P. P.,

(b) whether it is a fact that persons desiring Government publications have to send money in advance to him,

(c) whether it is a fact that it being not possible to compute the exact charge that may be needed for packing and postage, more money is sent than is actually ultimately spent

(d) whether it is a fact that the balance is not immediately sent back in stamps or other ways and sometimes it is kept over for further orders

(e) whether it is a fact that unnecessary correspondence has to be undertaken to recover petty amounts, which costs more than the amounts themselves and

(f) whether he will consider the proposal that Government publications be supplied by V P P ?

Mr B K Gokhale (a) and (b) The Manager of Publications does supply Government publications by V P P if specifically asked to do so provided the cost of the publication is not very small

(c) All priced publications are sent by post to all addressees who order without any extra charge for packing and postage. The same generally made clear in advertisements issued by the Manager of Publications

(d) and (e) People who are not aware of the rules mentioned above send out money to cover packing and postage. Refunds are then made by money order through the Treasury Office against bills prepared by the Manager, Central Publication Branch after they are passed through the A G C R. No refunds are ever made in stamps. Government are considering the possibility of simplifying the procedure for refund in such cases to expedite matters.

(f) Does not arise in view of the reply to (c) and (d)

Shri Sri Prakasa Will the Honorable Member kindly make sure from the Manager of Publications if he has not written more than once to correspondents that his publications are not supplied by V P P and whether it is not a fact that a few muns of muni are still lying with him and have not been returned yet?

Mr B K Gokhale Sir, I have stated the rules but if the Honorable Member will give me the facts I will make enquiries. The Manager of Publications may be acting against the rules if what is stated is true.

Shri Sri Prakasa I can give the facts but not the dates. Will the Honorable Member advise me as to what I should do to recover those few muns of muni?

Mr. Ahmed E H Jaffer Will the Honorable Member issue instructions to the Manager of Publications to set up machinery to expedite the orders of the Honourable Members of this House for the supply of Assembly stationery? I know from my own experience that it has taken as much as six months.

Shri Sri Prakasa He does not even reply to letters.

Mr B K Gokhale Sir, the points raised will be examined.

PETTY BALANCE LEFT OVER UNCLAIMED WITH THE MANAGER OF PUBLICATIONS AFTER RECEIVING ORDERS FOR GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS FROM THE PUBLIC

65. *Shri Sri Prakasa Will the Honorable Member for Works, Mines and Power be pleased to state

(a) the amount of money lying with the Manager of Publications or with the Department concerned on his behalf as unclaimed petty balances left over after meeting all expenses in connection with orders for Government publications from the Manager of Publications,

(b) what Government are intending to do with this balance, and

(c) if Government propose to refund the amounts due to the persons concerned?

Mr B K Gokhale: (a) Rs. 17,562 made up as follows:

	Rs
(i) balance of subscription accounts due for repayment	14,249
(ii) balance of other petty accounts	2,775
(iii) Amount received from 1944-45 onwards owing to money orders not being delivered to the addressees	538
	17,562

(b) and (c) The balance is always returned to the persons concerned provided they can be traced. For instance, it is doubtful if the amount of Rs. 538 under item (iii) can be returned. The other items will be returned to the persons concerned as soon as possible. Large balances have unfortunately accumulated partly due to pressure of work during war time. The Controller of Printing and Stationery is being asked to expedite the return of outstanding balances as quickly as possible.

Mr Manu Subedar: May I know whether in view of these difficulties Government will examine the possibility of simplifying the procedure for supplying Government publications to the public by appointing one bookseller agent in every city so that the money transactions would take place with the bookseller in every city instead of these remittances?

Mr B K Gokhale: Sir, the procedure is being examined with a view to simplification.

Shri Sri Prakasa: In view of the fact that the Honourable Member himself has admitted that a large amount of money is lying with the Manager of Publications, how does he justify his previous statement in answer to my previous question that all this money is sent back by money order?

Mr B K Gokhale: Sir, the procedure is that nothing is received in cash and nothing is returned in cash direct by the Manager of Publications. What he has to do is to prepare vouchers and sign money order forms which are then passed on to the Treasury Officer. Then they go to the Accountant General, Central Revenue. Then by book transfer the amount is given to the Post Office and sent back. On the return journey I believe the same complicated procedure is followed. No actual cash is handled and that is why all this difficulty crops up. But the matter is being examined with a view to simplification.

CONTROVERSY BETWEEN THE CENTRAL GOVERNMENT AND THE BENGAL GOVERNMENT OVER PRICES OF JUTE AND JUTE MANUFACTURES

15 Mr K C Neogy: (a) Will the Secretary of the Commerce Department be pleased to lay on the table of the House a detailed statement explaining the controversy that has been going on between the Central Government and the Government of Bengal in regard to the control over prices of jute and jute manufactures, and fully indicating the point of view of the Central Government about the matter, with particular reference to the Press statement of the Chief Minister of Bengal dated, New Delhi, October 12, 1946, on the subject?

(b) Will the Honourable Member please place on the table of the House copies of material correspondence on this subject that has passed between the Government of India and the Government of Bengal?

The Honourable Mr. I I Chundrigar: (a) I lay on the table a copy each of the two Press Communiqués issued by the Government of India on the subject. The position has been fully explained therein.

(b) It is not usual to lay on the table copies of confidential correspondence between Provincial Governments on the one hand and the Government of India on the other. It will not be in public interests to do so.

Press Communiqué

The Government of India have decided to terminate the Jute Export Control Order 1946 with immediate effect.

This order, it will be recalled, was conceived as an anti-inflationary measure as also with the object of ensuring that supplies of packing material were made available at reasonable prices to all countries of the world for facilitating the movement of cereals.

The Provincial Governments concerned, however, did not take steps to continue the control over internal prices with the result that jute prices in India have increased sharply while exports have been dislocated. In the long run controlled export prices of jute and jute manufactures cannot fail to influence the internal price level but this would involve a long process resulting in undesirable fluctuation of prices and dislocation of trade. The Government of India have therefore decided to withdraw the price control over exports.

At the same time in order to reduce as far as possible the inflationary effects of an uncontrolled export prices the Government have decided to enhance the export duty on raw jute and jute goods. The high prices resulting from the control will benefit the growers of this commodity and a substantial part of the proceeds of the enhanced export duty will accrue to the principal producing provinces.

The Indian Tariff Act Amendment Ordinance, 1946 promulgating the new rates of duty has issued in a Gazette Extraordinary dated 23rd October 1946.

The Government of India intend to continue the quantitative control over exports of raw jute and jute goods so that exports of Indian jute may be equitably distributed among all countries of the world.

Commerce Department

New Delhi the 23rd October 1946

Press Communiqué

With the expiry of the Defence of India Act and the Rules framed thereunder on the 30th September 1946 the control of internal prices of jute and jute goods will revert to the Provinces.

In view, however, of the responsibility that devolves on the Government of India for the supply of packing material at a reasonable price to all countries of the world so that the free flow of foodgrains from surplus to deficit areas may not be impeded and the urgent need that exists for countering inflation and also having regard to the larger interests of the country as a whole the Government of India have decided to continue the Export Price Control provisions of the jute (Price Control) Order 1945. An order incorporating these provisions is being issued in a Gazette Extraordinary on the 1st October 1946 under Rule 84 of the Defence of India Rules as continued in force by the Emergency Provisions (Continuance) Ordinance (Ordinance XX of 1946).

Department of Commerce,

New Delhi the 30th Sept 1946

SHORT NOTICE QUESTION AND ANSWER

ENQUIRY INTO HOOGHAGANISM DURING PANDIT JAWAHARLAL NEHRU'S FRONTIER TOUR

Lala Deshbandhu Gupta: (a) Will the Honorable Member for External Affairs be pleased to state whether his attention has been drawn to the serious allegations made by Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan and Rai Bahadur Mehr Chand Khumra, (Information Minister, North West Frontier Province) in their Press statements published in the Hindustan Times dated the 18th, 21st and 22nd October, 1946, against the Political Department in connection with the hooliganism indulged in by a section of the Muslims during the Honorable Member's recent visit to the Tribal Areas in the North West Frontier Province? If so, are the allegations true?

(b) What Steps do Government propose to take in the matter? Do they propose to set up an enquiry?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: (a) Yes.

(b) The statements referred to contain chiefly expressions of opinion and some facts. There is no doubt that there was a great deal of violence during the course of the visit to the N W F Province and the Tribal Areas. This violence resulted in injury and damage. It was fortunate that this injury and damage were not much greater than the actuals were. As to who was behind this organized violence various opinions can be formed and inferences drawn. It would not be right to apportion blame fully without more knowledge. The matter is being inquired into.

It is evident that the references to the Political Department are not accurate. Probably what is meant is that some officials of the Local Administration both in the Frontier Province and the Tribal Areas are concerned. This is a matter again for further enquiry.

In view of the confusion that prevails regarding the Political Department it is desirable to clarify the constitutional position. The Political Department as such deals with the Indian States only through Residents and Political Agents accredited to States and groups of States. The External Affairs Department is something separate from the Political Department and is inter alia responsible for Frontier affairs and Tribal Areas. This Department is an integral of the Central Government under the control of the Governor General-in-Council. The Political Department on the other hand is the Secretariat of the Crown Representative and is controlled by the Political Adviser to the Crown Representative. This is not under the Central Government. The only constitutional link between the Political and External Affairs Departments is provided by the Viceroy in his dual capacity as Governor General and Crown Representative.

The confusion regarding the Political Department has apparently arisen from the fact that till now there has been a common Indian Political Service. The officers of this service belong to a joint cadre which serves both the Crown Representative and External Affairs Department. All these officers have been normally called Political Officers.

The Indian Political Service has been drawn in the past chiefly from the Indian Civil Service and the Indian Army. The I.C.S. has provided about 1/3rd of the cadre and the Indian Army about 2/3rds. There are also a few persons in it from the Indian Police and some who have been promoted from the Provincial Service. The Secretary of State for India is ultimately in charge of this Service. The Political Adviser to the Crown Representative is the senior officer of the Service.

Before the formation of the Interim Government the Viceroy functioned as Member for External Affairs. He was and is also the Crown Representative.

Lala Deshbandhu Gupta. May I know whether it is a fact that the Honorable member was advised not to proceed to the tribal areas by the Political Department?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru. I am sorry that in spite of my explanation as to what the Political Department is the Honourable Member goes on using those words. The Political Department as such has nothing to do with me or with giving me advice or not. It is a department dealing with the Indian States but it leaves me whether I was advised to go there or not, certainly I was advised by some to go and by others not to go.

Lala Deshbandhu Gupta. Is it a fact that the programme and arrangements made for the Honorable Member's tour were kept secret from the ministers of the North West Frontier Province?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru. I believe that the final programme was really drawn up probably—I do not know—may be a day or two before my arrival there. What was kept secret from whom I do not know, but it is a fact that it was not drawn up till almost just a day or two before my arrival. Probably some people did not know.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer. Is it true, as reported in the papers, that the Provincial Governor of the North West Frontier Province specially came down to suggest a postponement of the Honourable Member's visit?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: That is a perfectly correct report.

Sardar Mangal Singh: Do I understand the Honourable Member to say that inquiries are being carried on in this matter?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: The matter has been referred to the people in charge in those areas for inquiry.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: May I inquire whether British Indian law prevails in what are known as the tribal areas?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: No. British Indian law or any other law applying in British India does not prevail there (except in so far as sometimes armies and troops are made to march there and they take such steps as they are ordered to). The House will remember, that the so-called tribal areas represent a belt of territory between what is known as British India and Afghanistan—that is, in the conception of India those tribal territories are included, but not in British India. The boundary of India is between the tribal territories and Afghanistan, but British India which is British administered India ends where tribal territories begin.

Mr Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: That being so does the question of an inquiry arise at all in that case which we call "Ghan Haque" (that is foreign Territory)?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: When one refers to an inquiry, it does not refer to an inquiry in regard to the people of those areas but to the officials concerned in those areas who function under the various departments of the Government of India or the Provincial Government as the case may be.

Lala Deshbandhu Gupta: Is it a fact that whereas Congressmen were allowed no access to the tribal areas, others who were opposed to the Honourable Member's visit to that area had free access to that area?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: In the past those areas were more or less hermetically sealed and nobody could enter there without permits. Those permits were given according to the likes and dislikes of the officer in charge. Some statements and allegations have been made in the past which support the Honourable Member's suggestion. However, very recently a change in policy has been introduced allowing far greater freedom for people to go there and for people to come from there, which I think is a very healthy thing, so that there may be greater contact between the different areas.

Mr Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: There is no intention therefore to bring these tribal areas within the boundaries and confines of the British Empire?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: That question does not arise at all. What the position of the tribal areas, internal and external, is going to be as the House no doubt knows is going to be considered by the Constituent Assembly or rather by the Advisory Committee of the Constituent Assembly and that will ultimately depend on all manner of considerations and agreements between the parties concerned.

Seth Yusuf Abdoolo Haroon: May I know from the Honourable Member what was the urgency and motive behind this tour which was so hurriedly taken by the Honourable Member?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: Yes, Sir. This relates to another question. Within three or four days of our assuming charge, I heard that bombing operations were going on in Waziristan and all of us, of course, were perturbed by this. Fortunately these operations could be stopped very soon. In fact they stopped within 48 hours of this knowledge and were finally over within three or four days. Now this matter brought the question of the whole Frontier policy before us and in discussing it with our officers in our department, it was suggested to me by our senior officers that it would be a good thing for me to visit the Frontier, and to meet the officers of the department, including the Chief Officer there who is the Governor also and some representatives of the tribal people and I cordially agreed with this suggestion of my department. Later I suggested that some dates might be fixed up. There was no hurry about it. As a matter of fact, it took about two or three weeks for this question to develop and to be discussed. When the final dates were fixed up, it was probably about 10 days before I went. Actually it was more than 10 days. Then the detailed programme came after.

Maulana Zafar Ali Khan. There is an impression abroad that the Government of India finally propose the annexation of the tribal area with India. Is there any truth in this?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: No, Sir. I am not aware at all of that. I do not think there is any truth in it. I have not heard any suggestion to that effect before from any responsible quarter at least.

Pandit Govind Malaviya. Will the Government take steps to undo the mischief which is obviously being done by parties outside and elsewhere by that suggestion?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: It is difficult to catch hold of such mischief but one of the purposes of my visit was to remove any such misapprehensions from any person's mind.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Was the Honourable Member successful?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: I think I was partly, if not largely, successful.

MOTIONS FOR ADJOURNMENT

BOMBING OF TRIBAL AREAS IN WAZIRISTAN

Mr. President: I shall now take up the adjournment motions. I understand from office that we have received the Governor General's assent for the motion from Mr. Tinnazuddin Khan. I find the Honourable Member is not present in the House today.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman (Pitua and Chota Nagpur con Orissa, Muhammadan). I have got a letter of authority from him to move the adjournment motion on his behalf, as he has had to go away on very urgent business. If the Chair permits me, I am prepared to move it.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member knows that last session I had given a considered ruling on the question whether a member who is absent could give authority to another member to move an adjournment motion on his behalf. I decided that that cannot be permitted under the Rules and Standing Orders.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman. The Honourable Member who gave notice was present in the House yesterday. He would have moved it if he were present today. As he had to leave the House urgently, I am prepared to move it if the Chair gives the facility.

Mr. President: This point was covered by the ruling which I gave. There is no question of that motion now coming up for consideration. It drops out.

USE OF TEAR GAS OUTSIDE THE COUNCIL HOUSE

Mr. President: Then there is the motion from the Honourable Member Mr. Nauman who wants to discuss a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely,

"the use of tear gas on the 28th October 1946 at 10.20 A.M. or about, just outside the Assembly Chamber resulting in injury to the eyes and annoyance to many members of the Assembly."

May I know what the Honourable the Home Member has to say about it?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel (Home Member). Sir, I shall place a few facts before the House about this incident in order to correctly estimate the relative importance of it. Just at about 10.10 A.M. yesterday, a crowd of about 500 people assembled near the eastern gate of the Assembly Chamber. Some of these people were armed with lathis and hockey sticks. The crowd began to be rowdy and a fracas took place. They began to exchange blows and in order to remove the obstruction from the passage for the Honourable Members of this House, the police officer who was standing by who had taken precautions apprehending trouble, threw a small tear gas grenade and the result was that the smoke some of it permeated in the House. The Chamber because of the comparative coolness of the inside atmosphere or because of the cooling arrangements inside drew the smoke inside. This was done in order to avoid greater trouble and to provide for the safe exitance of the Honourable Members. The harm done is comparatively negligible and a little annoyance of this nature is sometimes considered as amusing rather than as irritant and I think that this is not a matter of such public importance as to allow the admission of this motion.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman. May I say again that it is not a question of a little annoyance as the Honourable Member has said. The question is—why did the police allow the crowd to gather and to develop a situation where tear gas had to be used. This is the whole issue which the Honourable Member has to look into. I have been in the House for over 12 years and I have never seen a crowd gather at the gates and make a demonstration. If the Honourable the House Member makes an inquiry he will find out that these crowds included probably clerks or interested persons. Unless every precaution is taken things might develop to a serious extent. Tear gas might develop into something else tomorrow and there might be worse happenings.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel. The Point raised here is the use of tear gas and not why crowds were allowed to assemble. I have no experience about the crowds assembling near the Assembly Chamber before but I can say this that since a month and a half that we have been here I have been noticing crowds assembling here so much so that the Deputy Commissioner here had to issue an order under section 144. It is usually violated by the servants of the Secretariat Departments. The crowd that assembled yesterday before the Assembly Chamber according to the report consisted mostly of the servants of the various Departments who were estimated to be 80 per cent. About 20 per cent perhaps were from outside. But the reference made about the use of the tear gas was the basis of this adjournment motion and not the collection of the crowds or the provocation of the crowds.

Mr. President. Order, order. I do not think further discussion is necessary on this question. Anyway, as has been pointed out by the Honourable the House Member the basis here is the wording of the motion shows, is entirely different from what the Honourable Member is now trying to make out. I do not think that the motion is of such importance that I can admit it.

REPORTS ON THE WORK OF INDIAN DELEGATION TO THE PREPARATORY COMMISSION AND GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE UNITED NATIONS—LAID ON THE TABLE

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru (Leader of the House). Sir, I beg to lay on the table the Reports on the work of the Indian Delegation to the Preparatory Commission and the First Part of the First Session of the General Assembly of the United Nations.

MOTION RE THIRD REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON BREITON WOODS AGREEMENTS

Mr. President: Further consideration of the motion moved by Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan yesterday, namely

"That this Assembly, having considered the third report of the Committee on the Bretton Woods Agreements, do hereby approve India's continued membership of the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development."

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad (United Provinces Southern Division, Muhammadin Rural) Sir, I was discussing yesterday about the stabilisation of prices and I pointed out that I had been pressing this question for the last 15 years and I was unfortunate in not having the support of any Member from the Treasury Benches or of any member of the Assembly. I was glad that Dr. John Mitthai supported this view. I understand the Government of India would concentrate their attention to this very important problem of the stabilisation of prices. Sir, it is asserted sometimes that the rise of prices is due to inflation and if inflation could be removed the prices would come down to normal conditions. I do not understand the significance of this because if you stop publication of currency notes, it would not follow that the prices will at once come down. There may be scarcity of currency and ordinary business will be impeded. If you want really to stabilise the prices in this country the first and foremost thing that you have to do is to fix the price of paper rupee in terms of gold and silver. That is the first thing to be done without which nothing can happen. Attempts were made to stabilise the price of wheat in 1942 but without success. Then an attempt was made to stabilise the price of textile by the Commerce Member in 1945. That also proved of no avail. Therefore, no attempt can be effective unless we stabilise the price of rupee in terms of gold and in India naturally in terms of silver also. Now to remove this obstacle we have really to fix not only the purchasing power of the rupee but also the sale value of the sterling. The United Nations Organisation and the B.N.F. have fixed the purchasing power of gold at Rs. 43 per tola, but they have left out altogether its sale value. The result is that the prices in India where gold is sold to the highest bidder has come very high. Not only this, but the Reserve Bank acts as a kind of black market for the sale of gold for foreign countries. The Reserve Bank only gets commission and the profit goes to foreign countries. Both these things ought to be stopped. Sir, I requested Sir Chintamani Deshmukh when he went to America to see that the United Nations Bank should fix not only the purchasing price of gold but also the sale price of gold. Thus he could not do, probably he had no opportunity to move in the matter. Therefore, one of the things which our representatives in the United Nations Monetary Conference should insist is that the sale price should also be fixed which should be something in the neighbourhood of the purchasing price with a margin of 4 or 5 per cent. India is in a special position compared with other countries. In other countries people are not accustomed to put their savings in the shape of precious metals. In India from time immemorial people keep their savings in gold and silver which are also used for ornaments, which have become more or less necessary in this country. Therefore, the demand for the purchase of gold is much greater in this country than it is in any other. Besides, unfortunately India is the only country which eats gold and silver in the shape of leaves. The consumption of these two metals in this way is not only in maunds but in tons every year. Therefore, for these two reasons the consumption of gold in India is comparatively much greater than it is in any other country. When you fix the price of paper rupee, it is essential that four things should be taken note of otherwise your attempts will fail. Firstly, we must insist that the sale price of gold should be fixed by the United Nations Organisation. Secondly, the Government of India should have the monopoly of sale of gold and silver and it should be sold only by licensed persons. Thirdly, the Reserve Bank of India should no longer act as the Agents of other countries and sell gold at black market prices to the highest bidder. The price should be the same as fixed by the United Nations Organisation Conference. Fourthly, I would refer to the policy with regard to bullion exchange, so that there may be no gambling in this precious metal. If we fix the prices of gold and silver and the monopoly is taken by the Government, then naturally bullion exchange will be abolished. As soon as the price of gold and silver are fixed, the next stage would be—to regulate the price of cloth, which the Government will find it extremely difficult to do. I have repeatedly said that I have not found a single Commerce Member or a Finance Member for the last 15 years who has not been in the 'pockets' of the textile manufacturers in this country. The only solution that I would suggest is to nationalise the textile industry and in that way alone the problem of handloom industry will also be solved. In England they have also taken some steps to nationalise certain industries and I hope this country will follow their example. The United Kingdom has nationalised coal, power and transport. I would like to add to this list two more things in this country, so that the competition with cottage industry may be avoided. These two commodities are textile and sugar. Unless the sugar industry is nationalised, it is impossible really to protect the industry of gur and khand, which were really our great glory in the past. This is really the next step that we should take. After stabilising the prices of gold and cloth, the next step will be the stabilisation of the prices of wheat and rice. Now as regards wheat and rice, you can always take up the question in consultation with the provincial governments. I gave notice of a Bill last time, but the Food Member managed to get the refusal of the Governor General for the introduction of my Bill. This Bill was against hoarding and about the fixation of prices. If the farmers and cultivators get gold, silver and cloth at moderate prices for their wheat then they will be willing to part with their wheat. They would not part with wheat for paper money that we give them now. They set no value on the bundles of paper money they may get for their wheat. They do not even care to count the numbers of notes they give to vendors. Whenever they go to a shop to purchase cloth or other things, they simply throw the bundles of notes before the shopkeeper and ask him to take as many notes as he wants in return for the things they purchase, because they do not appreciate the value of the notes. This is what is happening in most parts of the country. You must therefore fix a price for wheat, rice, textiles, gold, silver and then the price of other articles will automatically be adjusted without any further trouble. Action will have to be taken by the whole Government in this matter. It is not the work of any single member of Government. The Honourable the Finance Member, the Honourable Commerce Member, no single member can tackle this question. This should be the concern of the Cabinet as a whole. Then they will have the support of the entire country in their attempt to stabilise prices. This extremely difficult task will have to be faced if you really want to have some kind of peace in the country. Otherwise the troubles will always be there.

The next question which I want to take up is the bank rate of interest. I said last time that the former Finance Member concentrated his attention to the problem of stabilisation of bank rate of interest and reducing the bank rates as much as he possibly can. The bank rate of interest has already been reduced to about 2½ per cent and the plea that was given to us was that he wanted cheap money in order to develop industry. Do you really want cheap money to develop industry or do you want to help the industrialists to make some more profit? Is that the object? If it is meant to help the industry, then I am one with you. But if it meant to help the industrialist, then I strongly oppose it. The reason which I gave last time was this. Is it fair that these industrialists should get cheap money from the bank at 2½ per cent and then invest it in business and get a dividend of 35 to 40 per cent for the shareholders? I have got here a list of companies, I do not like to waste the time of the House in giving out the percentage of dividends declared by each company. If the Government regulate the rate of bank interest at 2½ per cent, it is also then duty to see that these industrialists do not give say more than 4 or 5 per cent in the shape of dividends. It is criminal to allow the companies to pay 30 or 40 per cent.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil (Bombay Central Division Non-Muhammadian Fund)
When they run at a loss?

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: My friend puts me a question. This loss must be taken up in the account of shareholders so that they may be entitled to a minimum rate of interest and if there is loss it must be made good in the future years by giving higher rate of interest. I am quite prepared to do that. Unless the Government are prepared to regulate dividends to be allowed to these companies, it is not really fair to reduce the bank rate of interest in this manner. The other point which the Honourable the Finance Member has to look into is that by reducing the bank rate of interest we are really reducing the wealth of the country. What is the fate of all charitable institutions which have invested their wealth in 3½ per cent securities? Now that you have reduced the rate of interest, their wealth is suddenly diminished. Really speaking we are putting a premium on dishonesty and putting a discount on the honesty of a person. I am all in favour of cheap money to develop industry, but I am bitterly opposed to provide cheap money for the benefit of the shareholder. That ought not to be our motive. This ought to be put down with a firm hand. If you stabilise prices, then automatically the bank rate of interest will be readjusted. I may remind my Honourable friend Dr John Matthai about the method adopted by Lord Keynes to calculate the bank rate of interest. This method will not apply to India for two reasons. In the first place you cannot put down on paper the amount of corruption now going on in the Government of India departments all round. The amount under the head of corruption cannot be calculated. Secondly there is a good deal of black market going on where no income-tax is paid and it cannot be calculated. The only way of finding how much money is really going into the black market and in the shape of corruption is by following the quantum of inflation. That is the only indication to find approximately the amount of corruption and black market. Therefore on account of these two special factors, the formula of Lord Keynes will not apply to this country. If you fix the purchasing power of the rupee at one rupee per tola as it used to be before the war and if you fix the price of gold at Rs. 43 per tola, which is the rate in the world market for silver and gold, then I am sure the bank rate of interest and other things will automatically be adjusted. I want to put one question to Dr John Matthai. What is the effect of reduction of bank rate of interest on the price level? Is it not a fact that by reducing the bank rate of interest, the prices go up? The prices never go down. This deliberate policy which the previous Finance Members followed in framing their financial proposals is the root cause of the present position of distress in this country. The prices are persisting to remain at this high level because of that wrong policy. If an honest man wants to put money in Government securities thinking them to be safe, he is under a discount. If a dishonest man puts the same money somewhere else, then the Government helps him to earn more money. Dishonesty is at a premium. These are things which require to be carefully looked into. I hope the present Government will face the question squarely and remove all the difficulties that faced the country in the past.

Reference was made by my Honourable friends Mr. Manu Subedar and Mr. Gadgil to the question of sterling balances. I do not like the method of liquidating sterling balances suggested by my friends, that is take away all the property of Europeans in this country. How would you like the South African Government expropriating all the assets of Indians in South Africa and sending Indians bag and baggage to India. There will be a great howl and I would certainly move an adjournment motion for this purpose, but probably the Government will have no reply because it is not the doing of the Government. An adjournment motion will be of no use.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras Ceded Districts and Chittoor non-Muhammadian Rural): What would happen if Indians in Africa owed the South African Government money? What would happen?

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: There are other ways of adjusting these sterling balances, and I will deal with it now. I said that India is very much interested in this question because this is not money which we have invested in a bank in England as our surplus but which by force of circumstances and through the privations and suffering of poor people have been accumulated in England. The question has not become important on account of the United Nations Bank and Monetary Organisation—sterling balances have really no bearing on the question.

we are discussing now—but because of the loan agreement between the U K and U S A I do not like this loan agreement at all because I think it is a Shylock's agreement, a loan of 3 75 billion pounds at 2 p c interest, and much of this loan will have to be spent in America so that their surplus goods may find way to other countries It is exorbitant, but that is a question between the U K and the U S A, though any impartial person will consider the rate much too high When you give them a loan at 2 p c interest and ask them to use the loan for purchasing articles in the country itself you automatically raise the price level of the articles which the U S A will supply to the U K But what we are now concerned with is how it affects our sterling balances, and that question has become important because of clause 6(1) They have put down certain headings which they have reserved for the repayment of the American loan, and then they say

"It is understood that any amounts required to discharge the obligations of the United Kingdom to third countries"—and our sterling balances are included in it—"outstanding on the effective date of this agreement will be found from sources other than the line of credit"

So we have to find out what the resources are from which the sterling balances have to be paid Then in clause 10 they say further

"Settlements with the sterling area countries will be on the basis of dividing these accumulated balances into three categories

(a) balances to be released at once and convertible into any currency for current transaction,

(b) balances to be similarly released by instalments over a period of years beginning in 1951

(c) balances to be adjusted as a contribution to the settlement of war and postwar indebtedness and recognition of the benefits which the countries concerned might be expected to gain from such settlement'

We cannot be a party to this clause (c) At any rate we are not concerned in this and it is only an agreement between the U S A and the U K to which we are not a party We were not consulted and we did not give our consent to it So this method of payment is a question of great urgency and should be settled The Government of India have not been indifferent about it The Committee of the Council decided long ago to send a deputation to the U K to settle this matter, but the difficulty was that the report of that Committee could not go to the Government who appointed that Committee Since political conditions were rather fluid the question was postponed Now we have a stable Government with the full support of the country behind them and they can tackle this matter more easily than their predecessors could do There are two ways of settling it Mr Manu Subedar thinks that as between a debtor and creditor it is the debtor who should come to the creditor for a settlement In theory it may be correct for small parties but as between two nations it is a different matter, and I have always held that it is more advantageous for a deputation to go from here to England than to receive a deputation from England in this country My first reason is that whoever settles it on behalf of Government, Government themselves should not be a party in first negotiation but should be in a position to examine the recommendations of their deputation, and this House should also examine them, before accepting or rejecting those recommendations On the other hand if a deputation comes to this country they will talk to Government Members, to the Leaders of Parties and to Chambers of Commerce, etc The Government Members will be in an embarrassing position in that case, because they cannot argue that they will give their opinion later on So at first it must be entrusted to a deputation and Government may decide later one way or the other Secondly, we have to explore the means and methods by which payment can be made Here we have to depend on two factors,—the opinion or advice or information given by the deputation which comes from England and upon the advice of the Reserve Bank But if the deputation goes from here to England they will interview large number of persons and examine the proposals from broader view point, they will talk with persons of different opinions and study the conditions of the United Kingdom, and explore possibilities of the various means of payment. So the field of discussion will be wider and the responsibility of Government will be very much restricted. Then it will be for Government to formulate their views, if they are not satisfied they will either invite a deputation or send another deputation. So my view has always been—that was the view of the Committee of the Council and also of the Finance Member's predecessors—that in the first instance a deputation should go from here and then make recommendations before Government which will make a decision on the facts before them as to how the sterling balances should be repaid. But whatever it may be, it is certain that India cannot afford to lose the sterling balances because they represent the suffering of our people and we must have them back. It is the method of repayment which is to be considered. We do not want Bank of England notes which are of no use to us. No country has gold and so we cannot have them back in gold, we will have to get them back in the shape of commodities. But what the commodities will be and what portion of the sterling balances can be changed into dollar and other hard currencies are points which will have to be discussed by negotiation, and we should try to have as much freedom as possible. We have to give facilities to our debtor so that we may be able to get back the full value and the full amount back. We have also to consider whether after a certain date interest should not be charged for the surplus amount. All these points will have to be considered, but the important thing on which we all agree is that this point should be considered in full. As regards par value I strongly believe that present conditions should continue and I have given notice of a Resolution to this effect.

So far I have been discussing what may be called subsidiary problems, or irrelevant points, and now I come to the main issue, i.e. whether we should accept the motion now before us.

I ask this question first of all whether we want trade with other countries? My Honorable friend Dr John Matthai, said that the prosperity of every nation depends upon trade. We all agree with him and this has been the policy of the Government which is evident from the fact that they are appointing Trade Commissioners everywhere. I ask how are you going to carry on the trade with every other country? In old days the balance of trade that is the difference between the import and export, was made good by gold and in those days gold occupied the position of an autocratic monarch. After the war, however, gold was dethroned altogether and the currencies of all the countries were demobilized, and there was a great confusion. Later on in 1932 gold was enthroned again, not as an autocratic ruler but as a democratic monarch. Gold was not there and transactions were made in the name of gold. This position also does not hold good now. We are now shaping democratic rulers in the shape of the United Nations monetary policy and the United Nations Bank. If two countries trade with each other then balance will be adjusted through these organizations, and this will act as a clearing house for all these different countries the balance plus or minus will be put down to the account of the countries concerned. That is I think the best way of dealing with this question. Now if we do not join this bank what will be the mode of trade with other countries? My Honorable friend Mr Minu Subedi suggested that we can directly establish relations with other countries. Now supposing you want to have relations with Cuba how will you establish those relations? Cuba people will not sell you anything unless you are prepared to pay them in Cuba currency, and how are you going to get it?

Then you may take it for granted that after this International Bank is established, the banks which have so far been conducting this particular function will no longer continue to do so, because they will say this is the function of the United Nations Bank, and so they will transfer this for that Bank. Therefore I cannot visualize how we can carry on our trade with other countries.

if we choose to stand out Russia can keep aloof because it is in a different position altogether. It is self-supporting, it is not in need of either purchasing or selling any article to any other country. But India cannot afford to do so she is not self-sufficient, we have to purchase and we have to sell a large number of articles and so the question of doing all that through a clearing house is very important indeed. We cannot therefore keep away from the United Nations Bank in our own interest.

Now, Sir, the question of sterling balances is quite important in itself and it is a separate question. Whether this Bank is established or not and whether we join this Bank or not, the question of sterling balances remains in its present form. Although these two questions have been mixed together in view of the loan agreement between the United States and the United Kingdom yet from the point of view of the motion before the House these are two isolated problems, and they have no connection whatsoever. In our own interest and in order to carry on the trade with other countries we ought to take part in this particular Bank.

But before we give our final vote, we should consider how much will be our liability, whether there is any risk involved, whether the money which we deposit will bear interest or not and whether we can withdraw our money or not. These are the questions which people naturally ask and I am going to reply to those questions from the Articles of Association of the Bank.

The Bank has got one lakh shares of one lakh dollars each out of which we have got 400 shares of one lakh dollars each. They are demanding 20 per cent at present. We paid about 2 per cent. We were assured in the Committee by the Finance Member that the dollars required for this payment would be made available from the Empire Dollar Pool, the effect of which would be a corresponding reduction in the sterling balances. So the 2 per cent subscription which we have already paid came out of our sterling balances which according to some persons is our total loss. I do not think it is a loss at all. The remaining 3 per cent and later on 5 per cent will have to be paid in rupees and not in gold or in dollars.

The second point of safety is this. There will be a branch of the United Nations Bank in India itself so that all the money that we pay will remain in India so that the question of non-payment by the bank will not arise.

The third point of safeguard is that by giving one year's notice we can withdraw from the Bank. Therefore the apprehension which some people have got, that money might be given to small countries like Holland or Belgium who may not be able to pay back and there may be a loss is to a very large extent allayed by this provision. Besides I suggest that whenever loan is given to any country over and above its quota, some other country should give a guarantee for that and it should also put its signature on the loan agreement. We follow the same procedure in business, there should be some surety who will be responsible for paying the amount which cannot be recovered from the debtor. If the United Kingdom recommend that so much loan should be given to Belgium, they should be prepared to sign a document so that if that money cannot be recovered from Belgium it should be recovered from the United Kingdom. If this principle is adopted there is no chance of any loss whatever. Even if it is not adopted, we find that there is a provision according to which we can withdraw by giving one year's notice at any time. Our representatives on these organisations will no doubt have sufficient commonsense. If the amount is being given to certain countries and the money may not be returned, immediately they can come forward and say we now withdraw ourselves. And the moment the notice is given our responsibility for payment ends. So if the countersignature of the country is not available, the notice itself will safeguard our interest. So if your Governor and Director are wide awake—then you can safely trust your interests to such persons. India is not wanting in men. They have never had opportunities. When the opportunity comes, they will rise to the occasion. So the apprehensions of Mr. Mannu Subedar are not correct. The money will be safe.

[Dr Zia Uddin Ahmad]

It is not a gift. It is a deposit in a regular bank. You invest the money and they give you the profit. It is provided that the profit, if any, will be distributed among the various persons. In Article 13(b) on page 50 you will find that "if two per cent is paid as a first charge, any balance remaining to be distributed shall be paid to all members in proportion to their shares." Your bank is like a co-operative bank. "Whatever profit there is, it will be shared by each country and payment to each member shall be made in his own currency and if that currency is not available, then in other currencies acceptable to the members. If such payments are made in currencies other than members own currency transfer of the currency and its use by the receiving member after payment shall be without restriction of the members."

Mr. P. B. Gole (Bihar Non-Muhammadan) Will there be any profit?

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad If the banks have no profit all the banks in the world will be closed. They are not going to lend money to any country in charity. Whatever interest is received by the bank, after deducting two per cent it will be distributed among the shareholders. It is provided for in the article which I have quoted. One of the Branches will be in India and the money will be invested there. They are then sure to get the profit and if anything is going wrong and our representative cannot control it, then we give notice and take our money back and we will get every pice in our account. Therefore, this is an investment in the bank in order to facilitate our trade with other countries. I see no danger of any kind and without hesitation I would recommend honestly to every Member of the Assembly to support the motion moved by the Honourable the Finance Member.

In the end I appeal to all my colleagues. This subject has been under discussion for a considerable time. We had some hesitation in the beginning when we could not understand perhaps the hidden meaning. There may have been some justification for it. But now we can safely rely upon the present Government, and I am sure they are not going to make mistakes or take any action to the disadvantage of the country. Relying upon them I think it is absolutely safe. It is in the best interests of the country that we support the motion.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. O. Chatterjee (Nominated Non-Official) I rise to support the motion made by my honourable friend, Nawabzada Liaquat Ali Khan.

Sreejuti Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri (Assam Valley Non-Muhammadan) On a point of order. There is no such member in the House!

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. O. Chatterjee: I am sorry. I mean Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. O. Chatterjee. I do not presume that I am a financier or an economist. I speak as a layman and I want to put forward the views of a layman. Yesterday Mr. Manu Subedar spoke of passers-by in Connaught Circus and he said, why not ask the passer-by? I feel that I probably come under that category—the passer-by in Connaught Circus. But Connaught Circus is within ear-shot of this honourable and learned House. It might still be said that words of wisdom flowing from here have educated the passers-by in Connaught Circus in these financial matters to a considerable extent. Therefore I probably do not even come under that category. I feel I am like a passer-by in Chandni Chowk where the voices and the words of wisdom from this House do not reach, and that my level of intelligence on this account is perhaps that of a passer-by in Chandni Chowk where old methods of finance and old ideas still continue in contrast to the ideas of the more educated passers-by in Connaught Circus. As I have heard these learned discourses on high finance by Mr. Manu Subedar and latterly by my colleague, Dr. Zia Uddin, I felt that when people talk of high finance and of high mathematics which were enunciated at such length by my learned friend here, I fear the listeners get a sort of headache. I also feel that financiers do not enjoy life because when they are dabbling in finance they are probably like people playing bridge at very high stakes. I think the financiers themselves get a headache, and that they do not enjoy the fruits of their labour, because a financier loses the capacity to use his money for the comfort of himself or of those who surround him. He is always thinking of the investment side—how he can best invest his money. Even while offering his drinks he is thinking as to whether the proper person has been given the right drink.

When I heard Mr. Manu Subodhar speaking I felt that he was to some extent uncomfortable. For it seemed if I may say, with all respect to the great financier, that he seems to be obsessed with one idea and that one idea ran throughout his discourse and that was the obsession of sterling balances. I do not say that I am competent to dilate on the sterling balances. But I was not able to understand—I may be very dense—from his discourse what the exact connection there is between the vexed question of sterling balances and the question before the House, namely whether India should continue its partnership of the International Monetary Fund and International Bank for Reconstruction. If I understood him aright, he seems to me to have in his mind one dominant feeling, which he expressed again and again. He believes that before we join this bank we must get Great Britain or the United Kingdom to pay back our sterling balances. He feels that this should be a matter for bargain. We must tell the U. K. that if you give us that money or hold out reasonable hope of giving back our sterling balances, then we shall join this Bank and Fund; otherwise we shall keep out of them, this seems to be his position. I fully agree with him that every Indian is deeply concerned and should be deeply concerned about these sterling balances. This is our money, money which we can ill afford to lose. I do admire his concern over the sterling balances but I do not feel convinced that if we take this position, viz., that we will only join this Bank and this Fund if England gives us back our sterling balances, we shall be doing any great good to ourselves. I have not understood how far England is interested in our refusal or otherwise. Will they really be willing to fork out or give back to us this money, to persuade us to join the Bank? Is England so far concerned about India joining this Bank and Fund that they will give back to us our sterling balances? Is the payment really dependent on our joining the Bank or is the U. K. holding out this as a bait so that we should join the Bank? That is a point on which Mr. Manu Subodhar has not been able to convince the passer-by in Chandni Chowk up to now.

I must therefore consider the question from other points of view. We ought to enquire whether our joining means our being eternally wedded or committed to the membership of this Bank and this Fund. Enough has been said and I do not want to reiterate the argument that it does not mean an unlimited commitment. The fact is we can go out of it or to use the current political phrase, we can opt out of it at a month's notice and therefore that in itself is not a great danger.

The second point that would appeal to an ordinary layman, the average man who has to invest a few hundred rupees, I mean people like me, is are we fully represented on the permanent organisations of this Bank and this Fund. I take it that we have one of our most brilliant banking men as one of the Governors. I also take it that there are on the Directorate some distinguished nationals as our representatives. One of them is Mr. Sundaresan, who came to this House for the Budget Session last time. Therefore it seems to me that our interests are being constantly watched by our nationals who are not taking instructions from what was described as a foreign government but who are our agents and who take instructions from our Finance Member here and from the Government of which he is a distinguished member. Therefore our interests are being continually watched and that is the main point which I want to make.

The next thing that appeals to me probably more than any other thing (because finance does not interest me and I receive no dividends nor hold any [Lt-Col Dr J C Chatterjee] shares) is the wider implication of this proposal viz, whether we should follow the policy of isolation or whether we are to conform to the policy of all advanced nations, that we should participate and make our contribution to anything that concerns the welfare of the commonwealth of the nations of this world. That is the point which I wish to put before you and it is very largely because of this aspect that I support the motion of my Honourable friend.

Mr. President. It is time now for the House to rise for lunch. The Honourable Member may resume his speech after lunch.

The Assembly then adjourned for lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock. Mr. President (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: Sir, when we adjourned for lunch, I was referring to what I consider is the most important reason and argument in favour of India's participation in these two international organisations. I refer to the question which is fundamental to the proposition before us namely, whether we are to adhere to a policy of isolationism or whether we are as a great nation great not only in the number of our nationals but also in the ancient heritage of our civilisation and the potential vigour of a new India, to take our place in the commonwealth of nations and our rightful share therein, or whether we are to adhere a policy of isolationism. In the old days, before people from the West began to come here, geographical conditions and the lack of the means of travel prevented India from being known or taking any part in international affairs. We were then known to the world as the mysterious land and a mysterious people, the land of Ind might have been considered the land of romance but it was not known to be a power. At the same time we were known as the land of gold and the land of spices, even Columbus wanted to find us out and discover this mysterious land of Ind because he wanted our gold and our spices. Then came the age when the European nations developed their maritime skill and began to send out expeditions to this mysterious land of gold and of incense and of spices. As a result followed the European domination over this country. Whereas our isolation in the pre-European days was the result of geographical conditions and the lack of facilities for travel which then hindered the meeting of nations, a different isolation was imposed upon us because of our political subjection. If in the old days when we had not been conquered by a foreign nation we were known as the land of wealth and of romance and of sweet-smelling spices, we then became gradually known to the world as a land inhabited by dusky colonials who were a mysterious kind of people, half-clad, and uneducated, who put their women behind bars and who were in constant dread of elephants, tigers, snakes and pestilence. That isolation was imposed upon us because of our political subjection, and I venture to quote from my personal experience to show how this inferior status by which we had become known in the eyes of other civilised free nations became an obsession with many young people and how it entered into our souls to feel that if we went outside our country we were treated with disrespect and discriminated against. I remember that in the days of my early youth I undertook a world tour with my wife. From the days that we embarked from Bombay until we came back one of the saddest impressions in our minds was caused by the manner that we were treated in because we were Indians, not only by shipping companies but by customs officials and by the police of the countries. Wherever we arrived—we were detained till the last when passport facilities had to be looked into and our baggage was searched with great care lest we bring the spices of India and the mysterious wealth of India hidden in our trunks. As the result of this the iron entered into an soul. We had the most pleasant recollections of our visit and what we saw, although it is 30 years ago but we can never forget that one feeling namely the feeling of humiliation that we being the nationals of a country which was unknown outside India except as the vassal of another nation, and, as I said, a land inhabited by dusky colonials and by people considered to be semi-civilised—we must be inferior to the people of other countries. I remember that preceeding on that voyage we got on from China on to a ship which was going to America and there my wife who wore the national costume of our country was besieged by American ladies who came and held out their hands and said "Please tell us our fortunes." My wife asked why they thought she could tell their fortunes and they said "We thought that all Indian women were fortune tellers." I am sorry to say that my wife was very upset that all that she could be taken for was a fortune teller. These are just instances to show what this policy of isolationism has cost us, and today the main question before us is whether we should join these two most important international organisations or whether we should remain isolated and build a wall round us and say that we are quite happy in our own land and we shall have nothing to do with other people and therefore we shall keep out of all these things because we consider or look upon them with suspicion. Are we to be always afraid that we could not be properly treated or are we to be timid and go in and take our rightful place in these and other international organisations of the greatest importance?

Now, Sir, I feel that the main question, so far as the present government is concerned, has been decided conclusively. The fact that the Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru has taken upon himself the duties of the Member for External Affairs shows what great importance he attaches to the question of external affairs. In passing one can say what better choice could there have been than of Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru to guide the external policy of this government? And what better man could have been chosen to be the channel for the relations between India and other foreign countries? For, I take it that next to Mahatma Gandhi, he is the one international figure from India, recognised and honoured all over the world as a great statesman, as a writer and speaker and as a man of talent. Therefore I say that by that choice the present government have set their seal of approval on this question of the external relations of this country and they have therefore pledged that we shall take our place in the international assemblies of this world. We shall sit there and we shall show to the world what our people, our statesmen and our representatives and our financiers are capable of doing.

It seems to me that those who are afraid of joining these international organisations are suspicious because of our experience in the past. It will be remembered that after the last war a great international organisation with great hopes was set up, namely, the League of Nations and India also became a member of that League. I remember at that time a union in India was formed to popularise the aims of the League and to interest people in the work of the League which was manifestly the preservation of peace among nations and the prevention of wars. I happen to be the first Honorary Secretary of the League of Nations Union in India. For a while I was most enthusiastic but as time went on I felt that the League of Nations was of very little value so far as India was concerned. Apart from the fact that the League itself was breaking up and was not being taken seriously except by the few great powers I felt that the money that we contributed towards the upkeep of the League did not bring in a result commensurate with the amount which we paid as a large country and I resigned my office by way of protest against the way in which India was being treated. Conditions then were very difficult as India even when it sent delegations to the League of Nations or its various allied organisations, whether they were labour organisations or health organisations, those delegations were not chosen by the people of this country but they were entirely and completely nominated by the Government of the time and in fact such delegations were almost always headed by nationals of England and not nationals of India, though they might have been serving the Government of India. Therefore at that time our suspicions and our fears in joining these international organisations were certainly justifiable. Even last year when a delegation was sent from here to such a politically innocuous or harmless body, or shall we say, enlightened body as the Educational and Cultural conference of nations, the delegation from India was headed by an Englishman, because he has an officer of the Government of India. It was surprising that the education and culture of India was to be represented mainly by an Englishman, thereby to some extent letting other people gather the impression that India was half educated and could not produce an educationist who could lead an educational delegation, leave alone financial political and labour delegations which went from this country. So, I admit that such fears were justifiable then but now with the coming in of a national government the whole situation has changed. I hope, Sir—in fact it is not a hope but a certainty that at no future time would a delegation from India either to these banks or to any other international organisation be headed by or even composed of Englishmen or any others except nationals of this country. That is one of the main arguments why I consider that we should go into this organisation.

To the most important international conference, namely the U N O, our delegation is not only composed entirely of Indian nationals but be it said to the pride of India that out of the 51 national delegations, our delegation is headed by a most talented and charming lady, namely, the Honourable Mrs Vijayalakshmi Pandit. How can we measure in terms of money the impression that she has made, because the value of her work is immeasurable. She has by her speech raised the whole international status of India. I shall just quote one or two sentences from what she said. She said "We seek no domination over others. We claim no privileged position for our people but we do claim equal and honourable treatment for our people wherever they may go and we cannot accept any discrimination against us."

Those words form the gist of all that I have to urge, namely, that whereas we do not claim domination over others we do desire with all the earnestness at our command and with all the strength that we can muster that our nationals should be treated honourably and that there should be no discrimination against them. That discrimination was shown to us because we were isolated and unknown in the international affairs of the world. Our nationals felt dishonoured and hurt when they went outside this country. In their own country there was discrimination against them. Outside their country there was discrimination against them. Now, Sir, this talented lady by the impression she has made has shown to the people of the world that Indian women are not merely fortune tellers but they are also guides and determiners of the affairs of their own nation and also of international affairs and thereby she has raised the status of this country and particularly the status of our womanhood.

My next point is—that the membership of an organisation like the International Monetary Fund and Bank gives to our men a great opportunity for proving their worth in the councils of nations. Up to now the great difficulty has been that wherever our nationals have gone, a large section of the people of our country have said that they are only nominees of the British Government. Even when we sent such able men as Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar, there have been a great number of people who said that they represented nobody in this country but were nominees of a foreign power. That was said firstly because of the political domination over this country secondly because they had not the support of their own countrymen. (An Honourable Member His Master's Voice!) That may be but the future delegations will not be of that type. Our men have so far not got a chance to prove their ability and their worth, their power of speech, their knowledge, their talent and their civilisation to prove that their brains are equal to the best brains that other countries can produce.

Now, Sir, we have sent men like Sri Chintaman Deshmukh and others to serve on the organisations connected with this bank and I am told by those who have recently come from America that these men have already made then mark and that they are acknowledged as some of the best financial brains of the world. I referred to the talented lady who leads our delegation to the U.N.O. I could name others and the fact remains that whenever we have sent such men and women to represent our country among other nations of the world they have brought honour and credit to this country and I am sure they will continue to do so. And if they bring honour and credit to themselves, they will bring credit to the nation from which they spring and whose representatives they are, and, therefore, they will raise the international status of India, which, I consider, is today our great need. The world cannot any longer be isolated. With such fast means of travel, with free trade, with the mixing of nations, we cannot remain isolated in our own home. But when we go out we must be respected and we can only be respected by the achievements of our men and women whom we send out. If, therefore, today we say that we will not go into this Bank or that we will not go into similar organisations or that we will not send Delegations to International Conferences we are thereby depriving our people of finding their place not only within the narrow limits of India but as International statesmen, as International financiers, as International men of culture and so on and so forth.

Finally, Sir, I shall wind up by saying that I have supported this motion, as I have said, from the layman's point of view. I have done so, firstly, because I consider that we are not irrevocably bound to remain members and that we can opt out at any time, secondly, because we have sufficient and adequate representation on the Executive and the Directorate of this Fund and of this Bank, and, thirdly, that we have by our participation given an opportunity to our nationals to show their worth and in this manner we shall be able to prove to the world that our country can produce able financiers. Till yesterday it was urged that no Indian could become or was fit to undertake the responsibilities of so important a portfolio as the Finance Department. Today we have seen that my Honourable friend Mr. Ishaq Ali Khan is able and is well-able to undertake that most onerous and responsible task. And though it is yet early to say anything very much, he has our very best wishes and also our certain belief that he will rise to the full height of the great responsibility which he has undertaken. Fourthly, Sir, I feel that because of our own interests, in international trade we must join this Bank. India must trade, we cannot live without trade. We are not like Russia which is self-sufficient and which does not need any outside connection. We have to establish our place among the nations. We have got to develop International trade, which is still in its infancy and therefore I support the motion made by my Honourable friend, the Finance Member.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi (Calcutta and Suburbs Muhammadan Urban), Mr. President, Sir, I am grateful to the Honourable the Finance Member for having allowed us freedom to speak on this resolution on its merits. I also appreciate the fact that within the limit of the 30 hours granted to him to understand and appreciate all aspects of this problem, he has achieved something which is remarkable. I wish the Government had not hurried through this matter and the Honourable the Finance Member's colleagues had given him more time. Had he been given that time, I feel certain that the Government as well as the House would not have hurried itself into this International Bank and International Fund, which I am only too sorry to say, compels me to sound a discordant note in a House which has begun in an atmosphere which is welcome to all of us. The most surprising fact to me was that a signatory of the Bombay Plan has also supported the idea of this "Bretton Woods Nonsense", as I call it. We were told that we would require millions and crores upon crores of rupees for the industrialisation of this country and yet we are being asked to throw away not 123 crores but 266 crores into a pit from which we may not get back a single rupee. Sir, Honourable Members in this House will perhaps remember the Fiasco of international debts and credits after the last war. There was a Bank of International Settlements. I am told it exists still. But every member of it defaulted, including Great Britain. There is a fear of a new war in the atmosphere in spite of the many contradictory statements made from Washington, London and even Moscow. We know from our experience how wars are manufactured and I am certain that the new war will not take even the normal generation to which Europe has made us accustomed. I am surprised and I am a bit upset at the fact that the two great economists, who gave us dissertations on the pure economics of the International Fund and the Bank yesterday, have left me puzzled. I could not decide whether they wanted us to join the Bretton Woods Affair or the net result of their speeches was that we have tried what we wanted to say but please do not join the thing. The Committee met on three occasions and the last report of it is the most difficult to understand. They have discussed the three aspects of the problem. Two they have rejected and on the third they tell us: "We have not got a mind of our own. Please discuss and settle the matter in the Assembly." All this leads me to the view that we should give the widest possible berth to this Anglo-American co-operative group called the International Fund and the International Fund. Let us understand India taking an interest in International affairs and going out to the help of devastated regions. Had the Honourable the Finance Member told us that we are going to give away so much without an idea of getting back a single penny, in spite of my poverty and in spite of my hunger, I would have said "Go ahead." Against your wishes you were forced to join the campaign of devastation. Now get back your soul and assist reconstruction and rehabilitation. Let millions die of starvation here but go back and regain your soul." But that does not seem to be the object. Not one single advantage has been explained by the Government as to why we should join it. The best explanation given was that we can always get out. Why the Dickens, then, should we enter it?

Let us give this two per cent, three per cent or five per cent, but let us forget that we have given it. We were told, charity should begin at home and then the Honourable the Finance Minister went into statistics much more powerful than the Honourable Member who preceded me about internationalism. Sir, internationalism, to-day, after the war, is the biggest ramp existing in the world. The three Big, the Big Four, rather the whole lot of them, satellites and otherwise, have no mercy for Asia, Africa and the suppressed nations of the world. I want the Honourable the Finance Member to look at the problem from my point of view also. It is the easiest thing to understand that if Brother Roosevelt got China, Brother Churchill got India. We have heard headlines about the change that has come about in this House. I appreciate and to an old campaigner like me Indian faces on the Government Benches are very welcome, but we are not even on the verge of the millennium yet. This Government led by and supported by my countrymen is still His Majesty's Government in India. Sir, we are still tied to the apron strings of Mother Britannia and if I have understood the situation well, we are not going to be free until certain aspects of our political problem have been settled according to the wishes of Great Britain. Knowing that, I would like the Honourable the Finance Minister to look at the Anglo-American debt agreement. India is the largest market for Great Britain and Great Britain after 1951, for 49 years has to pay capital and interest to America under that loan agreement. I should like the Honourable the Finance Minister to investigate whether the "as soon as possible" theory of his expectation of the Treasury in London or with His Majesty's Government in London is likely to materialise before the 49 years are over. America has decided that the American debt will have priority over other debts of Great Britain. Shall we be allowed to have a look in into our sterling balances? I can understand India being represented at international meetings and organisations, but I feel certain that so long as the millennium has not come, so long as we have not prepared a constitution which I expect we are going to sit and discuss and so long as we have not signed the treaty of commerce brought to India by the three Cabinet Ministers, according to the wishes of Great Britain, so long will this question of our sterling balances suspended and unsettled. I am not quite sure if the Honourable the Finance Minister has been shown that document. It may be that because we have accepted the bastard hybrid of the Cabinet Mission to rule our destinies for some time to come, that document has perhaps gone back to London. The 'as soon as possible' theory of the Honourable the Finance Minister is to be taken either according to the 49 years of the Anglo-American loan agreement or according to the Commander-in-Chief's statement in the Upper House last session that the Indianisation of the army is likely to take twenty-five years, or it may be that the constitution making body will be in being, not for one year not for two years, but according to the established system of our Government, and by that I mean those who have ruled us so far, the decennial period is likely to be there until we have arrived at any decision about our future. Until then in international meetings and organisations until then in every other body whether the Bank or the Fund, India will have to play the second fiddle. When the Brittonwoods discussions were going on the Secretary to the American Treasury declined to allow India—India with its 400 millions of people India a creditor nation of Great Britain to the extent of £1,300 which amount I am told has now risen to £1,700 the country to which America also had to pay some money, that country was not allowed to get in because Mr. Morgenthau said that if India was to be there, Great Britain would have two votes. In the later stage of the discussions, India appeared to be satisfied with a seat which Russia did not take. I am told that the gracious Anglo-American bloc has now agreed that India should have a permanent seat on the Board of Directors. I hope it will endure but I am very doubtful if when Russia decides to come in, we shall not be shown the door. My own feeling is that India with its 400 millions of people and its monopolies in certain raw materials is one of the largest markets of the world. Need we rush into this international Bank and International Fund when I feel absolutely confident in my mind that America, Great Britain and the whole lot of them will come to us. They cannot exist without us. They want to sell their goods to us. Need we then throw away our money, throw away even the possible chance of getting our sterling balances, for the mere pleasure of going and shaking hands with international gentlemen who are very small compared with us. May I give you, Sir, an example from my own experience. In a non-official body the International Business Conference, which I had the honour to attend as a delegate divided itself into eight sections. Nicaragua, little Holland and some other countries like Lithuania and others were given chairmanships of some of these sections, but two countries one with 500 millions of people and the other with 100 million inhabitants and the largest markets in the world—I mean China and India—were not given a single chairmanship in any of the eight sections of that conference. That attitude, in spite of the change that has come over this Assembly, will continue. And therefore Sir even if the Government of India to-day has decided to rush into this matter may I suggest that caution is indicated? We may withdraw but we shall withdraw after a terrible loss—loss in prestige loss in money. An argument was heard yesterday that our sterling balances have nothing to do with our joining the International Fund and the International Bank. I do not subscribe to that view. Great Britain has come to terms with America and mighty Great Britain will pay no interest till 1951. India has not yet been told whether she will get any interest on the colossal sums taken away from this country. We heard during the last session that the predecessor of the present Finance Minister was in telegraphic communication with His Majesty's Government and that a delegation was likely to come and talk matters over with us. It is here that I should like to see the policy of vigour and forcefulness described by the Honourable the Finance Minister. Suppose they decline to talk to us, have we got any lever to catch hold of them. They will go on, they will talk of international difficulties, they will talk of the thousand and one things that interfere with the normal progress of affairs, and thus they will keep us hanging, and whether our credits are scaled down or whether the Churchillian proposition of their total abolition is accepted even if we do not get our sterling balances I would most humbly advise the present Finance Minister not to throw good money after bad. Whether we shall get our sterling balances or even a portion of them is a matter which cannot be discussed to-day. I hope the new Executive Council of the Governor-General will be able to induce London at least to talk to us. I know there is a noose round the neck of India, that noose has been tightened once or twice before, if you do not do this you will be hanged by the neck till you be dead on the 10th December or the 15th December. And now we are faced with this wretched 25th November, if by that date we do not do a certain thing we shall be kicked out of the organisation. I hope we are, for I am convinced in my own mind that this is not going to do us any good. Not one benefit or advantage has been described as to why we should go into this International Bank and Fund. Withdrawal alone is not satisfactory, and therefore I should like to impress upon the Honourable the Finance Member not to push India into this dangerous pit unless and until we know how and where we stand in regard to our own money. We listened to two dissertations on the purely economic aspect of the position of this country. I have tried to add some commercial, industrial and political aspects to that economic statement of policy. We heard of the par value of the rupee, we heard of inflation, we heard that we would have to pay a hundred rupees for gold where others would pay fifty, we also heard of exchange and convertibility. From every point of view and from every angle of vision we have been badly surrounded, and the 25th November is going to be something like the dates fixed for the Nuremberg hangings. Sir, let us forget this international business altogether. India, when it comes into the international world as India will be respected and will be listened to to-day we are not what we are trying to make ourselves to be. By and by we might succeed. I hope the change will come in my lifetime but the chances are that it is going to take longer than we imagine to-day. Every pie has to be garnered and taken care of, and because we are going to be allowed to sit near a Byrnes or near a Bevin we should not go into ecstasies over our being raised to mighty big positions. I am hoping that like Washington Delhi some day will be the centre of these international gatherings. But it is not yet. Let the Government of India in its present garb realise that it is not the Government of the Indian people. Let it realise that all the old methods of warfare have yet to be continued, let us not be dragged into problems and affairs which are not yet ours. Indian trade, Indian commerce, Indian industries will advance in spite of what we have been told. And therefore Sir, although my voice is a bit discordant I hope the Government of India to-day, and particularly the Honourable the Finance Minister will not forget that aspect of the matter which I have tried to place before him and the House. We are not going to get any interest on the amounts we are likely to advance. May I tell you Sir, that the haec of international debts and the Kellogg Pact and the one thousand and one aspects of international indebtedness and its repudiations leave me cold. I am not interested in the status India is likely to get according to the Honourable the Vice-Chancellor of Agra University. I would rather be where I am, save my money and give it to my hungry brothers and raise the standard of living of the men and women of this country whose agony built the Sterling Debts, without paying the slightest regard to how X shook hands with the President of America and Y was invited to the garden party at Buckingham Palace. Let us start on the new road to-day and let us for once declare our will that so long as you are not prepared to play the game by us we refuse to shake hands with you.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I have listened with very great attention to the lurid picture that has been presented both by the Honourable Member who spoke just before me and also my Honourable friend Mr. Manu Subedar who practically started the attack though he said now that there is a change of Government he is prepared to entrust this matter and not oppose this motion. I was also sorry to note that my Honourable friend from the other side, who is a member of the Government, Dr John Matthai was equally apologetic in his support for this motion. When he supported this motion he said that there were great dangers which had to be guarded against. The Honourable the mover said that in as much as he has experience of only 50 hours he was personally in favour of this motion but he would leave it to the Assembly to judge the motion on its merits, and so we stand.

Now, Sir, I was a member of this Committee and to the best of my lights I thought that it was in our interest and in the interest of India to continue our membership to the Monetary Fund and to the Bank. Though at the very outset when the Resolution was passed in February last I was opposed to this inasmuch as I was under the impression that the Viceroy and the Governor-General need not have pushed India into this Organisation as a member without consulting this Assembly and over its head. We have had sufficient time to think over this subject calmly and coolly. Now my desire is to place certain facts before this Assembly so that all members may come to their own conclusion independently of all political and other considerations. It is a very serious matter.

Now, Sir, I will address myself purely to the economic aspect of our membership in this Monetary Fund and Bank. Let us recollect, let not memories be short. After world war No. 1 what happened to the economic life in the world? For some time till 1929 it appeared that there was boom in trade and the peak was reached in 1929. Thereafter there was a slump and that slump came in trade and there was a crash. Almost every country devalued its currency to keep up its export trade, and ultimately England went off the gold standard. All thus the Honourable Members must take note of. Thereafter Germany did not allow its currency to be taken out, controls were introduced, currencies were managed, and there was an exchange war. The wars—both world war No. 1 and world war No. 2—that have been fought were not political wars, they were not wars of aggression, but wars which started in economics, they were purely economic wars. Let us therefore not make the same mistake which has been made already. The Honourable Dr John Matthai said we do not know what will happen after this war, whether the same slump might not come in after this war also in which case what are we to do? Are we not to come to some arrangement amongst ourselves to avoid another great war which may come in after that slump. Each country might like to devalue its own currency and various other devices may be started. Are we not to guard against another tragedy? Should we not avoid one mistake after another? If in spite of all these arrangements a political war comes in, possibly we may not be able to help it, and therefore, let us not get away from this institution which is, to my mind, very useful. My Honourable friend, Mr. Manu Subedar said are we not to follow the United Kingdom which did not want to get into this organisation. I ask him with all his experience whether we are in the same position as the United Kingdom. Why did the United Kingdom try to keep out of this? It is exactly because it did not want to subordinate its sterling which was ruling, he did not want to play the second role, he did not want to get subordinated economically to the United States of America, but still it wanted to keep up appearances. It wanted to have advantages also—Empire did not go. India is not the head of the Empire, we have none. In the Empire sterling still rules. Therefore England had already carved for itself a number of countries where sterling can rule though it has become dead, it is practically a bloc currency today. Dollar is ruling today but still England was pushing up the value of sterling in order to keep it artificially alive. Is our rupee valued anywhere else in the world? Are we not tied to the chariot-wheel of England by this unfortunate linking between the sterling and the rupee? The sterling is dead, the rupee is 40 hundred times. Are we to continue that tragedy? Therefore is there any analogy between the United Kingdom and ourselves. France also has its own bloc, she wanted to push its franc to Algiers so that its currency might flourish. Are we in that position? We have no ambitions, we have no spirit of aggression, we will be left all along in the cold. It is not because that England did not want to join that we should not join. On the other hand if we have been following the course of events, we must say that if England did not want to join we must join, but if England joins we must get out. We have been slaves. It is good for England, we have to think a hundred times before we join this institution. Therefore it is a simple test. If England did not join, I would unhesitatingly without any facts and figures join this institution. Then it is said Russia did not join. Do you know the political position of Russia? It wants to swallow up the Balkans, if it has not done so already. It wants India in turn. Both of us are inviting Russia. If we don't do, we can keep the wolf away from our door for some time. Therefore Russia has its own designs over the rest of the world, we are not in that happy or unhappy position. Therefore can we stand all alone? The other countries may come in sooner or later, but we shall be left alone.

My Honorable friends are terribly afraid of sinking 800 million dollars. Where are we sinking? It is a myth. We are unnecessarily deceiving ourselves. Let us have the monetary fund. The entire fund is about 8,000 million dollars. Our contribution is 400 million dollars. Are we asked to pay away all this money in gold? No, 25 per cent in dollars or 10 per cent in gold. 10 per cent will be our holdings and the money will be with us so far as the monetary fund is concerned. The balance of 75 per cent has to be kept in our own currency in our own Reserve Bank. Whenever we want money through ordinary channels, we will draw upon this currency. Is it a bad thing? There is one other institution where when we are not able to get hard currencies—take Switzerland or the U.S.A. for instance—we can draw upon this. Far from being disadvantageous, it is certainly advantageous. My Honorable friend Mr. Siddiqui was anxious for the day when India will be the seat of International institutions, but may I tell him that if you don't join the institution first of all you will be all alone. He will be a lone procession going singly. Even when he gets his desire fulfilled he wants all the other countries to come to his country. Then should we not go in advance to other countries? Let us therefore say it when the time is ripe. We can enter into this monetary fund with an absolutely clear conscience. Not a single pie will go out, on the other hand we have everything to gain.

Let us now come to the International Bank. Here out of 400 millions we have to contribute by way of shares in a total share capital of 9,100 million dollars. What is our percentage? 4.5. And what are we to pay? 2 per cent in gold and 18 per cent in our own currency—in rupees. The balance of 80 per cent is not called today. The balance will be called when all the investments of this Bank in foreign countries fail. Then there will be a call. The U.S.A. has subscribed 3,150 million dollars. Our subscription is 400 million. England 1,350 million dollars, another country 1,200 million dollars, China 550 million dollars, France 450 million dollars. I have got a complaint. Far from putting me as the sixth on the list when I could have given 500 million dollars or 100 million more. I would have ranked the fifth.

Why did those people put me as the sixth when I am ten times as big as France. France today is a poverty. France is a power which has gone down. Far from counselling instead of trying to put up our strength for getting the fifth share we are out of this institution? Is the whole world going to crash? Let these poor countries which have been devastated by war get some loans. It is not said in the Articles of Association that we are not entitled to aid. We are equally suffering. Isn't it common knowledge that even in the Reparations Conference at Paris we have had some reparations. It was no doubt said that we were not directly devastated by war. There has been no invasion except in a corner of India. All the same all the inconveniences which any country has suffered we have suffered. We have had famine and pestilence and more have died by them than in all the fronts in the war. It is stated in the Articles of Association and in the preamble that even countries like ours can draw upon this Bank for their purposes by way of loans. Isn't it a proper and good institution?

Therefore, Sir, so far as the financial implications are concerned, with a clean heart we can get into this. I do not expect that all the 400 millions which we are going to contribute will be lost. Will the United States cut our noses to spite their faces? Is it merely to bring about the ruin of this country that they are going to destroy their entire bank? I shall myself go to the United States and beg of them to give the money as a piece of charity!

Every man should have the right and privilege to contribute. I do not know who was the author of the saying that charity begins at home. How can you call it charity if it begins at home? It is selfishness. To say during this famine and pestilence I fed my children and they grew fat. That is not charity. Charity is what you do abroad. I, as a true Indian, born of the eastern culture, born with traditions both of Jesus and Mohammed the Prophet and of the ancients of this country, cannot subscribe to this. It is all to the unfortunate materialistic West. It is not for me, a spiritually minded Indian. I am prepared to say that charity does not begin with me. It begins in my House. If it does not, it has to begin at another man's house. Shall I invert it and say that my charity begins with Mr. Manu Subedar's property? It is scandalous. Therefore, even if it is a piece of charity, let us leave it at that.

These two institutions have come to say. We have already committed ourselves. It is true we were appointed to give advice to the Assembly. We felt that it was a task that the Assembly itself, having regard to the controversies, could settle. If three short men like myself came to any decision, in spite of the views of the experts, they would put us down for persons who could not carry weight. We did send a Governor, then a Director and at the third stage we recommended that two per cent gold might be given. Therefore, there is no doubt as regards our attitude. The majority of those people who sat in this Committee were wholeheartedly for the continuance of membership.

Let us come to one or two points raised by my Honorable friends. True it is that the par value of exchange has to be fixed. Nobody denies it. The par value of our currency has to be fixed in relation to our own ruling prices only. Unfortunately sufficient steps have not been taken by the previous Government to put up these prices. In their own countries they did not allow the prices to soar up so heavily. Is there anything to declare what our power is? They have given notice to us and we have time for two or three months, to say that we want this par to decide in accord with its prevailing rate on the 1st July or some other date. We want an account of the peculiar circumstances to settle the power of the particular rate. Even if we settled it down ten times above that, we can fix it on our own responsibility subject only to notification to the Fund management and thereafter pay the ten per cent. Those are the limits within which we can proceed. If I am all alone in this Assembly I may have a gun and shoot. But there is no one to die. I am not alone in the world. Two persons can play the same game. If I devalue my currency, others can do the same. If the currency is in my own country, instead of it I can have churries or trunkets. That is the trouble. If I monkey with my currency, isn't it open to them to monkey with theirs?

Sgt. N. V. Gadgil: They did so.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: True. But let us come together. Let us decrease or increase simultaneously. Let not each kick at the other. Let not nations quarrel. Is this an institution of which we should shudder and kick at and withdraw from? I am rather sorry that my Honourable friends who know much better and who dealt with such policies much before me should take this line. They have allowed their judgment to be clouded by other issues which are not germane to this point.

[Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar]

The next issue is the much vexed question of the sterling balance. It is true that at an early stage during the last Assembly I said they are not sterling balances. Having regard to the numerous papers that were proclaiming in England and other countries, those gentlemen were anxious to scale down. I said sterling balances are likely to become scuttling balances. Ultimately the balances might disappear. Have you not heard of Germans scuttling their ships? Likewise we were afraid of the sterling balances and having regard to the conflagration in the English papers, we honestly felt that they would scuttle down. They may reduce these balances. But we have a Government of our own. Within a period of 5 years they borrowed to the extent of Rs. 1,700 crores of articles. Today they owe us. It is all distress property from us. We did not give it willingly. It was for a war in which we were all interested. We did not want the Japanese to come here.

My honourable friend has been referring to debtors and creditors. He must be a creditor and therefore does not know the difficulties of a debtor. I know today my creditor comes to my house. The tables have been turned. In our parts nobody pays his debts. As soon as the Congress Government came to office, they thought that it was an Atlantic Charter for every debtor, that he need not pay his debts. Where are we? Are we still in the moon to think that the debtor will come to our doors to pay his debts. It is all moonshine. The creditor will no doubt keep quiet. What are we to do? Raise a huge army consisting of me who is above 50 and my friend Dr. Ziauddin Ahmed in his Colonel's uniform and expect both of us to go and shoot? What is it that can be done except by negotiations? We are a Government here. If it is the case of an individual we may arrest that man. We can attach his property and that is all that we can do with a private individual.

I will ask another question of my Honourable friend. I may be talking in ignorance, not having studied as much as my friends. We will assume that somehow by a stroke the English Government, the Socialist Government that it is, is ashamed of the manner in which we have been attacking them and they say that they will borrow, beg or steal and pay us this 1,700 million. Supposing they say "Take away all our plant and machinery, all our textile goods." What then is the position. The next day our currency which is now to the tune of 1,300 and odd crores, on account of which we are complaining, will get reduced to one rupee. Do you want the currency to be reduced in this country suddenly. Currency rose in this country steadily and rose from 200 crores before the war to 1,300 crores after the war. Are we to invite a steep fall in our currency?

Mr. Muhammad Nauman (Patna and Chota Nagpur cum Orissa Muhammadan) What is the backing of the present currency?

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Sterling. Yes, it is sterling, whether you like it or not. It means that it can be discharged by goods, whenever it is possible for them to do so. Assume that by one stroke of the pen that they pay it out of the 3,750 millions that they have borrowed from America or they go to America for another, 1,700 million and pay into the pockets of my friend Mr. Manu Subedar tomorrow. If they do, what will happen?

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Guntur cum Nellore non-Muhammadan Rural) Define the rupee.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I am coming to that. I may assure this House that if it is done, it will be to our disadvantage. Let our experts sit together and find out what will be the bearable limit of our currency. Can we go back to the pre-war 200 crores? No. With all confidence I may assure this House and even the experts on this subject that we can never go back to the pre-war period. It will be at least reduced to 600 crores or something about that. The balance we will have to get. We will get it. I do want all that to be given away immediately, but that should be some sort of negotiation.

Let my friends with all the strength of the National Government behind them go and fight. I am only against bringing this subject again and again as if it were an insuperable obstacle in the way of our mixing up with the rest of the world for various good purposes.

Now let me come to delinking. You are merely talking what our friends have said but there is no positive aspect of it which is advantageous to this country. One advantage of the present position is that I will get rid of the yoke of Britain so far as the economic field is concerned. Tomorrow sections 40 and 42 of the Reserve Bank Act must be repealed on account of which this 1,300 million sterling has accumulated.

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan (Finance Member) Sections 40 and 41

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I am a little in advance of that. How has it been forced on us? Under those sections it is obligatory for us in India, for the Reserve Bank, to honour any sterling paper that is given to us. For sterling the ratio has been fixed long ago. Though controversy and battle royal have raged over the ratio, it still continues as it is. So if some sterling paper is presented the Reserve Bank of India must go on printing notes in the Nasik Security Printing Press, though we could have easily said "I am not going to honour your sterling paper, and I am not bound to do it. Pay us in dollars or in gold or give me your Midland Railway Company or some Hotel Cecil in satisfaction of my claims in your country." I am not imagining all this. It has been suggested that just as the Englishman has property in this country why not we also have property in his country? I can imagine some of my friends riding a coach and pair in England and be the Managers of some Midland Railway Company. Let us satisfy our imagination. The difficulty was that under those sections of the Reserve Bank of India Act we were obliged to honour their sterling and pay rupees in exchange. We could have easily told them that their sterling paper is valueless in our country. We have no need for your sterling paper and it is so much waste-paper. Pay down in gold, textile machinery or some other machinery, in aeroplanes or motor cars or in some other goods. We were not entitled to say so today. Is it not economic slavery? We were tied down to the chariot wheels of England. That is what has made us to try to cut ourselves adrift. We must snatch at this opportunity. What is the position today? You can enter into any multilateral arrangement. Are we to sink or swim with England. England is today a second rate power. Tomorrow I would bring an amendment to the Reserve Bank of India Act and say that sterling need not be honoured, rupees need not be paid in exchange and therefore we are not going to pay it.

Let me address myself to the facts and figures. My Honourable friend committed, I am afraid, some mistakes with respect to the figures. Let us not accumulate sterling any more. What is immediately important are the figures relating to the U.K. The balance of trade in our favour is as follows. In 1938 the imports from the U.K. were 48 crores, exports to the U.K. 55 crores. We had a balance of 7 crores in our favour. In 1943 imports were 25 crores and exports 54 crores and we had a favourable balance of 29 crores. In 1944 we imported 38 crores and exported 65 crores and our balance was 27 crores and in 1945 the imports were 50 crores and exports 64 crores and we have still a balance of 14 crores. It is increasing. Is it not necessary now to say Stop? We may say "I do not want your sterling. I won't allow you to accumulate this. Liquidate your debts whether by instalments or otherwise. Pay us in gold or something else. How long are we to continue this burden?" Under the Reserve Bank of India Act, however clever Sir Chintaman Deshmukh might be, in the face of Sections 40 and 41, he is bound to receive sterling and pay in rupee. In one breath we say that Sir Chintaman is so good and what is Sir Chintaman's advice. It is unfortunate that he is not here to advise us. I am glad that encomium has been paid to that eminent economist. He did advise us not only to do this but we have also gathered some experience after six months cogitating. He tried his best. I am not merely imagining. You will see that we say in the interim reports that to the best of our ability we must go on asking for time. In my own way I am an expert—I have specialised as a lawyer in the matter of taking adjournments and we know how to get them—it pleases both the clients and ourselves. Therefore we tried to delay this agreement and asked Sir Chintaman Deshmukh to go on asking for time until it came to breaking point and he said that consistent with our self-respect it is not desirable to ask for time any more. We would be put down as defaulters, and nothing is so bad in the world as a bank or nation to be called a defaulter in the matter of giving 400 million dollars. We had come to the end of the tether and with all his capacity and ingenuity he was not in a position, without the aid of this Assembly and without this international monetary fund to deal with this sterling, he wants that this amendment of the Reserve Bank Act should be taken up emergently. Not only he but my honourable friend's predecessor, Sir Archibald Rowlands, himself said in the note that he circulated that the moment we enter into the monetary fund the one advantage we gain is this, dealing with the sterling. In the days of Pandit Motilal Nehru the battle of the ratio was fought and the ratio is still a vexed question. Therefore is it not right that we do this? More than political independence, I feel free the day when the Reserve Bank Act sections 40 and 41 will be deleted from the statute book.

My honourable friends think there is the dollar pool and America is embracing us with both hands and we have an overflowing trade balance and therefore we need not worry ourselves with this international bank. Let us see the situation. The trade figures are these. In 1938, we had imports from the United States to the tune of 1141 crores and the exports were 1343 crores, the balance of trade in our favour being 2 crores. That was before the war. In 1943 the imports were 17 crores as against exports of 32 crores, leaving us a favourable balance of 15 crores. In 1944, the imports were 39 crores and the exports 48 crores, the favourable balance being 9 crores. But last year—1945—our imports were to the tune of 71 crores while exports were only 50 crores—a minus balance, an adverse balance of 20 crores. This may go on increasing if we go on giving orders for plant and machinery in that country. How are you going to meet this deficit? We were under the impression that there is a huge dollar pool. This is something like the son quarrelling with his father after everything had been wasted away by the father, filling a minor's suit and making sweeping allegations. The government then in existence and which was then all power devastated and made the worst use of the dollar pool which we earned by way of surplus trade balances, they misused it and abused it for their own purposes. But what is the use of our going on quarrelling till the end of the world until they make reparations to us? Reparations may be got more easily from Germany than from England. Are we to wait and not immediately get dollars from America? How are you going otherwise to meet this minus 20 crores? Sterling is useless. England knows that sterling is un-currency coin in the United States and therefore she has borrowed 3,700 million dollars from America and are we to sit with folded hands? My honourable friend said "What is the good of issuing pamphlets and requesting the trade and the industrialists to tell us the par value of exchange?" I never thought this argument would be used at all. I am not an expert in these matters. These are for big financiers who know exactly where the shoe pinches. I am glad the government is not run by industrialists but I would certainly ask the industrialists to give us advice as to what ought to be the par value of the rupee they know much better as to how these things work, and whether it will be advantageous to us, whether imports will come in or whether exports will go out—these are within their knowledge. Are there not eminent industrialists like Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas and Mr. Birla? Are their opinions to have no value merely because they are industrialists? I do not pretend to know anything about these things. But is it proper for professors and others to say that these persons ought not to be consulted? I say the Government is adopting the right course in consulting the industrialists and chambers of commerce and federations of chambers they are the persons who are competent to give advice and in future also I would request and advise this government not to ignore these people. Personally I am not an industrialist and I do not stand to lose anything. I am entitled to talk more on socialism than on other subjects because I am the biggest socialist going and I stand to get advantage as a socialist. Therefore I shall not deceive myself or cloud the issue by saying that the right type of persons ought not to be consulted. No doubt the government has to gather all kinds of opinion—it should not be carried away merely by one set of opinions, but every section is entitled to give an opinion. Therefore so far as this par value and other things are concerned, we have more to gain than to lose.

I have kept the House sufficiently long. I urge the acceptance of this motion not on account of sentiment or political advantages, not because we have been allowed to make our representations on the South African question before the U.N.O. That is a vexed question. We are still struggling under various difficulties, but the one advantage will be that we will be thrown along with various other countries of the world, linking with gold or dollars, which is the real currency now. The moment we find that this does not work properly, we can get out. It is just like saying that before the marriage is celebrated we must think of divorce and what will happen after the divorce to the jewels, etc., or to go still further and say "What will happen if the son-in-law should die?" That is not the argument that I am trying to place. Our arguments have been misunderstood. It is not that we do not have a right to withdraw. Withdrawal at any stage will not leave us alone so far as the bank is concerned. By that time the bank would have spent away all its money—thrown it to the wolves—I am not unmindful of that, but will there be such a huge crash when it is manned by so many people? It is not as if it is as bad as some of my friends want to make it out to be. Nor is it as rosy. No institution in the world is perfect. The world is trying to progress.

I would like to make a suggestion, but it ought not to be taken as a personal request. I would like, as in the United States this Committee or some other committee should continue to be in existence, to be consulted from time to time. The United States set up a standing committee at Bretton Woods to advise the President. The present committee may become functus officio the moment it has reported to this House, or its membership may continue if the House of its own accord decides it. It may be consulted. But I would urge upon the Honourable Finance Member that this committee or one with additions or subtractions, but a standing committee of this House, ought to be consulted from time to time. There are points to be consulted about. One of the most important is this. When Russia did not join we joined and we were the fifth, but it is said there are persons in order of contribution of shares. The United States stands first, then comes the United Kingdom, then Russia then China and then France. The sixth place is given to India. In the articles of association both of the bank and of the monetary fund, it is said that the first five members have got the right to nominate the permanent directors to the directorate. We come sixth and we have got only the right to elect our directors along with the others—with Venezuela and with Kamatschatka and other small countries. I request them to put me also in one of them.

Mr. K. G. Ambegaonkar (Government of India. Nominated official). We can elect ourselves with our own quota.

Sir Gowdasjee Jehangir (Nominated Non-Official). Even if Russia comes in, we shall still be in.

Mr. K. G. Ambegaonkar: Till the next election.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Not if Russia comes in. No amount of jugglery can alter the present position. The article clearly says that you can be there only as a temporary member, just as the caretaker government was here till our government came in. The moment Russia comes in we shall be obfuscated out. What is the good of trying to throw dust in our eyes. India has, to get out the moment Russia comes in. We must pray that at least until next year Russia may not come in. Why should we not have an honoured place. If five members are entitled to elect, why not a sixth member be entitled to nominate a permanent member. We must insist upon that. There are other ways of implanting ourselves permanently into international organisations. That is the right attitude to take. We should be watchful with a thousand eyes from time to time. That is No 1.

No 2 is that you must have a permanent committee behind you. The Governor and the Directors may be invited to state what steps have to be taken so that they may advise the Government from time to time as to the progress made. I also find from a debate in the House of Commons that the fund is to be used by various influential powers for extending their spheres of influence. The directors there may lend money to Greece where a similar monarchy like that of the United Kingdom exists. England has got sympathies with Greece and they want to wean Greece away from the onslaught or overtures of Russia. I hope my Honourable friends in the European Group will not misunderstand me. The United States may try to give this money to China. Even the U.N.R.R.A. has not been used properly. The United States is more fond of China than India. I do want this committee to continue. It should advise the Government and report to this House. We must see that this money is not used for rehabilitating war ravaged countries or for increasing the spheres of influence of the United States or Britain. Therefore a standing committee is necessary.

Thirdly about the par value. It should not be settled over the heads of the Assembly. I do not want that the par value should be decided only in the Secretariat. The opinions collected on this point should be placed before this committee. We should be watchful of the progress with a thousand eyes. The Honourable the Finance Member has mastered this subject in such a short time, although it took us many long months. He delivered a beautiful speech. I would urge on him that he should continue this standing committee of the House and see that the money is not abused by the important powers. Otherwise harm will be done to this country. I request all sections of the House to wholeheartedly support this motion.

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan: Sir, I am indeed grateful to the House for the friendly reception which they have given to the motion which I had the honour to move yesterday as a member of this Government. I am also grateful to my friends for the kind sentiments which they have been good enough to express about me and I hope and trust that the friendliness shown during the course of this debate will continue. On my part, I would like to assure the Honourable Members of this House that as long as I hold charge of the department my earnest endeavour will be to see that the finances of the country are managed in the interest of the peoples of India.

My Honourable friend and colleague, Dr Matthal, in a very able speech yesterday, if I may be permitted to say so, put forward the case for the acceptance of the motion which I had moved. I would not like to traverse the same ground but there are certain points which have arisen in the course of the debate on which I would like to reassure the Honourable Members of this House. My friend Mr Manu Subedar whose friendly criticism I value and my friend Mr Abdur Rahman Siddiqi whose discordant note I listened to with a musical mind have referred to this question of sterling balances. My friend Mr Siddiqi said that yesterday I used the expression 'as soon as possible'. May I remind him that I did not use that expression in connection with the payment of the debt. I used that expression in connection with the opening of negotiations and arriving at a settlement and therefore that expression 'as soon as possible' stands. Sir, my Honourable friend Mr Subedar said that His Majesty's Government, leave alone the question of coming to a settlement, are not even willing to start negotiations. I cannot say what has been the attitude of His Majesty's Government in the past but I can tell him, and my knowledge is based on certain correspondence that has passed between this Government and His Majesty's Government, that since the complexion of the Government of India has changed, the attitude of His Majesty's Government has also undergone a change and they are today anxious to start these negotiations with regard to our sterling balances.

My Honourable Colleague, Dr Matthal yesterday stated the policy of the Government in very explicit terms with regard to the sterling balances. I endorse every word of that and I want to make it absolutely clear that whatever agreement may have been arrived at between the U S A and the United Kingdom in connection with the Anglo-American loan, we are not bound by it. We were not a party to it and if it is mentioned as one of the terms that there shall be a scaling down of the sterling balances, well, India is certainly not bound by it and we do not accept that proposition. My Honourable friend Mr Manu Subedar and Mr Siddiqui also, who, if I might be permitted to say so, amplified the remarks that Mr Manu Subedar had made, stated that England had not paid its debts after the first Great War. May I tell them that it is wrong tactics to remind a debtor that he can commit default with impunity. We should have belief in this that England as an honourable nation will stand by the debt which it has incurred and I hope and trust that U K will honour the debt which they owe to this country.

Now, Sir, there is another point in the speech of Mr Siddiqui. He referred to the third interim report and said that the members in their report had not really definitely stated their opinion about it and therefore he felt that the members of this Committee were not quite clear whether we should accept to go in and remain in these International organisations or we should not. Three of the four members who have signed the report have supported the motion which I have placed before the House more vehemently than even what I have done. Therefore, it is quite clear that these Honourable friends, who had certainly greater knowledge and information with regard to this matter, are convinced that it is in the interests of this country to join these International organisations. My friend Mr Abdur Rahman Siddiqui stated that if I had come forward with a proposal to give all this amount of money which is involved in the present motion and said that I wanted to give this as a gift to the war-ravaged countries, he would have supported me and said "Yes, go and regain your soul". His complaint against me is that it is not only that I want to regain my soul but I also want to protect my body. Therefore, really speaking, I do not think there is any strong argument that has been advanced by my Honourable friend in opposition to this except his distress based on past experience. My friend lives in the past, I want to live in the future.

Sir, there is one question that has been referred to by Mr Tyson and other Honourable Members and it is the question with regard to the par value of money. I can assure my friends that before any decision is taken, every effort will be made to get the opinions and the views of all those interests and persons that are qualified to express opinion on this subject.

Sir, my friend Mr Ananthasayanam Ayyangar suggested that we should either continue the present Committee or have another Standing Committee to give advice and whom we may consult from time to time with regard to this matter. All that I can say at this moment is that this proposal will certainly receive my very careful consideration. I do want and it is my desire and I am sure it is the desire of all the members of the present Government that whatever action we take and whatever policy we adopt it should be done with the co-operation and the support of the Honourable Members of this House. Therefore I can assure him that I will certainly give my very careful consideration to his proposal.

Sir, there is just one more point that I would like to mention. During the course of the debate a number of points have been raised and I may assure those

[Mr Liaquat Ali Khan]

Honourable Members whose speeches I have not been able to refer to that I shall have every point examined by the Department and shall consider it myself personally. I hope that in a matter of this kind I can always count upon not only the support and co-operation but also the advice of the Members of this Honourable House. So I commend my motion to the acceptance of this House.

Mr. Deputy President: The question is

"That this Assembly, having considered the third report of the Committee on the Bretton Woods Agreements do hereby approve India's continued membership of the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development."

The motion was adopted.

INDIAN TRADE UNIONS (AMENDMENT) BILL

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram (Labour Member) : Sir, I beg to move

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Trade Unions Act, 1926 be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Mr. V. M. Joshi, Prof. N. G. Ranga, Pandit Bilkrishna Sharma, Mr. Vaidial Lalubhai, Sir T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar, Sreejit Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri, Mr. P. J. Griffiths, Mr. A. C. Inkup, Sardar Sampuran Singh, Mr. S. C. Joshi, Miss Maniben Kara, Mr. S. Guruswami, Mr. Muhammad Numan, Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer, Seth Yusuf Abdool Hatoon and the Mover, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

Sir, I do not want to make a long speech on this subject. The Bill deals with a subject which is not altogether new. It has engaged the attention of the Central Government since 1910 when it was discussed at a meeting of Provincial Labour Ministers. Thereafter Provincial Governments were formally consulted and the views expressed in reply were rather divergent. After considering the replies and discussions in the second Labour Conference in January 1941 it was decided to proceed with legislation and the Provincial Governments and organisations of employers and workers were consulted in the form of a draft Bill. In the light of replies received a revised Bill was prepared and circulated to provincial governments in August 1943 and a motion for enactment was adopted by this House the same year. That Bill was not however proceeded with and was allowed to lapse. The provincial governments were again consulted on some substantial points and a new Bill was ultimately prepared. This is the Bill which is now before the House. I think it will be agreed that voluntary recognition of Trade Unions though commended by the Royal Commission on Labour has not proved successful and in many disputes which have come to the notice of the Central Government, one common point in dispute related to non-recognition of a particular union of workers. It was difficult in many cases, in the absence of statutory provisions to compel the employer to recognise the Union, while it would have also been embarrassing to do so by persuasion when no rules or conditions have been laid down subject to which a Union will be entitled to recognition. We have therefore come to the conclusion that the time has come for a statutory provision by which trade unions fulfilling certain conditions should be entitled to be recognised by the employers. The Bill provides for such a statutory recognition by the appropriate Government which in the case of Unions in the central sphere will be the Central Government and the provincial governments concerned in regard to trade unions in the provincial spheres. The principal object of the Bill is that a trade union fulfilling the conditions provided in clause 28(d) will be entitled to recognition by the employer and one of the important conditions is that the Union should be a representative trade union. Another important condition is that the Union seeking recognition must have been registered under the Trade Unions Act for at least twelve months prior to its application for recognition. This salutary provision will prevent too many trade unions being formed hastily and applying for recognition straightaway. Opinions have been expressed that a trade union seeking recognition must contain not less than a prescribed percentage of workers in the undertaking or industry. In a Central Act which should meet the requirements both of the central and the provincial governments, when conditions may be different in different areas, some elasticity is most desirable. For instance, where the Union is of workers of one single factory, it may well be desirable to provide for membership on a larger proportion of workers than in an industry scattered in different areas. For this purpose provision has been made that a trade union shall be deemed to be representative trade union only if it satisfies such conditions as may be prescribed by the appropriate government. The ultimate ideal to be aimed is to have one strong single union truly representative. But it may not be practicable to achieve it immediately. For some time to come, there might be more than one recognised Union. But provision has been made in clause 28(g) of the Bill by which among others the industrial court set up for the purpose will have the power to withdraw recognition of a trade union if satisfied that it has ceased to be a representative trade union. This provision along with that of clause 38(d) will give power to the appropriate Government to impose suitable conditions so as to ensure that a large number of rival trade unions do not spring up thereby damaging the cause of workers instead of furthering it. If a statutory provision is made for recognition of trade unions and for giving such recognised unions certain rights and privileges, it is equally essential that such unions should also realise certain fundamental obligations. Therefore certain practices by the trade unions have been defined as unfair practices and any recognised trade union guilty of unfair practice will be liable to have its recognition withdrawn. The unfair practices will be for a majority of the members of the Union to take part in an irregular strike or for the executive of the Union to advise or actively to support or to instigate irregular strike. It is not of course the intention to forbid declaration of strikes in a regular way in conformity with rules made by the Union laying down the procedure for declaring a strike. Also it will be unfair practice if the officer of a recognised union submits any return containing false statements. It is realised that while some responsibility and obligations are put on the members and executives of recognised trade unions, some essential conditions should be imposed on the employers also in regard to their dealing with such Union. Therefore interference with the rights of workmen to organise, form, join or assist trade unions, interference with the formation or administration of any trade union, encouraging or discouraging membership of any trade union by discrimination against the employees concerned, penalising workmen for making allegations or giving evidence in enquiries or proceedings relating to matters connected with dealings of recognised trade unions or any failure to comply with the mandatory provisions relating to rights of recognised trade unions have been declared as unfair practices by employers. Provision has been made for punishing with fine an employer who is guilty of an unfair practice. The punishment should fit the crime and a provision has been made that a union whose recognition has been withdrawn can apply de novo for recognition on the expiry of not less than six months from the date of withdrawal of its recognition. To inspire the utmost confidence of both parties the Bill provides that except where there is agreement the ultimate decision regarding recognition will be settled by the appropriate government after receiving the recommendations of the industrial court to be set up for the purpose. The industrial court will consist only of persons who are qualified for appointment as Judges of High Courts.

Sir, some might criticise that the provision in clause 28(d) (h) which allows the appropriate government to prescribe further conditions to be fulfilled before recognising trade union gives rather wide powers to the appropriate government. Here, again, as I have said before, the Central Act should be reasonably elastic so that the appropriate Government will be empowered to frame rules on various matters the nature of which may vary in order to meet local requirements in any particular province. Quite apart from the obvious desirability for legislation for statutory recognition of trade unions, there is another important factor which makes such a legislative enactment essentially necessary. A Bill for dealing with industrial disputes has already been introduced in this session and one main feature of it is that the provisions will go to operate where the appropriate government is satisfied that in regard to a dispute by the workers, the workers making the application really represent those employed in the industrial undertaking concerned. A system of statutory recognition of trade unions would considerably assist in judging whether a body of workers making an application do really represent the majority or a sufficient percentage of workers in the industrial undertaking concerned. In fact one provincial Government in its Industrial Relations Bill which was recently passed has included provisions relating to the recognition of unions in the Industrial Relations Bill itself. It is, however, a matter mostly of convenience whether this would be more suitable than an amendment of the Trade Unions Act as proposed in the present Bill. The Government of India has come to the conclusion that in the matter of central legislation the procedure we propose will be more convenient.

[Shri Jagjivan Ram]

Sir, with these words I commend that the Bill be referred to a select committee.

Mr. Deputy President: Motion moved

"That the Bill further to amend the Indian Trade Unions Act, 1926 be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Mr. N. M. Joshi, Prof. N. G. Ranga, Pandit Balkrishna Sharma, Mr. Vaidilal Lalubhu, Sri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar, Srijut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri, Mr. P. J. Griffiths, Mr. A. C. Inskip, Sardar Sampuran Singh, Mr. S. C. Joshi, Miss Maniben Kara, Mr. S. Guruswamy, Mr. Muhammad Nauman, Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer, Seth Yunus Abdoola Haicon and the Mover, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad (United Provinces Southern Division, Muzaffarnagar Rural). Sir, I wish we had more time to study this Bill. I wish the Bill had been circulated and opinions received, but I should like to draw attention to one or two general things at this stage. Although we are handicapped by the fact that it has come from a department which has no regard for the opinions of the country, I will say at the outset that the method of approach of the Labour Department to this labour question is faulty. You will not satisfy the labourers of India by adopting these methods of piecemeal legislation. This might be good 25 years ago but they are not good in 1946 or the years that follow. There is great unrest in labour and these little pieces of conciliation will not satisfy them. They want some kind of radical change and a full share in the administration, without which they will not be satisfied. I pointed out last year that there are two methods only by which you can solve the labour problem. One is the method of Russia of abolishing capitalism altogether and nationalising all industries. Under that method there will be no strikes and no legislation of this kind will be necessary. But I am sure India is not prepared for that kind of thing and I am myself not in favour of these Bolshevik methods and abolishing capitalism altogether, the other method is the one which Germany adopted before the Great War of 1914 and which I recommend to the Honourable Member for careful consideration. Now that we have our own Government and we should have no difficulty. We know that in every country labour is now in power. Things are not decided by the arguments of the intelligentsia but by the votes of the majority. And labour is now in the majority everywhere. So we have to consider it carefully. Under the German system every one had an interest in the industry. The workers, the directors, the shareholders, form one corporate body.

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir (Nominated Non-Official). Sir, on a point of order, what my Honourable friend is saying does not seem to be relevant to the Bill before us. He is explaining his own philosophy but has not touched upon the Bill at all.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: In the absence of the motion for circulation I am opposing the Bill altogether and I am giving my arguments. I said at the beginning that these piecemeal measures are all useless. I am saying that in Germany before the war of 1914 the workers, directors and shareholders were all considered to be a body corporate engaged in that particular trade. Every one had a living wage and the profit that accrued was divided among all these panies in an equitable manner. The workers came to think that it was their factory and efficient working would mean more profits in which they would have a share, and if there was loss they would suffer. So the question of a tug-of-war between the employers and the workers never arose there because everybody was in the same boat. Unless you create such atmosphere in our industries you will have this tug-of-war. Either you nationalise all your industries and follow the Russian example or you must make the workmen feel that they have a real interest in the factory in which they are working, that their interest is not limited to the wages they draw but it lies in the prosperity and success of that factory they are business partners. That is the principle which you have to inculcate, and then these Bills will be useless because there will be no fight between capital and labour. You anticipate this struggle between workers and employers and resulting strikes and other difficulties. This is the position which you create and I must warn the Honourable Member that if he creates this position, his own followers, whom he has the honour to represent, will one day burn the factories of these big capitalists who will come to grief. The time is not far.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil (Bombay Central Division Non-Muhammadan Rural) Do not advance it.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: You have not realized the feeling which a workman has got. His feeling is this. Here is a man who has raised a capital of one lakh and has started a factory. He has paid 100 rupees as his share. The lakh of rupees which the shareholders pay do not bring in any money, they do not constitute the factory, they do not bring in the profit, the profit is made by the workmen, they are the people who produce wealth. And then they are thrown out entirely. By putting in a lakh of rupees, the capitalist accumulates a reserve fund to the tune of 40 lakhs, and 30 to 40 per cent is paid as dividend. Who is responsible for all this profit? Labour, labour who has been put down, it is a form of indentured labour. The workman thinks within his mind that this man has invested 100 rupees and he wants me to work hard enough so that he may earn 40 per cent instead of 3 per cent which he would otherwise earn in a bank. And he is right. It is the workman who is responsible for putting this additional income into the pockets of these shareholders. He says why do you demand from the workmen so much work that for every hundred rupees you get 40 rupees income in addition to 40 lakhs which you have already put down in Reserve. This is the feeling of the workmen, and this Bill will not stop this feeling. You will have to go much further than that. That is not the way in which this question should be settled. You may satisfy them for two years more, perhaps 3 years, but the time is not far distant when labour will not be satisfied by these measures. All these fashionable leaders of workmen who have made careers in the name of labour have not expounded their case properly. They do not represent the true case of the workman. The true case of the workman is this. What right has any capitalist got to expect the workman to do so much work that with 100 rupees he should earn 40 rupees as interest?

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated Non-Official) No right.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: What steps have you taken as a representative of labour to put a stop to this practice? Not a word from Mr. Joshi for the last 15 years.

Mr. Deputy President: Will the Honourable Member come to the subject of trade unions?

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: I oppose the Bill and I say it is absolutely useless.

Shri Sri Prakasa (Benares and Gorakhpur Divisions Non-Muhammadan Rural) These are preliminary remarks, he has not yet begun!

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: This particular thing should be looked into. If you shove it today, you will have to take it up tomorrow. You can have no security of these factories unless you look into this matter. This is the feeling that is now uppermost in the mind of the younger generation, the young men of India think somewhat differently from what we old men have been thinking.

[Dr Zia Uddin Ahmad]

in the past. They are more impetuous and they want to get on, they have been talking about the equitable distribution of wealth. My Honourable friend, Sir John Matthai, gave a lecture day-before-yesterday on equitable distribution. Take Birla on one side and a workman on the other. Is it not resented by the workman? After all, look at the way in which Birla lives and the way in which a workman lives. This agitates their mind. This little Bill will not satisfy him. If you take his opinion, he will say that this is an eye-wash and this is simply wasting the time, it is not sufficient, they must have full share in the administration of wealth which is really produced by their own labour.

As regards recognition of the unions, I have been fighting all the time against disqualifying class unions. I have not read this Bill along with the original Act but there is one thing I must say and that is class unions should not be disqualified. If you altogether omit the recognition of class unions, then it will be strongly resented.

Miss Maniben Kara (Nominated Non-Official). On a point of information I want to understand from the Honourable Member what he means by 'class unions'.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: It is the same thing as what you call 'communal unions'.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Supposing all Vice-Chancellors forms a class?

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad. With these words I hope that the Honourable Member will take this matter seriously. This is the way in which the majority of young men are thinking and you cannot postpone it for a long time. You have to satisfy your labour.

Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai (Ahmedabad Millowners' Association Indian Commerce). This is not the Wages Bill.

Shri Sri Prakasa: You are thinking of some other Bill, you are on the wrong track.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: I know it is not the wages Bill. But I tell you that the people for whom you have introduced this Bill will not be satisfied. You have to do something substantial for them. It is a waste of time doing things in this way. I request you not to waste the time of the Assembly. You had better consult the labour and ask them what they want. They will tell you that they want what I have been telling just now. This thing will not satisfy them.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Guntur cum Nellore Non-Muhammadian Rural). Mr Deputy President, I am rather surprised at the attitude displayed today by Dr Zia Uddin. Dr Zia Uddin wants labour to obtain all the fruits of its own labour. There is no difference of opinion on that particular point between him and ourselves. We all want labour to come into its own and to be able to control all the activities of industrial production in which labour is employed and to have complete say in the matters of their employment and conditions of life and in the end to appropriate for themselves and also for the whole of society all the fruits of their labour through their own volition and vote.

The point that is under discussion at present is not that all. We have to take things as they are in this country. I do agree with him in giving a warning to our employers that they learn to behave much better towards their labour than they do at present. Otherwise things would become much more hot for them in the very near future. At the same time, as things are today there are the employers and the employees. The employees are in a helpless condition. It is true they are getting themselves organized. They are becoming more and more powerful. Yet they are not sufficiently powerful and organised. That is why there is a need for a bill like this.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: You could go to the country and organise it!

Prof. N. G. Ranga: My friend wants me to organize labour. That is exactly what I am busy about and what my Honourable friend is not busy about.

Already one suggestion was made by Shri Prakasa that he should go and organise the Vice-Chancellors. I am afraid the Vice-Chancellors are already organised. They are so few and vociferous and monied.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: Hear, hear. The last is the most important!

Prof. N. G. Ranga: It is easy for one to throw these gibes at these so-called fashionable labour leaders. It is true that labour leaders sometimes manage to come decently prepared to this House and present the case of labour. Is it the case of Dr Zia Uddin or those who think like him that merely because a man is decently dressed he is no longer entitled to be the spokesman of labour? I know there are so many friends of mine who would indulge in such cheap gibes at people like myself when we claim to speak on behalf of agriculturists and peasants. It is easy for them to say that peasants should not feed themselves properly but they should continue to feed others properly, that workers should not dress themselves properly but that they should be busy dressing all other people properly. That is a very unreasonable attitude. Fashionable or otherwise, well dressed or otherwise, a labour leader continues to be a labour leader so long as he sincerely and stoutly espouses the cause of labour, and I can assure my Honourable friend, Dr Zia Uddin, even if he were to become forgetful about the activities and services of one of the fashionable labour leaders who happens to be in our midst—Mr Joshi—certainly it is not only the microscopic minority that industrial labour happens to be in this country which is proud of him. It is the whole nation of India which is proud of him, not only because he happens to be a Member of this House, and a Father of this House, but also because he has been a stout and consistent champion of industrial labour of this country.

Therefore it is not right to waver this House and divert its attention in the wrong way by bringing in irrelevant considerations.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: He is a Vice-Chancellor. Do not worry!

Prof. N. G. Ranga: We want profit-sharing as only a midway solution, whereas my Honourable friend, Dr Zia Uddin seems to think that profit sharing is everything. It is not so. We want the workers themselves to come to control all these industries. But today they are not in control of these industries. They are so poor and powerless and unorganised that they have begun to organise themselves. But their organisations are not powerful and they are obliged to come to the Government during the last 25 years with this request that their organisations should be recognised. It is true that there will certainly come a time in this country when it will be possible for our labour, industrial and organised, to put up the slogan of one union for all classes of workers as is happening to-day in England. The other day there the British Trade Union Congress put out this slogan and is now trying to substantiate it so that if, any one particular trade or industry there will be one union claiming to represent all the organised labour in that particular industry and it would not allow the class to be divided into two or three rival unions lest they should be the worse exploited by the employers. Until that happy day comes, it is most necessary that a national Government like ours should come forward and should hasten to come forward with a Bill like this to assure our workers even with this little minimum of protection.

What is it that is sought to be given? My Honourable friend and many others who might follow him, seem to think that it is this present Bill which seems to perpetuate a class war or foment a class war. Isn't it a fact that today there is a class war going on between one class of people and another, whether it is noticeable or otherwise? It is true. It becomes noticeable the moment labour become conscious of their drawbacks, organise themselves, begin to assert their rights and demand a fair deal for themselves. That does not mean that it does not exist and prevail in all these areas, industries and factories where the workers for the time being happen to be so powerless and voiceless that they cannot assert their right. It is part of statesmanship to recognise facts as they are and then try to find a solution. We all want to eliminate class war. Already the Madras Premier has shown one of the ways. Mahatma Gandhi has been showing it too. My friend wants us to remember that all young people are being influenced by new ideas. Certainly I am glad he has fallen in line with them and I hope that he will also march in step with them and try and abolish all these inequalities and also eliminate the development of the political and economic power of these great capitalists. We are showing the way, and one of the things we wish to do is by this means also to give power to our industrial employees so that they would be able to assert themselves and make it impossible for these capitalists to continue to press down the masses through their power, their instrument and weapon of class war.

How are we to eliminate this class war in a more positive form?

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: You can say that to-morrow!

Prof. N. G. Ranga: By enabling our workers to defeat the capitalists and make it impossible for the employers to continue to exploit them.

Mr. Deputy President (Khan Mohammad Yamin Khan) Has any Honourable Member given any notice of a motion for the circulation of this Bill?

Haji Abdus Sattar Haji Ishaq Seth (West Coast and Nilgiris Muhammadan) Yes, there is. But the difficulty was that it was given only this morning and it was expected that the previous motion would go on till five o'clock. But this has come up now and I request you that that motion may be allowed to-morrow. If you circulate it to Members tonight, then to-morrow it can be moved.

Mr. Deputy President: Has it been handed over to the Secretary?

Haji Abdus Sattar Haji Ishaq Seth: Yes.

Mr. Deputy President: The Honourable Member may continue to-morrow. The House now stands adjourned till to-morrow.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Wednesday, the 30th October 1946.

DEREQUISITIONING OF PROPERTY SINCE THE BEGINNING OF 1946

67. *Mr. C. P. Lawson : Will the Defence Secretary please state

(a) what progress has been made in the derequisitioning of property since the beginning of 1946,

(b) what is the present expenditure on account of requisitioned property ; and

(c) how many camps erected for war purposes are now standing unoccupied, what is their capacity and what steps are being taken to utilise them ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : (a) Between 1st January 1946 and 30th September 1946 the number of buildings derequisitioned was 2,947 and lands 647. The total percentage of buildings derequisitioned up to the end of September 1946 was 61 per cent. and that of lands 18 per cent.

(b) The rent for requisitioned buildings on 30th September 1946 was approximately Rs 186 lakhs and for lands Rs 434 lakhs per annum.

(c) Information is not readily available, but is being collected and will be laid on the table in due course.

All steps are being taken to transfer members of the Armed Forces from requisitioned property to vacant camps, but it is pointed out that during the demobilization period large numbers of troops are continually returning from overseas and some of these camps must be kept vacant for some time as they will be required at short notice to provide accommodation for troops on arrival in India.

Mr C P. Lawson : Is the Honourable Member aware that his predecessor gave this House an undertaking that derequisitioning would in all probability be complete by the end of the current year and can he say whether his predecessor's undertaking is likely to be fulfilled ?

Mr G. S. Bhalja : I do not recollect that any undertaking was given to the effect that derequisitioning will be completed by the end of this year. I think it is very unlikely but I have not referred to the previous papers on the subject.

Mr. C. P. Lawson : Has the Honourable Member seen the Legislative Assembly Debates on the question to which I have referred ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : I have not seen.

Mr. Manu Subedar : Will the Honourable the Defence Secretary inform this House what categories, so far as buildings are concerned, are still continuing to be in occupation by the army people and why ? Have Government considered the possibility of sending out certain departments altogether from urban areas and vacating their premises ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : It will take me too long to explain why it has not been possible to derequisition all buildings immediately, but, if I may, I might mention three factors which I hope will convince the House that it is not possible to expedite derequisitioning more than we are doing. We have at the moment a million men in uniform, that is roughly four times the strength of the army before the war. These men have to be housed, fed, clothed and equipped, all of which require accommodation. Then we have large scale movements of troops in the East and the West and for them we must have transit camps ready to receive them whenever they come to India. And, thirdly, the Defence Department has the responsibility for storage and guarding of huge surplus stores, including the American surplus stores, whose value amounts to several crores of rupees. I can however assure the Honourable Member that nobody is more anxious than His Excellency the Commander in Chief and the Honourable the Defence Member to derequisition as fast as possible all buildings and lands which are in the possession of the armed forces at the moment.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer : Is it not a fact that according to the original requisitioning order by which properties were requisitioned, the properties were required only for the period of the war and for six months after its termination? If so, why were the properties not derequisitioned yet, especially in Poona and Bombay?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : I have already given the reasons why we were not able to derequisition the properties at the end of the period of six months after the termination of the war and my Honourable friend probably is aware that His Excellency the Governor-General issued an Ordinance legalising the continued possession of the requisitioned property after the termination of this period.

Seth Govind Das : How many more troops are still overseas, how many are expected back and within what time?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : I can only say in general terms that the policy of the Interim Government is that the troops which are in overseas theatres should be withdrawn as quickly as possible. This of course is subject to the obligations arising from our past associations with other countries.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer : Under what authority are Government retaining these properties which should have been derequisitioned at the end of the six months after the termination of the War?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : Under the authority of the Ordinance issued by His Excellency the Governor-General, which has the force of law.

INDIANS UNDER DETENTION AS GOVERNMENT OF INDIA'S PRISONERS

68. *Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal : (a) Will the Honourable the Home Member please state how many Indians are still in detention as Government of India prisoners for:

- (i) contact with the enemy during war,
 - (ii) actively participating in or collaborating the Indian National Army, Indian Independence League and similar organisations,
 - (iii) political, terrorist or subversive activities including those connected with the Quit India movement of August 1942 and after, and
 - (iv) otherwise taking part in activities for the Independence of the country?
- (b) How many such persons are still prisoners in each or any of the provincial Governments?
- (c) What is the policy of the Government of India with regard to both (a) and (b) above?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : (a) and (b). No person is now detained without trial under the orders of the Central Government or any Chief Commissioner.

Under the categories in (a) and (b) the number of prisoners undergoing sentences with whom the Central Government is concerned is as follows:

- (i) 10 (8 in Punjab jails and 2 in United Provinces jails);
- (ii) nil, (iii) nil,
- (iv) nil

(c) Government have remitted the unexpired portions of the sentences of the 10 persons mentioned above and their release has been ordered.

The information given above does not include persons who may be in prison serving sentences awarded in trial by Courts Martial or military Courts. Question in regard to those prisoners should be addressed to the Defence Secretary.

Prof. N. G. Ranga : In view of the fact that the conditions obtaining in the Punjab jails were considered by many of the political prisoners who were kept there to be most unsatisfactory, will Government consider the advisability of transferring those prisoners who are kept in the Punjab jails either to the jails in the centrally administered areas or the United Provinces ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : So far as the prisoners in the Punjab jails are concerned they have been ordered to be released. Why should they be transferred elsewhere ?

Miss Maniben Kara : Will the Honourable Member tell this House whether he considers trade union workers who are arrested as political prisoners ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : I know of no such classification as trade union prisoners. I could not quite follow the Honourable Member's question.

Mr. President : The question is whether trade union prisoners are classified as political prisoners or are not.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : There is no such classification as political prisoners at all.

Miss Maniben Kara : Do I understand that along with the release of political prisoners trade union prisoners also will be released ? Is the Honourable Member aware that in Delhi there are a number of trade union workers still in jail ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : I have no information on the subject, but if the Honourable Member wants any information I shall inquire. I require notice.

Shri Sri Prakasa : With reference to part (b) of the question, has the Honourable Member looked into the cases of such I. N. A. prisoners as are in the United Provinces and if so, when does he expect to release them ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : This question must be addressed to the Defence Department.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar : May I know from the Honourable Member if he is aware that 12 or 13 prisoners who have been convicted under the Enemy Agents Ordinance and kept in the Vellore jail have been put in the 'C' class and their rations are little better than that of ordinary convicts, and that in spite of the efforts of the provincial Government we have not been able to do much for them ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : So far as I am aware, there are only ten enemy agent convicts who have been ordered to be released and five who are in jails—four in Bengal and one in Madras. These Provincial Governments have been informed of our orders and we have recommended them for release.

Miss Maniben Kara : Will the Honourable Member tell us whether the people arrested at the time of the V. Day celebrations are going to be released ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : I have no information on the subject. I will make inquiries. I want notice.

PUBLIC SPEECHES BY MUSLIM LEAGUERS AND THE DISTURBANCES IN INDIA

†69. Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal : Will the Honourable the Home Member please state :

(a) whether the Government of India had any reports from their Intelligence services in Bengal about the tenor of the public speeches of some Muslim Leaguers, as likely to create a riotous atmosphere ;

(b) if so, whether the Government of India tendered any advice or gave any warning to the Government of Bengal in that respect ;

(c) whether the Government of India gave any advice to the Bengal Government with reference to the declaration of 16th August as a public holiday as a Direct Action Day ; If so, what was it ;

†Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent.

[30th Oct. 1946]

(d) whether any, and if so, what steps were taken by the Government of India for forestalling disturbances and whether the Governor-General was asked to intervene,

(e) whether any, and if so, what steps have been or are being taken to remedy the situation of helplessness that has been prevailing in Bengal ever since the outbreak of disturbances and still continuing,

(f) whether the Government of India have any responsibilities in the matter of protection of lives and properties of the population in Bengal on partial or total failure of the Provincial Civil Authority to do so, and how the Government propose to discharge such responsibility, and

(g) whether advice was given by the Government of India to the Governor-General to exercise his individual and special responsibility to the people of Bengal and for the maintenance of peace and tranquility in the said province? And what was the result of such advice?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : (a) Reports of the Intelligence services cannot be disclosed and I regret, therefore, that I cannot deal with them in the manner

(b) The Government of India tendered no advice or warning to the Government of Bengal

(c) No

(d), (e) and (g) The responsibility for public order lies primarily with the Provincial Government. Discussions have taken place between the Governor-General and the Members of Government, but I regret this nature cannot be disclosed. I have dealt with the whole matter on the 28th October on the adjournment motion on the same subject.

(f) This is a matter of opinion and interpretation of the law, and I would refer the Honourable Member to Section 41 of the Ninth Schedule and other relevant provisions of the Government of India Act, 1935.

ENQUIRIES re DEATH OF NETAJI SUBHAS CHANDRA BOSE

70. *Sardar Mangal Singh : Will the Honourable the Home Member please state

(a) whether the Interim Government have made any enquiries if Netaji Subhas Chandra Bose is dead or alive, and

(b) whether Government propose to make an authoritative statement on this question and set at rest once for all the frequent speculations about his whereabouts?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : (a) No

(b) Government are not in a position to make any authoritative statement on this subject.

Sardar Mangal Singh : May I know whether any Indian was associated with this inquiry which has been conducted recently into the death of Netaji Subhas Chandra Bose?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : No inquiry has been made by the Government of India.

Mr. President : The answer to the first part was in the negative. How does the supplementary arise?

Sardar Mangal Singh : Has the attention of Government been drawn to the statement issued by Sardar Sardul Singh Caveeshar, President of the Forward Block, that he knows for certain that Netaji Subhas Chandra Bose is alive?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : If the statement attributed to Sardar Sardul Singh Caveeshar turns out to be true, I will be very glad, but so far as we are concerned we have no information. I have seen contradictory statements in the press from responsible men, both here and outside India.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer : In view of the fact that there are three questions tabled on the subject today and in view of the anxiety of Honourable Members on this subject, will the Government of India make an announcement one way or the other and say whether the gentleman is dead or alive ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : The Government of India can make no announcement without any positive information on the subject Sardar Mangal Singh : A few days ago the Honourable the Leader of the House made a statement that Netaji Subhas Chandra Bose is dead. Is that the view of the Government of India or his personal view ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : The Government of India have no view either way

Maulana Zafar Ali Khan : When that view is challenged by a person in the responsible position of Sardar Sardul Singh Caveeshar who said "Pundit Nehru's statement does not satisfy us", we want this House to be informed whether Subhas Chandra Bose is dead or alive actually ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : As I have said, not only myself but the House will be very glad if it turns out to be true that he is alive. But it is for Sardar Sardul Singh Caveeshar to give any information he may have to the Government of India.

REORGANIZATION OF CENTRAL SERVICES

71. *Sardar Mangal Singh : Will the Honourable the Home Member please state

(a) whether Government propose to make a general statement regarding the recruitment and reorganisation of the services now known as Secretary of States' Services and Central Services, and

(b) whether any change in the syllabus of the competitive examinations for the Indian Civil Service and other Imperial services is contemplated, if so, what is the new syllabus ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : (a) of the three Services for which the Secretary of State makes appointments under the Government of India Act, 1935 viz., the Indian Civil Service, the Indian Medical Service (Civil), and the Indian Police, I am concerned only with the Indian Civil Service and the Indian Police. Any enquiry regarding the Indian Medical Service (Civil) should be addressed to the Honourable the Health Minister

The Secretary of State has decided to suspend recruitment to war-reserved vacancies in the Indian Civil Service and the Indian Police and it is unlikely that the recruitment to these services by the Secretary of State will be resumed. A Conference of Provincial Premiers was convened on the 21st October 1946 by me to discuss arrangements to replace these services. The consensus of opinion at the Conference was in favour of the formation of new all-India Services for this purpose. Details are being worked out in consultation with the Provinces and when arrangements are finalised a public announcement will be made.

No proposal is under consideration for the reorganisation of the Central Services as a whole. In November last year Sir Richard Tottenham was placed on special duty to examine the question of the reorganisation of the Secretariat and to make recommendations. One of the recommendations made by him is that a new Central Secretariat Service should be constituted. Details regarding the formation of this service are being worked out.

(b) There is no proposal under consideration for changing the syllabus of the competitive examinations for the Indian Civil Service or the Indian Police. New methods of selection involving the use of intelligence and personality tests have been in use for some time to select candidates for the Forces and were also used for selecting 'war service' candidates to the war-reserved vacancies. The question whether the method of selection on the results of a competitive examination followed by an interview should be modified in any manner as a result of the experience gained of the new tests is being examined.

Shri Sri Prakasa : Have the Government assured themselves that such services are at all necessary in future ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : That is the concensus of opinion of the provinces

Shri Sri Prakasa : Is it not a fact that such services do not necessarily exist in other parts of the world ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : I do not know about other parts of the world but in India the services have been in existence for a long period, and almost all the provinces desire that such services, except for the control of the Secretary of State, should be continued

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar : Is it a fact that the Punjab Government wanted to have its own superior services ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : The Punjab Government was represented at the conference and its representative informed us that he had no objection to the proposed formation of a central administrative service. They however, wanted their own control over the service and had decided to have their own recruitment. If the control question was satisfactorily settled, they might fall into line with all the provinces in view of the discussions at the conference

Sardar Mangal Singh : May I know whether the new candidates to the civil service will be selected by the Public Service Commission or by the Selection Boards to which the Honourable Member has referred ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : The details, as I told you, are being worked out

APPOINTMENTS TO THE VACANCIES IN SECRETARY OF STATE'S AND TO CENTRAL SERVICES

72. *Sardar Mangal Singh : (a) Will the Honourable the Home Member please state how many of the 336 war vacancies in the Secretary of States Services and how many out of the 468 war vacancies in the Central Services have been filled in so far ?

(b) How long the recruitment to these appointments will continue from amongst the war service candidates ?

(c) Do Government propose to throw open some of these appointments to be filled in through competitive examinations ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : (a) and (b) As the Honourable Member is probably aware, the Secretary of State has decided not to proceed with the appointment of 'war service' candidates to the Indian Civil Service and the Indian Police. No question, therefore, arises of making any recruitment of 'war service' candidates to these two Services. As regards the Central Services, the selection of Indian 'war service' candidates is expected to conclude by the end of this year, although it may be necessary to hold a supplementary selection early next year for the benefit of those few overseas candidates who could not attend the selection this year for reasons beyond their control and in respect of some vacancies advertised rather late in the year. No appointment has actually been made so far, but the Federal Public Service Commission have recommended 162 Indian candidates for the Indian Civil Service, 57 for the Indian Police and 167 for the Central non-technical Services. The question of appointing Indian candidates selected for the Indian Civil Service and the Indian Police to an all-India Administrative Service and an all India Police Service, proposed to be formed to replace the Indian Civil Service and the Indian Police, is under consideration. No information is at present available regarding the number of candidates selected for the Central technical Services

(c) Government anticipate that sufficient number of 'war service' candidates will not be available to fill all vacancies in the Central Services and are considering alternative means of recruitment, one of which is the competitive examination

Lt.Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee : Have Government any plan for absorption in to these services war service candidates who had been given temporary appointments in the Indian Police or the Indian Civil Service or other Central Services ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : Some of them have already been absorbed. There is a plan.

Sreejot Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri : Why are these reserved for war service candidates ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : The recruitment during the war period stopped and these people went and served in the war. At that time certain promises were given to them.

Sreejot Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri : Do the Government realise that a large number of eligible candidates do not get the advantage, at least those candidates who belong to or where in sympathy with the Congress organisations ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : It is not true.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal : Will the Honourable Member be pleased to state whether in these matters it is the policy of the present Government to fulfil all the promises that have been made by the previous Government ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : As far as possible, it is the policy of the Government.

Sreejot Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri : Is the Government aware that the Provincial Governments, particularly Assam, have refused to give any preference to war service candidates.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : I am afraid the Assam Government will reconsider its position.

Sgt. N V. Gadgil : Has a certain percentage been reserved for these candidates merely because they are war service candidates ? Is it not the case that merit is taken into consideration ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : No, because of their fitness. Some of them are considered to be better than even those coming from competitive examinations.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar : Will the Government reconsider the proportion and the ratio that has already been fixed by the previous Government, to see whether it is necessary to provide for such enormous or high percentage of war returned men ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : The matter requires further examination.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar : May I know if the new recruitment that is proposed is to be thrown open to all persons both in India and overseas ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : No, it is not so.

Sardar Mangal Singh : May I know whether the Government of India will consider the proposal that in filling war vacancies no communal proportions be adhered to ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : That is quite a different matter altogether.

Seth Govind Das : Will the Government see that those persons who are not really capable and to whom promises have been given to retain after the war are dismissed and not retained ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : In no case can a man be employed in service simply because he is a war service candidate. His capacity is also equally a test.

DEMONETIZATION ORDINANCE

73. *Sardar Mangal Singh : (a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member please state how far the objects of the Demonetization Ordinance have been achieved ?

(b) What is the amount of the high denomination notes which have not been presented for exchange for smaller denomination notes ?

(c) How much profit Government have made out of this ordinance ?

(d) How many prosecutions have been launched under the Demonetisation Ordinance and how many of them have resulted in convictions of the defaulters ?

(e) Have any prosecutions been started against any bank or banks ? If so, what are their names ?

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan : (a) and (b) Out of a total of Rs 1,43,96,69,000 high denomination notes in circulation on the 11th January 1946 notes to the value of Rs 1,28,58,55,000 were encashed upto the 27th September 1946. In addition a certain number of claims presented to various authorities within and without India are awaiting decision. The amount involved in these claims cannot be ascertained without undue expenditure of time and labour but it is understood to be small relative to the notes already encashed. As the declarations that were filed by persons presenting notes for exchange are still under scrutiny, Government are unable to state how far the objects have been achieved.

(c) The aggregate value of the notes likely to remain uncashed is not yet known.

(d) Seven prosecutions have so far been launched, all of which are, as yet, sub-judice.

(e) None so far.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Iyyangar : Which is the authority which launches the prosecutions ? Does the Central Government investigate into every one of these cases before prosecutions are launched ?

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan : It is the Central Government.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon : These applications have been lying with the Government for a considerable time. Will the Government expedite these applications ?

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan : If the Honourable Member will bring to my notice any particular case, I shall have it examined. As far as I am aware there are no such applications.

Seth Yusuf Abdoola Haroon : There are certain applications under scrutiny and persons have not yet received the amount from the Reserve Bank. They have repeatedly reminded the Department regarding the same.

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan : If the Honourable Member will supply further particulars, I shall have the matter examined.

APPOINTMENT OF ARMY REORGANIZATION COMMISSION FOR POST WAR INDIAN ARMY

74. *Sardar Mangal Singh : Will the Defence Secretary please state whether Government propose to appoint an Army Reorganisation Commission to determine the size, composition and organisation of the post war Indian Army ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : No, Sir. Government are at present engaged in examining the problem of the size, composition and organisation of India's Armed Forces in consultation with the H. E. the Commander-in-Chief. Due obviously to the highly complex nature of the problem, I cannot commit the Government to any particular course of action at this stage.

Sardar Mangal Singh : May I know if the Government of India will publish the report of the Army Reorganisation Committee which was appointed two years ago ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : No, Sir. That report is a secret document and it was prepared at the request of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief by his staff officers to assist him in planning the size and composition of the forces and I think this announcement was made previously in this House.

Sardar Mangal Singh : May I know whether this House will be taken into confidence before a decision is taken on the report of that committee ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : Some of the important problems arising out of that report have already been placed before the Defence Consultative Committee and if and when other important problems arise they will also be placed before the same committee, which is a committee of this House.

Mr. Mann Subedar : May I know why this report has not been made available to every member of the Defence Consultative Committee of this House ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : I have said that this is a secret report presented to H. E. the C in C who appointed the committee. It was a committee of his staff officers. It was not a committee appointed by the War Department.

Mr. Mann Subedar : The report was made by public servants of this Government and unless there are specific public reasons may I know why the bulk of this report should be kept secret, as there are many members who are very much interested in the problem. If there are a few paragraphs to be omitted, they may be omitted. I want to know why the Government will not make this report available to Members of this House ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : I have replied to that question, Sir.

Mr. N. M. Joshi : May I ask whether it is the policy of the Government of India not to place these matters regarding Defence, such as, re-organisation, before the Legislature and whether they are going to be content by merely consulting the Defence Committee ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : No, Sir. I should have no hesitation in saying that we wish to take the House in the fullest confidence that is possible consistently with considerations of security, but the report contains many technical matters. It is not considered to be in the public interest to disclose these matters on the floor of the House for the simple reason that such disclosure is not confined only to the Members of this House, because whatever is said here is public property not only in India but throughout the world.

Mr. N. M. Joshi : At what stage the Government of India will place the scheme of re-organisation before the Legislature ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : As I said, the Government have not yet come to a decision as to what the future size and position of the armed forces is going to be.

Prof. N. G. Ranga : Has this report been circularised among the members of the Cabinet ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : No, Sir, that question has not arisen yet.

Sardar Mangal Singh : May I ask whether this report deals with the subject of conscription because that was one of the terms of reference ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : I must ask for notice of that question.

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir : Does the Honourable Member wish to convey the idea in his answers to supplementary questions that any re-organisation scheme that the Government may be inclined to accept will never be placed before this Honourable House for discussion and consideration ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : I never said anything of that sort.

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir : Then what is exactly implied by the Honourable Member's answer ?

Mr. President : Next question. Sardar Mangal Singh.

PERMANENT COMMISSIONS TO INDIANS

†75. Sardar Mangal Singh : (a) Will the Defence Secretary please state how many Indian officers have, so far, been given permanent commissions in the (i) Land forces, (ii) Air forces and (iii) Navy, stating their number separately ?

(b) How many British Officers there are now posted in the Indian Units ?

Shri Sri Prakasa : Sir, that is the sixth question. The Honourable Member has exhausted his quota. He does not know the difference between five and six. He is constantly tabling six questions.

Mr. President : Next question.

(The reply was laid on the table of the House)

†Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner having exhausted his quota.

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : (a) The number of Indian officers holding permanent commissions in the three Services is as follows

Indian Army	1,701
Royal Indian Air Force	342
Royal Indian Navy	221

The corresponding figures for British officers are—

Indian Army	2,327
Royal Indian Air Force	2
Royal Indian Navy	169

(b) The number of British officers serving temporarily with the three Services is as follows

Army	20,960
Air Force	11
Navy	191

The corresponding figures of temporary Indian officers are—

Army	10,250
Air Force	973
Navy	575

ADMINISTRATION OF THE W A C (I)

76. *Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal : Will the Defence Secretary please state

(a) whether Government's attention has been drawn to the allegations of inefficiency, discrimination, favouritism, nepotism, immorality, etc that were made during the last budget session of the Assembly by various members through questions and debates regarding the administration of the W. A. C (I),

(b) whether any enquiry, departmental or otherwise, has been or is being or will be made to go into these serious allegations,

(c) how many of the personnel of the Corps have been discharged and how many of such discharged personnel are Indians and how many of them are non-Indians,

(d) how many non-Indians are still in employment in the top posts and why they are still being kept on fat salaries, and why no Indians are employed and kept on such posts, and

(e) what arrangements are being made by the Government of India for finding employment for these discharged girls?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : (a) Yes Sir, but the allegations appear to have been exaggerated

(b) No, Sir, such an enquiry, in view of answer to (d) below, which I shall shortly give would now serve no useful purpose

(c) The total number of WAC(I) personnel released up to 1st September 1946 was approximately 4,106, of these 1,246 were Indians. Further releases are since steadily taking place

(d) The number of officers holding appointments of Senior Commander and above is as follows: Indians, eight; Non-Indians 49. Government have recently ordered that the disbandment of the Corps should be expedited as far as possible. In view of this decision, no change in the existing personnel is considered desirable

(e) (1) Each of the nine Regional Employment Exchanges distributed throughout the country has a Special Women's Section attached to it to deal with the registration and placing in employment of women

(2) A special section of the Directorate of Employment, as a part of the Directorate-General of Resettlement and Employment, has been set up to explore and examine suitable avenues of employment for ex-service women

(3) Training facilities have been provided under the Labour Department Scheme for the vocational training of ex-service women in order to equip ex-service women for suitable employment in civil life. To this end, a Deputy Directoress of Training has been appointed on the staff of the Directorate-General of Resettlement and Employment.

Shri Sri Prakasa: With reference to part (d) of the question, is it not a fact that the Honourable the Labour Member has offered to marry all of these women—not himself—but to suitable husbands? If so, how far has the scheme progressed?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: I think the question should be addressed to the Honourable Member for Labour.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable Member please state the reasons for not going into the question of inquiry which is referred to in (3)?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: I said that the Government had decided that the Corps should be disbanded and the last W A C (I) we hope will have been demobilised by the 31st March 1947. In view of this decision, I trust the Honourable Members of this House will not make any comments or any allegations or cast any aspersions on a body of corps which did excellent work during the war.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: But what are the reasons for not going into the question of inquiry?

Mr. President: Because the whole Corps is going to be disbanded by the 31st March.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: But what is the reason for not going into the reasons disclosed?

Mr. President: The question has been answered.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: How many of these discharged girls have been given employment by Government?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: I must ask for notice of this question.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Will the Honourable Member consider the question of appointing a Committee of Inquiry consisting of the lady Members of this House with a view to re-consider the question of re-employing those girls who are unemployed at present?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: I do not think the question of re-employment or rather finding employment for demobilised ex-service women in civil jobs need be referred to a committee as the work is already being performed fairly efficiently by the Executive organisation set up by the Labour Department.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable Member kindly state why non-Indians are still kept in this employment on fat salaries since it is the policy of the Government that the organisation is going to be disbanded?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: As we are going to disband the corps in a few months' time and as the work of the present personnel is satisfactory, it is not necessary nor advisable to disturb the present arrangement.

Sgt. N. V. Gadgil: May I ask why it is necessary to continue even whatever is left till the 31st March 1947?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: Obviously, we must have an organisation to cope with the remaining personnel of the Corps.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: May I ask if the Deputy Directoress referred to in the answer is an Indian?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: I must ask for notice of that question. It does not refer to my Department, it refers to the Labour Department.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I ask if any of those persons against whom allegations were made that they were responsible for all sorts of indecent attacks on these women are still kept in service?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: I cannot give any reply to a question like that because we have never admitted that these allegations which were made by irresponsible agencies were substantially correct.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: They may have been exaggerated statements, but there was some truth in them. Why don't you make inquiries?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: In view of the approaching disbandment of the Corps, it would be impolitic and unwise to raise this whole issue again simply because these allegations were made by a few irresponsible persons.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Is it not a fact that one hundred women put their signatures on an article and it was urged on the floor of this House that an investigation ought to be made?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: The document to which my Honourable friend refers was never authenticated.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know from the Honourable Member on what authority he says that these allegations have not been justified?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: An inquiry was made as far as I recollect as to where the document was received, the original document containing the signatures never reached the War Department.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I ask if the Honourable Member knows that his predecessor himself asked the A.P.I. agent secretly to go and make the investigation, but the lady against whom these allegations were made refused to answer this agent of the A.P.I. and he came back without making any investigation at all?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: I have no information on that point and I would not accept the insinuation involved in that question.

Mr. Manu Subedar: May I ask if the All-India Women's Conference did not approach the Government in order to provide them with facilities for making this inquiry? If so, why was it that the Government turned down the request and suggested an authoritative women's organisation in India which was out merely to safeguard the reputation and the well-being of the women?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: A request to that effect was received from the Chairman of the All-India Women's Conference, but I must say again with due deference that as we had taken the decision to disband the whole corps, it was not considered necessary to go into details of certain allegations which were not creditable to certain persons.

CENTRAL SCHEDULED CASTES SCHOLARSHIPS

77.* Lt-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: Will the Honourable Member for Education please state—

(a) if it is a fact that converts to other religion from scheduled castes are ineligible for the Central Scheduled castes scholarships awarded by the Government of India,

(b) if the answer to part (a) above be in the affirmative, are Government aware that the Madras Government categorically stated in the Madras Legislative Assembly during the debate on the Budget on education that converts to other religion from the depressed classes must be eligible for this scholarship as their economic standard did not change with their conversion, and

(c) whether in view of the reply of the Madras Government, the Government of India propose to reconsider the question?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: (a) Yes, it is a fact that converts to other religion from scheduled castes are ineligible for the Central Scheduled castes scholarships awarded by the Government of India.

(b) and (c) The Government of India are aware of the fact that the Madras Government grant scholarships and fee concessions out of the grants provided for depressed classes to members of the depressed classes who are converts from Hinduism to other religions. The Government of India do not consider that this principle can be applied to the Central Scheduled-Caste-Scholarships scheme in as much as the scheme was devised specifically for the benefit of the Scheduled Castes, as defined in the Government of India (Scheduled Caste) Order, 1936, and was conceived as an uplift measure on the part of the State for the advancement of classes that are treated as untouchable and not as a scheme for all poor classes irrespective of untouchability.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: Do I take it that these scholarships awarded by the Government of India are given on the basis of religious belief and not on the basis of economic conditions of the applicant?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: I have already stated that this scheme is conceived as an uplift measure on the part of the State for the advancement of classes that are treated as untouchable and not as a scheme for all poor classes irrespective of untouchability.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: Does a member of the so called scheduled caste become touchable as soon as he becomes a convert to another religion?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: I assume so. That is the very claim made by the proselytizers.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: If that is the reason for denying the scholarship to other depressed classes and untouchables, then, will the Honourable Member inform me what are the special tenets of the scheduled caste religion so that they may also become converts to the scheduled caste religion?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: The question, Sir, is conceived very wrongly. The assumptions made in the question are not correct at all. There is a certain disability prevailing in certain classes of our society and we are taking measures to remove that disability by direct as well as indirect measures and this is an indirect measure to remove this particular disability. It has nothing whatever to do with the other question referred to by my Honourable friend.

Sri Sri Prakasa: Is it not a fact that if the Honourable questioner's suggestions are followed, there is a danger of a misunderstanding arising to the effect that the Government are favouring conversion, and is there not a further danger that the scholarships will go to the converts rather than to members of the scheduled castes that continue to remain in that old faith. And, if so, will the Honourable Member kindly convey his opinion to the Madras Government so that they may desist from the policy they are following now?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: While the Government are in favour of the most complete liberty of religion and freedom for any legitimate effort on the part of any person or institutions to spread any form of faith or worship, they do appreciate the point brought out by the Honourable Member from Benares as regards misunderstandings about influence exercised for obtaining advantages and facilities for new converts and about disputes likely to arise between the scheduled caste proper and converts from depressed classes. As regards the Madras order, it was specifically related to depressed classes and had nothing to do with scheduled castes whereas the present central scheme with which we are dealing was conceived for scheduled castes only as defined in the Statutory Order referred to. As far as possible this Government should not upset important schemes set in motion by their predecessors after great trouble and in which they had taken considerable interest. In this case, the author of the scheme was very particular about the limitation of the benefits to those falling within the category mentioned.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: What is the difference between depressed classes and the scheduled castes?

Mr. President: That does not arise.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: May I know whether the Honourable Member for Education received advance intimation from the Honourable Member for Benares about his supplementary question because he read a written reply?

The Honourable Sri O. Rajagopalachari: Mr President, the question is very inappropriate. I think I am able to anticipate supplementary questions including probably what the Honourable Member for Bombay Southern Mahomedan may put

PROTECTION OF LIVES AND PROPERTIES BY THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA OF THE POPULATION IN BENGAL

78. *Sree Satyapriya Banerjee: (a) Will the Honourable the Home Member please state whether the Government of India have any responsibilities in the matter of protection of lives and properties of the population in Bengal on partial or total failure of the Provincial Civil authority to do so, and how the Government propose to discharge such responsibility?

(b) If the answer to part (a) be in the affirmative, what steps, if any, have been taken by the Government of India in this regard in Calcutta, Dacca, Noakhali and other places since the 16th August, 1946, the "Direct Action" day of the Muslim League, where thousands of human lives have been lost and properties worth several crores have been looted and destroyed, if no steps have so far been taken, what steps do Government of India now propose to take? and

(c) Whether he is aware that there is a strong feeling in Bengal that the Government of India should take effective steps to control the situation in Bengal, and if so, whether Government of India propose to take any steps in this regard?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: (a), (b) and (c) I would invite the Honourable Member's attention to my reply to Question No. 69 put by my Honourable friend Mr. Sanyal and to what I have stated on the 28th October on the adjournment motion on the subject

RULES re PENSIONS, AWARDS AND GRATUITIES TO INDIAN COMMISSIONED OFFICERS AND OTHER RANKS

79. *Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: (a) Will the Defence Secretary please state whether Government are prepared to consider the whole question of pensions, awards and gratuities to Indian Commissioned Officers and Indian Other Ranks and to amend all rules governing such payments?

(b) Will Government be pleased to place in the Library of the House copies of pension regulations of India, Part II and AI (I) B 3/40 and the subsequent amendments thereto?

(c) Is it a fact that no pensions, awards and gratuities are admissible under the present rules in respect of permanent disabilities arising out of the last war, whilst the individuals continues to serve in the army and is permitted to do light duties—in the case of men who have lost a leg, an arm or an eye, all on active service during the war?

(d) Is it a fact that all pensions, awards and gratuities are paid as compensation only for loss of earning power and not as compensation for injuries received while on Military Service?

(e) Do Government propose to consider the desirability of amending this rule?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: (a) As announced in a press note on the 29th January, 1946, Government have already set up a Committee to make recommendations in regard to the post-war pay and pensions of Indian personnel of the three Services

(b) A copy of Pension Regulations for the Army in India, Part II, with corrections up to date, has been placed in the Library of the House. There is no AI (I.) bearing No. B 3/40

(c) Yes. It is a recognised principle of the pension schemes now in force that an award of pension does not take effect till the claimant leaves the service

(d) Presumably the Honourable Member refers to awards of disability pensions and gratuities. If so, the answer is that the degree of disablement is based on a comparison between the condition of the person disabled and the condition of a normal healthy person of the same age and sex, without taking into account the earning capacity of the member in his disabled condition in his own or any other specific trade or occupation. Such an award is made to an individual who is invalided from the service on account of wounds, injury or illness, the cause of which is attributed to military service.

(e) No, Sir

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar : When was this committee set up ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : In January 1946

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar : Has it the same status or has it the same personnel as the one which is called the Pay Commission ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : No, Sir

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar : Who is the President of this committee ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : The President of the committee is Mr Irwin, an officer of the War Department. In reply to questions on this subject a copy of the communique was placed on the table of the House. I will read the communique.

"To make recommendations on the post-war pay, allowances and pensions of the three defence services, the Government of India have constituted a committee under the chairmanship of Mr J B Irwin, CIE, DSO, MC, ICS

"The R I N will be represented on the committee by the Chief of Personnel at N H W, the Army by Maj Gen J B Dalson, and the R A F by the Deputy Air Officer Administration of Air headquarters

"Mr J Dayal, of the Finance Department is the fifth Member. The Secretary to the committee will be Col W Byrne"

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar : In view of the change of Government, will the Government review the position and try to include some important Indians so that the entire situation may be reviewed ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : I should explain, Sir, that this committee is really in the nature of a technical body examining proposals relating to pay, etc. of the three Services

Mr. Manu Subedar : Have the Government no Indian officers of such standing that they may be included in this committee ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : The committee have already performed a good deal of work and it is expected that as soon as the report of the Central Pay Commission is ready, this committee will co-ordinate their proposals with the recommendations of the Central Pay Commission and will submit their report

Mr. Manu Subedar : That does not answer my question. I wanted to know whether there were no Indian officers of the same status as the Britishers who are on this Committee now who can be included and associated, as expressed by the wish of this House, in the work which this Committee is doing ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : I shall consider this question

RULES re MILITARY PENSIONS, GRATUITIES, ETC., IN FORCE IN U S A AND BRITISH DOMINIONS

80. Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer : (a) Will the Defence Secretary be pleased to place in the Library of the House, the rules pertaining to military pensions, awards and gratuities in force in the case of the United States of America and British Dominions ?

(b) Is the present state of recruitment in the new Indian Army considered by Government satisfactory ?

(c) Do Government propose to appoint a Committee to consider amendments to pensions, awards to military officers and men in the Indian army so as to induce young Indians to join the army and make it a suitable career in the matter of pay ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : (a) No copy of the rules in force in the U. S. A. and British Dominions is available.

recruitment for admission to the Indian Military Academy as officer cadets is at present not satisfactory, since sufficient suitable candidates have not been coming forward. The whole question of the provision and selection of cadets is now under consideration with a view to ascertaining how the situation can be improved.

Recruitment of I O Rs was reopened in March 1946. For the first three months volunteers were only sufficient to meet approximately 50 per cent of the requirements. Later however, recruitment has been satisfactory and meets all demands except those for the more technical trades which require a higher educational standard.

(c) I would refer the Honourable Member to the reply to part (a) of his question. I have just answered.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer : Is it a fact that five thousand Indian officers have been demobilised?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : I cannot give the exact number, but a large number of officers have been demobilised.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer : Is it a fact that negotiations are at present pending with the War Office to import into India British officers in place of the Indian officers who have been demobilised?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : The implication there is that Government are demobilising officers who are suitable and are trying to bring other officers from outside. The fact is that the officers who are demobilised, as my Honourable friend knows, had enlisted voluntarily and cannot be compulsorily retained in the army. Apart from that fact, a large number of officers who were selected during the war for the grant of emergency commissions are not suitable for permanent commissions in peace time.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer : If these officers were perfectly suitable during the war, why are they not suitable now?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : That is because the qualifications required for an officer during war are not necessarily the same as those required in peace.

Mr. Manu Subedar : Have Government made any effort to get men who were temporarily in the army and did good work for five years trained up for the specific jobs for which Britishers are now being imported?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : Government are very seriously and anxiously considering the whole situation as to how best and how quickest the armed forces can be completely nationalised.

Sgt N V. Gadgil : Until Government come to a final decision will Government stop the import of British officers into India?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : No, Sir. While the question is being examined the work must go on, the King's Government must be carried on. And therefore if we cannot get suitable officers at any stage we may perhaps have to fall back upon technical officers whom we cannot get in this country. These officers will only be seconded to the Indian Army.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee : Is it a fact that while a large number of emergency commissioned officers are being demobilised there are still advertisements asking young men to apply for commissions in all departments of the army?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja : Exactly so. I explained that the officers who are being demobilised are being demobilised in accordance with their age and service groups. As I said, they are all volunteers and they cannot be conscripted in the armed forces. There are others who have applied for the grant of permanent commissions and their cases are duly considered with all sympathy.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee : Is it a fact that there is a large number of persons who are now being demobilised because they entered service for a short period but against their wish and in spite of the fact that they had the very best war record? Will the Honourable Member tell me what the advantage is in demobilising these people who wish to remain in the army and not getting them trained while bringing in raw recruits and asking them to apply for commissions?

Mr. G. S. Khajja : I have already answered that question. I know there is a good deal of apprehension on this subject and there is a great deal of feeling on it, that while on the one hand we are demobilising officers we are on the other hand complaining of shortage of officers. But I have tried to explain briefly in reply to the question that the qualifications required for the grant of permanent commissions in peace time are not considered to be necessarily the same as in war by our expert authorities.

INFORMATION RE SUBHAS CHANDRA BOSE

81. *Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer : (a) Will the Honourable the Home Member please state whether Government have any definite evidence that Subhas Chandra Bose is alive?

(b) Have Government's attention been drawn to the announcement by the President of the Forward Bloc that Mr. Bose is about to announce his arrival in Delhi at an early date?

(c) Is it a fact that the present Interim Government propose to keep a Cabinet seat vacant for Mr. Bose?

(d) Have Government received any communication from Mr. Bose during the last few weeks?

(e) Do Government propose to place any information on the subject before this House?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : (a) No.

(b) Yes.

(c) The question of finding a place for Mr. Bose will arise only if he makes an appearance.

(d) No.

(e) Government have no information to place before the House.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer : Is it a fact that if he turns up he is going to be appointed Defence Member?

Mr. President : Order, order. Next question.

BROADCASTING STATION AT KARACHI

82. *Seth Sukhdev : Will the Honourable Member for Information and Broadcasting be pleased to state:

(a) whether it is a fact that Karachi was to be given a first place in the matter of installation of a Broadcasting Station;

(b) whether it is a fact that necessary budget provision was made as early as 1942-43,

(c) when it is proposed to install such a Station in Karachi; and

(d) whether in view of Karachi being the first air port in India, it is proposed to have a Short-Wave Radio Station at Karachi?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : (a) and (b) Yes.

(c) Karachi figures in the first instalment of the post-war scheme of broadcasting development in India, which is expected to be finalised in the very near future. It is not possible at this stage to give any definite date by which the new Karachi Station would be installed.

(d) No. For an internal service a short-wave Transmitter is technically not as satisfactory as a medium wave Transmitter. Since Sind primarily needs an internal service, it is not appropriate to instal a short-wave station at Karachi. The fact that Karachi is an air-port has no bearing on the question.

Seth Sukhdev : Is the Honourable Member aware that Sindhi merchant are scattered all over the world and they would naturally like to have news from their home? And is it not therefore necessary to have a powerful station?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: But the short wave will not do for shorter distances and an internal service is more needed in Sind. Reference may be made to the Honourable Member's own letter and the reply given by my predecessor.

WAUGH MISSION TO U. S. A.

83. *Mr. Mannu Subedar: (a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member please state in what terms the purpose of sending the Waugh Mission to U.S.A. was announced (i) in the Assembly and (ii) in the Press Note?

(b) How did this Mission, which had gone to U.S.A. merely to talk about the surplus American stores, come to deal with the whole question of Lease-Lend, Reciprocal Aid and silver?

(c) Is it a fact that the Lease-Lend Settlement between U.S.A. and U.K. took place on the basis of U.K. paying about five per cent, whereas in the case of India it involved the full payment, and what are the exact figures?

(d) If all outstandings in connection with the war were settled by this Mission, how was it that the question of silver was dealt with separately?

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan: (a) and (b). I would refer the Honourable Member to paragraph 12 of the last Budget Speech and the Press communique issued by the Government of India on the 31st May 1946. It will be observed that it was intended from the very beginning that the Mission should deal with the question of Lease Lend and Reciprocal Aid as well as surplus American War property in India. The Mission was not asked to deal with, nor did it deal with, silver which continues to be covered by separate agreements executed at the time of each deal.

(c) No. I would refer the Honourable Member to the Press communique issued by the Government of India on the 31st May, 1946, and the joint statement issued by the Governments of the United Kingdom and United States of America in December 1945 which indicate the basis of their respective agreements.

(d) In view of the reply to (a) and (b), it does not arise.

Mr. Mannu Subedar: In view of the improved relation between America and India in the status of their representatives and the fact that many people feel that India has had a very bad deal, will the Honourable Member assure this House that he will take this up and place all the details before the Standing Finance Committee, helped by one or two Members of this House if necessary, and see whether money cannot be yet retrieved from this very disastrous settlement which has been made?

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan: I am afraid I cannot accept the Honourable Member's statement that the deal has been a disastrous one for India.

Mr. Mannu Subedar: Will he then place all the details before the Standing Finance Committee? In particular, will he examine whether in the categories of supplies to the allied armies including Americans themselves, some of the categories which were put in to Lease-Lend and were charged to India were really and properly chargeable? In the interests of India and in conformity with the promise which he made yesterday, will he make serious inquiries into the matter to see whether some money cannot be saved to this country out of this?

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan: The details of this deal are contained in the Appropriation Report of the Defence Department which will be supplied to the Honourable Members shortly, and after that if my Honourable friend wants further information I shall be very glad to discuss the whole matter with him.

Mr. President: Order, order. The question hour is over.

(b) WRITTEN ANSWERS.

WAUGH MISSION TO U. S. A. AND THE OBLIGATION TO PAY SILVER IN KIND

84. *Mr. Mannu Subedar: (a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member please state whether the Waugh Mission to U.S.A. during its stay in Washington made any reference to the Government of India and were the terms fixed by them communicated to the Government of India? If so, when, at what time, by whom and in what terms was the acceptance given on behalf of India?

(b) Why did not the Government of India object to the obligation to pay silver in kind?

(c) Had Government taken any measures subsequently to represent that this could not be done ?

(d) Do Government propose to lay on the table of the House a copy of the original silver agreement, under which India is called upon to pay ?

(e) What is the total liability, and how do Government propose to meet it ?

The Honourable Mr. Lasaquat Ali Khan (a) The Government of India were kept informed of the progress of the negotiations between the Waugh Mission and the United States Government and the terms of the Agreement were approved by the Government of India before the Agreement was executed

(b) As stated in my reply to the previous question, the Waugh Mission had nothing to do with the silver agreements. The silver transactions, though popularly referred to as Lease/Lend, did not fall under Lease/Lend arrangements. In view of the exchange difficulties, the best way in which the silver could be obtained from United States of America was on replacement basis and silver was loaned by United States of America to all countries on this basis. There was, therefore, no question of objecting

(c) In view of the basis on which the agreement was executed the Government of India could not ask for a change subsequently

(d) No, Sir. There were a number of silver agreements the substance of which is contained in my replies to Questions 84 and 85

(e) 226 million fine ounces. Government have various measures under consideration which it would not be in the public interest to divulge at this stage

PRICE OF SILVER SOLD IN INDIA AND BROUGHT UNDER THE SILVER AGREEMENT DURING THE WAR

85. *Mr. Manu Subedar : (a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member please state at what price the silver, which was brought over under the Silver Agreement during the war, was sold in India ?

(b) What happened to the rupee realisations out of such sale ?

(c) What is the figure of the total loss to India if this silver is returned by purchase from the market at the existing rate ?

(d) What was the total amount of unsold American silver left with the Government of India out of the American supply ?

(e) At what rate was it sold, and when ?

(f) Was any of it returned in the form in which it came ?

The Honourable Mr. Lasaquat Ali Khan (a) The average sale price was Rs 127-0-3 per hundred tolas

(b) The rupee proceeds were credited to Central Government and are merged in Government's balances

(c) The question is hypothetical as the silver is returnable to the United States of America within five years from the termination of the period of emergency as declared by the United States President. That declaration has not yet been made

(d) and (f) It would not be in the public interest to disclose the information.

(e) The rate has been stated in answer to (a) above. The sales were made during the period 7th August 1944 to 3rd July 1945

SILVER REALIZED FROM THE WITHDRAWAL OF SILVER COINAGE

86. *Mr. Manu Subedar : (a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member please state the total quantity of silver, which fell into the hands of Government as the result of the withdrawal of subsidiary silver coinage ?

(b) What is the total quantity estimated by Government, which is likely to fall into their hands as the result of the withdrawal of the security-edge rupee ?

(c) How many of these security edge-rupees were issued and was all the silver realised from the withdrawal of the standard silver rupee used up ?

- (d) Was this supplemented by the use of silver from American s
- (e) Have Government taken a decision as to whether the security-edge rupee should be withdrawn ?
- (f) Have Government ascertained public opinion on this subject ? If so, how and through whom, and when do they propose to bring this matter before the Assembly ?

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan (a) I presume that by subsidiary silver coinage the Honourable Member means half and quarter rupee quaternary coins. As these have not yet been withdrawn the question does not arise

(b) This is a hypothetical question on which no opinion can be given.

(c) First part—The total issues of quaternary alloy security-edged rupees upto the 15th October 1946 amount to 106,20,00,638

Second part—Yes, Sir

(d) Yes, Sir

(e) No, Sir

(f) Government have not taken any steps to ascertain public opinion on the subject. If Government decide to take action in this respect legislation will be introduced to mint and issue a new coin

MODIFICATION OF CERTAIN SECTIONS OF RESERVE BANK OF INDIA ACT

87 *Mr. Manu Subedar (a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member please state when Government propose to modify sections 40 and 41 of the Reserve Bank of India Act ?

(b) Are Government aware that a large amount of British capital is being withdrawn from India and converted into sterling independently of the Reserve Bank through Banks ?

(c) What steps do the Government of India intend to take in order to block these capital conversions from rupee into sterling, which are set off against current trade ?

(d) Have Government noticed the increasing movement of Indian funds to the London Stock Exchange, and what steps Government propose to take with regard to this movement ?

(e) Have Government noticed the tendency for increased speculation in exchange and for forward dealings, and what steps Government propose to take with regard to this tendency ?

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan (a) The question of the appropriate time for the modification of Sections 40 and 41 of the Reserve Bank of India Act is under the consideration of the Government

(b) The report regarding the acquisition by Indian nationals of British owned undertakings in India show that such withdrawal and conversion is taking place but Government have no information about the amounts involved

(c) Government have not considered it necessary so far to take any such steps but they are watching the situation

(d) Yes, Sir, but it does not appear that the volume of such investments is such as to call for any action on the part of Government.

(e) There has recently been some increase in the demand for ready and forward sterling, but it is understood that this is mainly due to causes referred to in parts (b) and (d), the relaxation of import controls and the improved shipping position. There has also been no corresponding increase in exports to balance the rise in imports. Government have been informed that banks authorised to deal in foreign exchange are providing exchange facilities only for genuine business purposes and are refusing to provide exchange for speculative transactions. The position is being watched but it does not appear that any action on the part of Government is called for at present.

(b) Is there any ban on his return to India ?

(c) Have all the cases pending against him been withdrawn ?

(d) Can he return to India as a free man ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel (a) The answer to the first part of the question is in the negative The second part does not arise

(b) No

(c) The Government of Bengal have been requested to furnish the required information and their reply is awaited

(d) There are no restrictions placed on Mr. Bose

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel Yes Their names are given below They are banned because they are considered to be offensive to Indian political or religious sentiment

SECURITY FROM THE VANGUARD UNDER PRESS EMERGENCY POWERS ACT

91 *Miss Maibeen Kara Will the Honourable the Home Member please state :

(a) whether Government are aware that an order from the District Magistrate, Delhi, was passed asking the daily vanguard and some other papers to show cause why security should not be demanded from them under the Press Emergency Powers Act for having published a news item in its issue, dated September 4th, 1946 ;

(b) whether it is a fact that the particular news item was circulated by the Associated Press of America and was substantially a true report of a meeting held in Lahore on 31st August 1946 and

(c) whether Government propose to give an assurance to the House that in future it will be the policy of Government not to interfere with the freedom of the Press ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel (a) and (b). Yes.

(c) The policy of Government in regard to the freedom of the Press has been stated in my speech to the All-India Newspaper Editors' Conference, a copy of which is placed on the table of the House.

The Honourable Sardar Patel's address to All India Newspaper Editors' Conference on the 13th October, 1946

I welcome the opportunity you have given me to meet the members of your Committee. Most of you, I am glad to say, are not strangers to me, indeed many among you I count as friends.

I am sorry—as doubtless you all are—that Mr S. A. Bielvi, one of your former Presidents, is not here with us today. He has played a worthy part in enhancing the reputation of your profession and in building up the All India Newspaper Editors' Conference. I am sure you will join me in wishing him a complete and speedy recovery.

"Formative Period"

You would naturally like me, on this occasion, to refer to the relationship between the Press and the Interim Government. I may at once say that the Interim Government is most anxious to have the co-operation of the Press in the difficult task that lies ahead of us. We shall scrupulously respect the freedom of the Press, in fact, we shall help it to exercise its legitimate functions, and we have every confidence that the Press, for its part, will assist us in administering the affairs of the country during the strenuous times through which we are passing because of the change over from foreign rule to independence. It will be your responsibility to guide and reflect public opinion during this formative period. I am sure you will discharge it with credit to your calling and benefit to our motherland.

The All India Newspaper Editors' Conference was born at a time and in circumstances which today are only a bitter memory. Faced with an unprecedented invasion of the liberty of the Press by a regime which, in the name of war, forged in an unending chain of restrictions, you got together in 1940 to protect your rights. Intent on suppressing the freedom movement, the Government of the day strove to prevent publicity about the movement and even about the sufferings and sacrifice of the people. I need not recall specific instances, they must be fresh in your minds. The Press resisted, I suppose as well as it could, these inroads into its rights.

"Mutually Beneficial Association"

But all that is now history. Today the situation has radically changed. Foreign rule is about to end. There is now at the Centre a Government which is the forerunner of the fully independent State which we shall soon fashion. You will, therefore, naturally find yourselves in tune with the new set up and I know you will extend to the Government your unstinted co-operation and support in carrying out the task of achieving complete independence without delay.

As one in charge of the Information Department, I look forward to mutually beneficial association with you. I am also responsible for Home affairs. As you are aware, anti-social elements are playing their nefarious trade in certain areas of the country. It is the primary duty of every Government to protect the life and property of the citizen. Our internal political and other differences must be solved not by force or violence but by negotiation and persuasion or, in the last resort, by attrition. The Press has a great and worthy part to play in driving this maxim home to the people.

Responsibility of the Press

The Press must have unfettered freedom in the presentation of news and expression of views, but it also has the obligation to preserve the integrity of the State and support the legitimate activities of a popular Government. It must, when occasion demands, help the Government in defeating the forces of disruption. Negatively as well as positively, the Press should discourage unruly elements.

When feelings run high and tempers are frayed, it is the duty of every responsible person to desist from saying or doing things which are likely to inflame passions. Incitements to violence will, of course, not be tolerated. But there are other forms of writing containing veiled incitement which do great harm. I do hope and trust you will avoid both.

I understand that recently the Central Press Advisory Committee formulated certain suggestions for the guidance of the Press in respect of news and comments on communal disturbances. These are —

1. During riots reports should not contain anything to indicate the community of either victims or assailants.

2. While every endeavour should be made to ensure that reports factually correct and are received from sources known to be reliable, such reports as give details of defiance of the law or are calculated to inflame public feelings or to create communal hatred should be treated with the greatest circumspection.

3. Reports of speeches, statements or news directly inciting people to violence should be avoided.

4. Care should be taken in editorials to avoid expressions calculated to encourage or condone violence or to arouse communal bitterness.

I am not sure that these suggestions fully meet the requirements of the situation, but they are, I think, a step in the right direction, constituting as they do a healthy guide to the Press.

Revision of Press Laws

I notice that you have as an item on your agenda the suggestion that Government should set up a machinery for revision of the Press Laws in the country with a view to bringing them in line with the Press Laws of other free countries. I do not propose to anticipate your discussion. This much I may say on behalf of Government, that they will have no objection to setting up a committee of officials and non officials, including representatives of the Press, with a view to examining the repeal or modification of the laws now in force.

As I said in my opening remarks, I am happy to meet you. You have I expect, a heavy agenda to go through. Any resolutions you put forward will receive our careful and active consideration. The administration of the Press Laws is, as you know, a provincial subject, but there is unlimited scope for co-operation between the Interim Government and the Press in helping to build a new India. I have every hope that the Government and the Press will work hand in hand in that nation-building task.

ABOLITION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

92 *Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal:- Will the Honourable the Home Member be pleased to state—

(a) whether the question of abolishing capital punishment is engaging the attention of Government, and

(b) when, approximately, Government are likely to come to decision in the matter?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: (a) Government are not considering the abolition of the death sentence.

(b) Does not arise.

PUNISHMENTS TO I N A PERSONNEL

93 *Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Secretary of the Defence Department be pleased to state—

(a) the number of Indian National Army personnel that were arrested and kept in various jails in India;

(b) the number against whom cases were instituted and the nature of punishments that were meted out to them;

(c) the number of persons that are still in prison as (i) under-trials, and (ii) under sentence;

(d) the jails in which they are confined and the classification that is given to them; and

(e) if it is his intention to release any or all of them, and if so, when?

Mr. G. S. Bhalji: (a) The total number of military I N A personnel who were at one time or another detained pending disposal was 16,790.

If, however, the Honourable Member is asking only for the numbers who were arrested in India, the number is very small.

(b) 24 cases were instituted before the fall of Rangoon, the punishments varying from six years' rigorous imprisonment to death. 13 cases were instituted after the fall of Rangoon, the punishments varying from dismissal to 14 years' R. I.

(c) There are no persons now under trial. There are 15 persons serving sentences.

(d) I would refer the Honourable Member to the statement laid on the table of the House on the 28th October 1946, giving the information promised in reply to Starred Question No. 779, asked by the Honourable Member on the 8th March 1946.

(e) Court martial proceedings of men undergoing imprisonment are reviewed from time to time and the same procedure has heretofore been followed in the case of I. N. A. personnel. Their cases are due for review shortly.

RESTRICTIONS ON THE EMPLOYMENT IN PUBLIC SERVICE OF EX-I. N. A MEN

94. *Shri Sri Prakasa Will the Secretary of the Defence Department be pleased to state—

(a) if any restrictions have been placed by the Central Government on the employment of ex-Indian National Army men in public service, and if so, from what particular departments they are banned, and

(b) if Government will consider the desirability of removing the restrictions?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja (a) No, Sir No special restrictions on the employment of these persons have been imposed by the Central Government

(b) Does not arise

ACQUIRED LANDS IN BENARES FOR PURPOSES OF WAR

95 *Shri Sri Prakasa Will the Secretary of the Defence Department be pleased to state

(a) the decision of Government regarding the lands acquired for purposes of war at various places in the district of Benares,

(b) if it was not the intention of Government to restore the lands back to the cultivators, and if there has been any change in this decision, and

(c) if there has been no change, what steps Government are taking for the speedy restoration of these lands?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja (a) From part (b) of the question it appears that the Honourable Member refers to requisitions and not acquisitions. Except for two airfields, no land has been acquired in Benares District.

The decision of Government regarding lands requisitioned in Benares District for purposes of War is that they should be returned to their owners.

(b) Government's original intention in the case of lands requisitioned for the establishment of No 2 Reserve Base, Benares, was that they should be acquired, because of the high value of the assets created on them and the heavy cost of restoring the lands to their original condition.

This decision has been changed and orders have been issued for the release of all requisitioned lands except those still required by the Armed Forces.

(c) All lands found surplus to the requirements of the Armed Forces are being released and the release is being speeded up by the decision to dispose of created assets piecemeal without waiting for the complete project to become surplus to Defence Services requirements.

INCOME-TAX ON COMPENSATION FOR LANDS ACQUIRED FOR WAR PURPOSES IN BENARES

96 *Shri Sri Prakasa Will the Secretary of the Defence Department be pleased to state

(a) if it is a fact that agricultural lands were acquired for war purposes by Government in various parts of the district of Benares;

(b) if it is a fact that Government paid an annual compensation for these lands to the tenants,

(c) if it is a fact that the lands now being regarded as non-agricultural, the compensation paid by Government had come to be regarded as subject to income-tax, and

(d) if it is a fact that compensation was paid on the basis of the income of the tenants as being exempt from income-tax; and if so, whether Government propose either to exempt such income from income-tax or pay the tax themselves?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja (a) Agricultural lands were not acquired except for two airfields but requisitioned in parts of the Benares District, mainly in connection with the establishment of No 2 Reserve Base Benares.

(b) Yes.

(c) Yes. The income-tax Authorities have, in accordance with the rules governing income from lands temporarily acquired under the Land Acquisition Act, ruled that compensation for lands not used for purposes of agriculture is liable to Income-tax.

(d) Compensation was based on agricultural profits without taking into consideration the payment of Income-tax. Government will examine the whole question.

REMOVAL OF BRITISH SOLDIERS FROM CALCUTTA

97 *Mr. Debendra Lal Khan (a) Will the Secretary of the Defence Department please state how many British soldiers were present in Calcutta on and after the 16th of August last?

(b) How many Indian soldiers were present in Calcutta during the aforesaid period?

(c) Has any subsequent reinforcement been sent there afterwards? If so, how many of them were British and how many Indians?

(d) Are the Indian soldiers present in Calcutta considered sufficient to quell the communal disturbances there?

(e) If the answer to part (d) above be in the affirmative, will the Honourable Member please refer to of the statement given by the Earl of Winterton, ex-Secretary of State for India in the Conservative Party's meeting at Blackpool, alleging "the use of British troops in India as hired mercenaries for quelling communal conflicts", and take steps to remove the British soldiers from Calcutta to some other place?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja (a) 3,729 British soldiers were in Calcutta on the 16th of August 1946

(b) On the same date there were in Calcutta 23,383 Indian soldiers

(c) Reinforcements despatched to Calcutta subsequent to the 16th of August 1946, were British soldiers—1,768 (Reduced to 459 on the 25th of August 1946), and Indian soldiers—2,231 (Reduced to 629 on 22nd of August 1946)

(d) The responsibility for quelling communal disturbances rests with the Civil Administration. The number of troops who might be required to aid the civil power can only be a matter of opinion; it is the military opinion that the number of Indian troops at present in the Calcutta area is sufficient.

(e) No, Sir, Government are not concerned with the utterances of individual members of the British Parliament, who have no responsibility in the matter.

DECISIONS OF THE INCOME-TAX APPELLATE TRIBUNAL

98. *Seth Govind Das (a) Is the Honourable the Finance Member aware that on account of the provisions of section 54 (1) of the Income Tax Act, the decisions of Income Tax Appellate Tribunal cannot be published and are therefore not available to the assesses for citation or reference?

(b) What steps does he propose to take to help the assesses to know the Tax Law as interpreted by the Appellate Tribunal?

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan The question should have been addressed to the Honourable the Law Member. It has accordingly been transferred to the list of questions for the 6th November 1946, when it will be answered by the Honourable the Law Member.

REFUNDS OF INCOME-TAX

99. *Seth Govind Das Will the Honourable the Finance Member please state as to whether he proposes to take steps by legislation, Rules or executive orders, (a) to expedite grants of refunds of Income Tax to assesses and others who are entitled to the same, (b) to provide for stay orders of assessment orders of subordinate officers pending appeals or references to higher authority?

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan (a) Executive instructions already exist that refunds should be granted as expeditiously as possible and inspecting authorities look into this at the time of inspection and take necessary action.

when they come across refund claim outstanding for more than three months without adequate reasons. The Income Tax Department is also being reorganised as a result of which not only will the strength be greatly augmented but the quality of the officers will also be appreciably improved. This will further help in the reduction of delays.

(b) No, Sir, I consider the discretion that Section 45 of the Income Tax Act gives the Income Tax Officer, to treat a person as not in default as long as appeal filed by him is undisposed of, is adequate.

LIABILITY TO PENAL INTEREST FOR NON-DEPOSIT OF ADVANCE TAX

100. *Seth Govind Das (a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member please state whether Government are aware that the non-deposit of Advance tax in any instalment even due to inability of income tax payers to arrange for the deposit makes him liable to penal interest?

(b) Will he state whether in cases of default as above both penal interest as well as separate penalty to a very great extent under Section 13 (a) and (b) of the Indian Income Tax Act are contemplated under the law?

(c) Do Government propose to remove the ambiguity regarding the application of penal provisions under the "pay-as-you-earn" scheme introduced purely as a war measure?

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan (a) and (b). I take it that the reference to section 13 (a) and (b) in part (b) of the question is in fact to sub-section (10) of section 18-A of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. If so, the reply to part (a) of the question is in the negative. As for part (b) only a penalty under sub-section 10 (a) or (b) would be leviable in such cases to the extent warranted by the circumstances of each particular case.

(c) Does not arise.

CLERKS ON MEDICAL LEAVE SUMMONED FOR THE INCOME-TAX DEPARTMENT TEST IN SIND CIRCLE

101. *Seth Sukhdev (a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member be pleased to refer to reply to part (e) of starred question No. 939, dated the 13th March, 1946 in which Government denied that clerks on medical leave were summoned to appear for the Income-tax Department test in the Sind Circle and state whether Government are aware that the Sind Union has represented to the Central Board of Revenue the case of a clerk on medical leave who was summoned to appear for the above test?

(b) If so, why has the affected person not been compensated so far?

(c) Do Government propose to afford relief in this case?

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan : (a) No representation has been received by the Central Board of Revenue from the Association of the Non-Gazetted Superior Staff, Income-tax Department, Sind and Baluchistan regarding any particular clerk on medical leave who was summoned to appear for the test though it was alleged in general terms that candidates who were on long leave or medical leave were recalled and made to appear at the test.

(b) and (c). Do not arise.

POSTS IN THE SIND AND BALUCHISTAN INCOME-TAX OFFICES

102. *Seth Sukhdev (a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member be pleased to state whether posts of Supervisors and Head Clerks have been sanctioned for Sind and Baluchistan Income Tax Offices in the Reorganization Scheme of the Income Tax Department?

(b) If so, why have these not yet been filled up?

(c) Is the Honourable Member aware that senior Upper Division Clerks in the Income Tax Department in Sind and Baluchistan are performing the duties of Head Clerks on their personal pay?

(d) If the reply to part (c) above is in the affirmative, why is no allowance paid to them for performing the duties of the posts carrying higher responsibilities since January, 1945 ?

(e) Do Government propose to grant necessary allowance to them ?

The Honourable Mr. Laquat Ali Khan : (a) No. The posts of Supervisors and Head Clerks will come into being when full effect is given to the Reorganisation scheme.

(b) Does not arise in view of my reply to part (a)

(c) Senior clerks in the Upper Division scale sanctioned with effect from the 1st January, 1945, in lieu of the pre-existing scales of Senior clerk and First Grade clerk, are doing the work of the pre-existing Senior clerks, not Head clerks.

(d) and (e) Since the Upper Division scale is better in the later stages than the pre-existing Senior Clerk's scale, the question of giving the Upper Division Clerks any allowance while performing the duties previously done by the senior clerk does not arise.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE BHORE COMMITTEE REPORT

103. *Mr. Madandhari Singh : Will the Honourable Member for Health be pleased to lay on the table of the House a statement indicating the action that has been taken or is proposed to be taken on the principal recommendations of the Bhore Committee Report ?

Statement showing Resolutions of the Health Minister's Conference on certain recommendations of the Health Survey and Development Committee

Resolution 1

OBJECTIVES

"The Conference endorses the objectives proposed by the Bhore Committee as objectives to be kept in view in formulating plans for a national health service"

Resolution 2

DISTRICT HEALTH ORGANISATION

The Conference considers that the District Health Organisation proposed is administratively sound and acceptable in principle. The programme for the first five years is not within present financial resources but it is agreed —

Firstly, that the scheme should be implemented on as wide a scale as possible consistent with financial limitations, taking full advantage of existing institutions and staff,

Secondly, that modifications in the scheme may be made where necessary to adapt it to local conditions,

Thirdly, that in areas where the full organisation cannot be set up immediately, schemes for development should be framed with due regard to the objective of building up a curative and preventive health service on the general lines recommended by the Committee,

Fourthly, that each Province should review its plans with these considerations in view

Resolution 3

THE PROVISION OF FACILITIES FOR THE TRAINING OF MEDICAL AND OTHER PERSONNEL

The conference agrees that a review of training facilities in the light of probable future requirements should be undertaken and that particular emphasis should be laid on the training of personnel. It also agrees that as far as possible, the larger provinces should assist those provinces which have not yet been able to provide their own training facilities by admitting students to their training institutions.

Resolution 4

CENTRAL AND PROVINCIAL BOARDS OF HEALTH AND HEALTH COUNCILS

The Conference agrees that Boards of Health and Councils of Experts should be constituted at the Centre and in the Provinces. It considers that representatives of the Central Legislature should be included in the Central Board of Health, that the constitution of the Provincial Boards should be left to the discretion of the Provincial Governments and that the health experts of the Central and Provincial Governments should attend the Central Board of Health. The Conference also considers that the functions of the Central Board and Council should be purely advisory.

Resolution 5

THE AMALGAMATION OF THE MEDICAL AND PUBLIC HEALTH DEPARTMENTS

The Conference accepts the principle of amalgamation of medical and public health departments and considers that the amalgamation should take place when a suitable opportunity occurs.

The Hon'ble Ministers from Madras and Bombay, dissented from this view. The Hon'ble Minister from Madras considered that coordination between the two departments was preferable to amalgamation.

Resolution 6

WATER SUPPLY AND SANITATION

The Conference agrees —

(1) that an active programme for the improvement of water supply and sanitation in both urban and rural areas should be undertaken,

(2) that in respect of water supply the objective should be to provide at least 50% of the population with a safe and abundant water supply within a period of not more than 20 years and the entire population within not more than 35 years.

(3) that in urban areas the objective should be to instal adequate sewerage in all towns with a population of 50,000 or over during the first 10 years,

(4) that the constitution and functions of provincial water and drainage boards should be left to the discretion of Provincial Governments

Resolution 7

ESTABLISHMENT OF ANTI-MALARIA ORGANISATIONS

The Conference agrees

- (1) that a vigorous drive against malaria should receive priority in development programmes;
- (2) that, subject to adaptation to suit local conditions, anti-malaria organisations should follow the general frame work of the organisation proposed by the Bhore Committee,
- (3) that anti-malaria personnel trained in the Defence Services should be utilised to the fullest possible extent

Resolution 8

THE POLICY IN REGARD TO QUININE AND OTHER ANTI-MALARIA DRUGS

The Conference agrees that quinine production should be continued and developed up to about 200,000 lbs a year, subject to review from time to time. III. This Conference resolves that, in the Central Council and Provincial Health Boards and Councils the departments and practitioners of Indian Medicine should be given due representation, wherever possible

DETENUS AND POLITICAL PRISONERS IN BRITISH INDIA PRICEDS

104. *Mr. Madandhari Singh. Will the Honourable the Home Member be pleased to state the number of detenus or political prisoners kept in the various prisons of British India and the reason for their detention?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : The Honourable Member's attention is invited to my reply to question No 68 put by the Honourable Mr. Sanyal on the same subject. The Government of India are concerned only with those detained under the orders of the Government of India

STEPS TO INCREASE THE PURCHASING POWER OF PAPER RUPEE

105. *Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad : Will the Honourable the Finance Member please lay on the table of the House a statement about the steps he has taken or is contemplating to take to increase the purchasing power of the paper rupee?

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan : I do not accept the implied suggestion that paper rupee has a different value than the metallic rupee. As regards the purchasing power of the rupee, Government have continued the various anti-inflationary measures mentioned in the budget speeches and answers to previous questions in the House. Government are aware of the persistence of the inflationary trend in spite of a reduction in currency and increase in imports and have under consideration further measures for checking this tendency.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

SEPARATION OF JUDICIARY FROM THE EXECUTIVE

16. Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal Will the Honourable the Home Member be pleased to state.

(a) whether it is a fact that the present Government are considering taking steps for the separation of the Judiciary from the Executive ;

(b) whether the attention of Government has been drawn to the large volume of public opinion in favour of such separation as expressed in the Press, on the platform of various conferences and on the floor of the Provincial and Central Legislatures from time to time over years and years, and

(c) the difficulties, if any, in effecting such separation immediately or in the very near future ?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel : Not only are Government aware of, but they are in sympathy with, the public demand for the separation of the Judiciary from the Executive. The matter is, however, mostly the concern of the Provincial Governments, the Central Government are only responsible for the Chief Commissioner's Provinces. As has been pointed out by Ministers concerned in some of the Provinces, there are constitutional difficulties in the way of implementing this reform in our administrative system at present. These difficulties, we hope, will disappear shortly when the control of the Secretary of State over the services in India is terminated. It would then be possible to examine the problem in all its rather complicated details and review what changes in the criminal law of the country would be necessary. It is also a matter for some consideration whether the questions should not await the determination of the future constitutional structure of this country.

TABOO OF THE WORDS 'JAI HIND' IN THE INDIAN ARMED FORCES

17 Mr. Debendra Lal Khan Will the Secretary of the Defence Department please state whether it is a fact that the words "Jai Hind" which are freely used even by the members of the Interim National Government, are tabooed in the Indian Army, Navy and the Air Forces ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja, No, Sir But the Army has its own slogans in peace and war which have been in vogue for decades past and no change is contemplated in current usages.

SHORT TERM PLAN FOR IMPLEMENTING THE RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE BHORE COMMITTEE

18 Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal Will the Honourable Member for Health be pleased to state

(a) what short term plan has been adopted for implementing the recommendations of the Bhore Committee which has submitted a comprehensive report upon the problem of Health in Rural India,

(b) how, financially and organisationally, Government propose to co-ordinate the scheme between the Centre and Provinces, and

(c) whether the matter has been placed before the Standing Committee for Health, and when the said Committee met last ?

Mr. S. H. Y. Oulsmann : (a) No uniform short term plan has yet been adopted. The Bhore Committee's Scheme for a district health organisation in the rural areas was considered at a Conference of provincial ministers held on the 10th to 12th October and the Conference was of the opinion that although the scheme was acceptable in principle, it was not within present financial resources. The Conference, however, agreed that the schemes already prepared by Provincial Governments should be reviewed in the light of the recommendations of the Committee with the object of gradually building up a health service on the lines suggested by the Committee.

(b) The Central Government has agreed to make annual block grants for development to Provincial Governments. The grants will be subject to the conditions contained in the Planning and Development Department letter, No 82/RC, dated the 18th April of which a copy is laid on the table of the House. In addition to financial assistance the Central Government will provide facilities of mutual consultation and will make available expert advice to Provincial Governments.

(c) The matter has not yet been placed before the Standing Committee for Health, which has not yet met, but it is proposed to call a meeting during the present session.

No 82/RC.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA

DEPARTMENT OF PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT

Secretariat, North Block,
New Delhi

Thd 16th April, 1946

FROM

T M S MANI, Esquire, O.B.E., I.C.S.,
Deputy Secretary to the Government of India

TO

ALL PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

SUBJECT —Provincial five year plans—Central grants formulation of a concordat

SIR,

The Government of India, having now completed, for all practical purposes, the scrutiny of interim plans forwarded by Provincial Governments, propose to address themselves to a review of five year plans. For this purpose, it is necessary to formulate, more definitely, agreed principles to be observed in finalising the five year plans and for determining the form in which the Central grants should be made and the conditions to which they should be subject. While the Government of India have no intention of interfering with the detailed execution of schemes, the Provincial Governments will doubtless agree that a certain degree of Central co-ordination of the Provincial plans is essential not only in view of the all-India nature of the problems, but of their magnitude which necessitates substantial financial aid from the Centre in the shape of grants and loan money. Then again the Central Legislature will naturally demand, before voting considerable grants, that they are utilised for development purposes in accordance with approved policies and plans. The Government of India have examined the question in the light of these general considerations and have arrived at the following provisional conclusions.

2. As regards the financial basis of the plans, for the present, the Government of India propose to scrutinise the financial feasibility of the Provincial five-year plans on the basis of this department letter No 82/RC dated the 9th January, 1945, in which the Provinces were asked to assume, for the purpose of planning, that approximately one half to two-thirds of the total estimated Central surplus of 500 crores would be available for distribution. No closer estimate is yet possible. As regards distribution, Provinces were asked to assume that this would be done on the basis of population strengths, subject to special consideration being given to the poorer Provinces and those affected by enemy action. The Government of India are now disposed to think that this is not altogether appropriate and wish to examine whether a scheme more on the lines of the Australian system would not be more suitable for achieving reasonably equal standards of social and cognate services in the different Provinces. In this connection, a reference is invited to para 33 of the Hon'ble the Finance Member's last budget speech. As it will be some time, however, before a final decision is reached, and as it is necessary in the meanwhile to proceed with the examination of Provincial five-year plans, the Government of India propose that the review should be conducted on the provisional basis already indicated.

3. As regards the detailed schemes it is proposed that the Provincial plans should be examined in consultation with the Provincial Governments concerned with a view to ensuring broadly that the development is reasonably well-balanced as between different heads of development, having regard to all-India policies and the total resources expected to be available. For the purpose of this analysis, it is suggested that the main heads might be as follows:—

(i) Multi-purpose waterways, irrigation, and power development (this head would include major irrigation and hydro electric power schemes and also thermal power schemes)

(ii) Agriculture and kindred subjects including minor irrigation and forests

(iii) Education

(iv) Health

(v) Roads

(vi) All other subjects.

It appears unnecessary to the Government of India for the purposes of their analysis to have a larger number of main heads

4 As regards the grants it is the intention of the Government of India that for the purpose^s of budgeting and accounting, they should make annual block grants to the Provinces. These grants will however be deemed to have been distributed over the different main heads referred to in para 3 above in the proportion which the estimated development expenditure under each head bears to the total of all the development expenditure under the 5-year plan of the province. (Productive expenditure, e.g. under heading (5) which should be financed from loan money will be excluded for the purpose of grants). Thus, for example, if the expenditure on education in an approved Provincial plan where 15% of the total expenditure on all subjects, then 15% of the Central grant will have to be regarded as allotted to the subject. Similarly as regards other subjects. Only a separate pro forma account will need to be kept for this purpose.

5 Having regard to the considerations stated in para 1, the Government of India propose that the grant attributable to each main head should be subject to the following broad conditions —

(i) That the schemes under each head form part of a policy or plan approved generally by the Government of India and have been scrutinised adequately both administratively and financially and sanctioned by the competent Provincial authority before they are executed, and that adequate steps have been taken to ensure administrative and technical efficiency in their execution.

(ii) Information should be supplied by the Provincial Government as required by the Government of India, regarding the details of schemes falling under the head in question.

(iii) Facilities should be given to the representatives of the Government of India to keep in touch with development and the progress of schemes, should they so desire.

(iv) An annual report of the progress made in the execution of the schemes should be made^o available to the Government of India.

(v) Major variations in schemes should be notified in advance to the Government of India.

(vi) In special cases the Government of India may attach specific conditions to individual schemes.

The Government of India would also stipulate that the financial resources of the Province are adequately exploited and safeguarded and that in important matters of all-India policy, the Province should not do anything to impede development on the lines approved by the Government of India with the concurrence of the majority of Provinces.

If it is found that the conditions referred to above are not observed in any important particular, the Government of India would reserve the right to make such reductions in the grant as they may consider justifiable in the circumstances.

6 The Government of India trust that Provinces will agree that the conditions stipulated above are no more than necessary to enable them to discharge their responsibility, which is to see that the very large sums voted by the Central Legislature are spent effectively and in accordance with approved plans. I am to request to be informed at a very early date whether the Provincial Governments are agreeable to these proposals.

I have the honour to be,

Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

REPORT ON THE COMMUNAL DISTURBANCES IN BENGAL

19 Mr. K. C. Neogy. Will the Honourable the Home Member be pleased to lay on the table of the House a statement giving the purport of any representations or reports that may have been addressed to him in his official capacity or received in his Department dealing with the communal disturbances that broke out in Bengal on and after the 16th August last, indicating in each case the action taken thereon?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: Many representations have been and are being received but no action could be taken on them in view of the constitutional position, of which the Honourable Member is no doubt aware.

SUBSIDIZED HOUSING SCHEMES BY THE LABOUR DEPARTMENT

20 Mr. K. C. Neogy Will the Honourable the Finance Member be pleased to refer to paragraph 32 of the Budget Speech made on the 28th February, 1946, by the then Finance Member and lay on the table of the House a statement showing, Province by Province, the Labour Departments subsidised housing schemes and, the amount of subsidy paid or promised by the Central Government and the progress made in each case?

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan : Owing to the continuance of very high building costs there has so far been little response to the offer mentioned in paragraph 32 of the Budget Speech and no subsidies have yet been paid under the terms of that offer. The question is being further discussed with the Provincial Governments.

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE TO PRIVATE BUILDING ACTIVITIES

21 Mr. K. C. Neogy Will the Honourable the Finance Member please refer to the Budget Speech made on the 28th February, 1946, by the then Finance Member in which proposals for assisting and stimulating private building activity were made, and special steps indicated as being taken to increase allocations of coal for the burning of bricks and release of timber, cement and steel, and to relax controls over these materials and to extend production capacity, and lay on the table of the House a statement showing Province by Province, the progress made, or expected to be made in this matter during the year, as well as the nature of the action taken in the various directions indicated in the said speech, and the result achieved therefrom?

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan : This question should have been addressed to the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies. It has accordingly been transferred to the list of questions for the 6th November 1946 when it will be answered by the Honourable Member for the Industries and Supplies.

DEVELOPMENT SCHEMES TO CREATE EMPLOYMENT AT SHORT NOTICE

22. Mr. K. C. Neogy (a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member be pleased to refer to paragraph 31 of the Budget Speech made on the 28th February, 1946 by the then Finance Member and lay on the table of the House a statement showing, Province by Province, the approved development schemes intended to create employment which could be started at short notice, indicating the funds provided by the Central Government for carrying out each such scheme during the current year?

(b) What conditions, if any, have been imposed on the provision of funds to the Provincial Governments in this matter by way of administrative or financial control or supervision, and to what extent are such conditions being actually carried out?

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan : (a) As was stated in the Budget Speech a lump sum provision of Rs. 35 crores was made in the current year's budget for payments to provincial Governments in respect of non-productive development schemes and a provision of Rs. 15 crores was made for loans to Provinces for productive development works. Out of the provision of Rs. 35 crores the Provincial Governments will be paid the amounts actually spent during the current financial year on approved schemes. Large numbers of schemes have been approved for each Province, but the approved lists include schemes relating to all the main development subjects and are not confined to schemes intended to create employment. The complete list of approved schemes for any Province will be supplied to the Honourable Member if he so desires,

(b) No conditions have been imposed in respect of the funds to be provided during the current financial year since the schemes have been approved individually by the Government of India and payment is to be made only on the basis of the actual expenditure reported by the audit officers concerned.

SUBVENTIONS, LOANS OR ADVANCES PAID TO BENGAL GOVERNMENT BY THE CENTRAL GOVERNMENT FOR FAMINE, ETC

23 Mr. K. C. Neogy (a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member be pleased to lay on the table of the House a statement showing the amounts that have been paid to the Government of Bengal from the Central Government funds, year by year, since 1943 by way of subvention, loan or advance, respectively, for meeting Provincial expenditure on famine relief or allied objects?

(b) Has any similar amount been granted to any other Province in recent years?

(c) What conditions, if any, were imposed on the provision of financial assistance to the Government of Bengal in this matter by way of administrative or financial control or supervision, and to what extent have such conditions been actually carried out?

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan : (a) The following special payments were made to the Government of Bengal in connection with the famine

	1943-44	1944-45	1945-46
	(In lakhs of rupees)
(a) Subvention	3,00	7,00	8,00
(aa) Loans
(aaa) Advances
Total	3,00	7,00	8,00

(b) No

(c) No conditions were imposed

PUBLIC DEBT (CENTRAL GOVERNMENT) RULES 1946—LAID ON THE TABLE

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan : (Finance Member) Sir, I lay on the table a copy of the Public Debt (Central Government)* Rules, 1946 published in the Finance Department Notification No F 9 (1)B/46, dated the 12 Noon 20th April, 1946 under sub-section (3) of Section 28 of the Public Debt (Central Government) Act, 1944

INDIAN TRADE UNIONS (AMENDMENT) BILL

Mr. President: The House will now proceed with the Legislative Business, i.e., the motion of the Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram to refer the Indian Trade Unions Act to the Select Committee as proposed by him yesterday

In this connection I find that a circulation motion has been given notice of late last evening. I shall allow the Honourable Member if he wishes to move that motion to do so after Prof Ranga has finished his speech on the subject, but I may just request members to be so good as to give notice in due time and not so late as that. Unless notices are received in proper time, I do not propose to exercise my discretion of allowing such motions notices of which are given at the last moment. Prof Ranga may now address the House keeping in mind that this motion is coming before the House.

Prof N G. Ranga (Guntur cum Nellore Non-Muhammadian Rural) Yesterday before the House rose I was saying that this Bill has been conceived in the interest of Indian industrial labour and that those of us like Dr Zia Uddin who claims to speak in favour of our labour ought to support this Bill instead of opposing it in toto. I would also like to add that those other Honourable Members who may be in favour of this motion for circulation will not be serving the cause of labour but will be, on the other hand, harming the cause of Indian labour.

* Not printed in these Debates, copies placed in the Library of the House.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad (United Provinces Southern Divisions Rural) Muhammadian Rural) How?

Prof. N. G. Ranga: It is quite easy for any one to see that when Indian labour is so very weak as to come to be in need of a Bill like this for the recognition of their trade unions, then it must mean that it is already too late to provide them at least this minimum of protection. They want this protection. It is not for people like my Honourable friend, Dr. Zia Uddin, to say whether Indian labour wants this protection or not. Indian labour has repeatedly demanded this protection. It has been doing so for the last 25 years, or even more. The mere fact that in England a Bill like this has not been found to be necessary and that in England the English Trade Unions have been able to get on without a law like this whereas our Indian labour has come to be in need of it, shows the very urgency for passing this particular Bill into an Act and affording this much of protection at least to our industrial labour.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: But it does not go far enough.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: My Honourable friend says that it does not go far enough. He wants something more and his way of giving our Indian labour something more is by delaying the passage of this Bill. This is an extraordinary piece of logic which I am not able to follow, and with which I am certainly not in agreement. Therefore, I hope that the House will not favour this motion for circulation and that the House will support the commitment of this Bill to the Select Committee at the earliest possible opportunity.

I wish to refer only to a few points relating to some of the clauses of this Bill. Sir, I am wholly in agreement with the proposed clause 28 (b) in which it is stated that the industrial courts shall consist of one or more persons each of whom is qualified for appointment as a Judge of a High Court. It is a very good provision indeed, but the only remark that I wish to offer is that such a court should not consist of only one member at any time, but should on the other hand have the representatives of both the employers and the employees in addition to an appointed officer of the status of a judge of a High Court. Otherwise a court like this will not be able to discharge the functions which it is expected to discharge.

Then there is clause 28 (c). I have grave doubts in regard to the advisability of this clause. According to this, if there is any private agreement between an employer and a trade union, then immediately the trade unions will be able to achieve the status of a recognized trade union. All that has got to be done is to get that particular agreement registered with the Industrial court. I would like to know whether in addition to their agreement between themselves, i.e., the employer on the one hand and the trade union on the other, this particular trade union has to satisfy the conditions prescribed for recognition in clause 28 (d). If any trade union comes to be recognized merely because it is able to win the consent or the support of the employer without having to satisfy the conditions prescribed in 28 (d) then I am afraid it is going to be very much against the workers because many L. O. Unions can come to be floated by employers and can come to be recognized by them through a sort of an agreement and can then be expected to enjoy all the privileges of a recognized union to the detriment of the properly organised and developed trade unions of workers. Therefore, Sir, there seems to be some inconsistency between these clauses 28 (c) and 28 (d). Some improvement has got to be made in the Select Committee in order to rectify this particular error and I would like the Select Committee to consider the advisability of renumbering them—28 (d) as 28 (c) and 28 (c) as 28 (d),—so that this doubt might be removed and instead of the agreement that might come to be concluded between the employers and the trade union, a trade union before it could be recognized would have to satisfy the conditions prescribed for recognition. Coming to clause 28F, it is stated that if the employer has arrived at a conclusion after previous discussions with the executive of a trade union, then it will not be possible for the trade union and its executive to start correspondence over such a question within at least six months. I would like it to be stated that the employer when he arrives at a conclusion should take care to notify the Trade Union that he has reached that conclusion and what that conclusion is so that the Trade Union would know at what stage a conclusion has been reached and what that conclusion actually happens to be.

There is one very good feature in this, and I am afraid it is because of it that this motion for circulation seems to have been inspired and that is to be found in one of the conditions mentioned for recognition in clause 28D 'that its rules do not provide for the exclusion of members on communal or religious grounds.' This is a very salutary provision. It is most essential that this communalism should not be allowed to become a canker even in trade union ranks, and I am glad, Sir, that the predecessor of the present Labour Member had taken a very strong stand in regard to this, and I am glad also that the present Member has seen fit to retain this particular provision in this Bill. It is most essential that trade unions should be non-communal and every trade union should be so democratically organized that all the workers professing different religions would be entitled to join the trade union and derive the benefits therefrom.

Therefore, there is nothing wrong. It does not say that either the Hindus or the Muslims or the Christians or any other religious group should not have a Union consisting predominantly of members of their own religion, but it does maintain that no union should debar the members of any one particular religion merely because they happen to belong to that religion. I know on the Continent of Europe there is this particular difficulty of religion in trade unionism. There are the Catholics there who have formed their own trade union, but they have taken care in many countries to throw open their ranks to other people also and to people of other religious denominations. Where they do so, they do not go to the State to ask for recognition. But where a trade union seeks the recognition of the State and through the good offices of the State the recognition of the employer, it must take care to see that its ranks are thrown open and its doors are thrown open to people of all religions and only to people of one religion. Therefore even more for this purpose of making out trade unions as far as possible denominational or cosmopolitan, I am in favour of this Bill. I hope Sir that the House will have no hesitation whatsoever in sending this Bill to the Select Committee and will reject this motion for circulation.

Haji Abdus Sattar Haji Ishaq Seth (West Coast and Nilgiris Muhammadan) Sir, I move

That the Bill be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion thereon by the 28th February, 1947.

I want to make it quite clear at the very outset that we in this Party are completely and wholeheartedly in favour of all the provisions in the Bill except one. This Bill has a long history behind it. It was introduced more than once in this House but could not be proceeded with because of the very strong opposition that the Muslim League Party had against this provision and also because in the earlier stages the labour representatives in this House used to take strong objection to certain provisions of this Bill. Even last session, Dr Ambedkar was very anxious that he should proceed with this Bill but the Government found that the opposition both from labour quarters and from Muslim League was so strong that they thought it was not advisable to proceed with it. Now there is a new Government and a new Honourable Member in charge. I do not know whether they have applied their minds to all the provisions of this Bill. What I guess has happened is that they found a ready-made Bill in their hands and they have come up before this House.

I will first speak on the necessity for circulation. A Bill almost identical with this was circulated and opinions were elicited and I have this file of opinions that was received. I am bringing this to the notice of this House to prevent the Honourable Member from stating that I kept this matter back. The Bill was circulated. Many of the opinions make a complaint of the fact that the time allotted for expressing their opinions was very short. In some cases it was a matter of three days. There is a letter from the United Planters'

Association, South India, Coonoor. They had about four to eight days within which to express their opinion and they refused to do so. Then there is the Cochin Chamber of Commerce. They also refused to express their opinion.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena (Lucknow Division Non-Muhammadan Rural) How many expressed their opinions?

Haji Abdus Sattar Haji Ishaq Seth What I want to point out is that the time given was very short and it was not possible for employers of labour and even for labour organisations, to express their opinions. Here is one from the Provincial Trade Union Congress, Madras. They say (their Secretary writes)

"I wish to state that it is not possible for this Union as a whole to formulate their views within the time specified to you, i.e. 15th February, 1944."

Therefore any case for circulation is very strong.

Before proceeding, I want to answer my friend, Prof. Ranga. In moving this motion I do not want to create any hindrance or obstruction in the smooth passing of the Bill. The House will observe that the date I have given has been very carefully chosen. My motion requires that opinions should be available to this House before the 28th February so that the Government, if they choose can proceed with the Bill in the next session of this Assembly. As a matter of fact, I do not think they can finish all the stages of this Bill in this session. Probably the Select Committee will meet during the session and the final stages will have to be gone through in the next session, and I am not trying to hinder that programme. According to the date that I have fixed, the final stages can be finished in the next session. Therefore the charge that we in this Party wish to block the progress of the Bill is not substantiated. I know that at this stage I will not be permitted by you to go into the details of the provisions of this Bill. But there is a provision which has been all along opposed by our Party, and that is sub-clause (c) of Clause 28D which provides that a union shall not be entitled to recognition under this Act unless it fulfils the following conditions

(c) "that its rules do not provide for the exclusion of members on communal or religious grounds,"

In short, the idea is that communal unions or unions confined to certain communities or followers of certain religions should not be recognised at all. My friend Prof. Ranga thinks that this is a very salutary provision. He is entitled to his opinion and I am entitled to mine. I do not wish to provide that there should be communal unions. I do not say that there shall be unions confined to communities or followers of particular religions. What I want to state is that it should be possible for unions to be formed, if labourers so desire, confining them to communities or societies. I do not see why the liberty of labour to organise themselves in whatever form they desire should be curtailed. What is the necessity for it?

Miss Maniben Kara (Nominated Non-Official) On a point of order is the Honourable Member speaking on the merits or demerits of the Bill or is he speaking on his amendment?

Mr. President: He is speaking on both.

Miss Maniben Kara: He said in his opening remarks that he was restricting himself to his amendment.

Mr. President: He is speaking on both. Even on the amendment he seems to be in order.

Haji Abdul Sattar Haji Ishaq Seth: Our demand that recognition should be granted to labour unions which are confined to Muslims alone has been a long standing one. In this House as far as I can remember a resolution was moved by our party. It was no doubt negatived but we were very vehement in support of that resolution. Then in 1943 my Honourable friend Mr. Muhammad

[Haji Abdus Sattar Haji Ishaq Seth]

Nauman moved a cut motion on the Railway Budget, the subject matter of that motion being that recognition should be granted to Muslim labour unions formed under the Railway. There is nothing new in this demand that we are making today. This has been the stand of the Muslim League. It has been the stand of Muslim labour even outside this House and it is a fact that a number of Muslim labour unions have been formed and are working. I will remind Honourable Members of a statement made by the General Manager of the South Indian Railway in the course of the recent strike that took place there. He particularly mentioned the Muslim Labour Union as being against that strike and taking no part in it. That will show that there are Muslim labour unions which are influential enough to take decisions and to make their decisions felt. I do not see why we in this House should go out of our way to curtail this activity that they have.

Again, to answer my friend Prof. Ranga, when a section of labour wants to organise itself separately there must be some reason for it. Prof. Ranga appears to think it a sacred principle that there should be no communal union. Prof. Ranga must realise that if a section of labour decide to organise separately there must be sufficient reason for it. When they do it who are we or who is my friend Prof. Ranga to say Nay to them. He has not really advanced any arguments for the strong opinion that he has expressed against these sectional unions.

To save another point of order from my Honourable friend Miss Kara I will not go into very great details. I only want to say that our feeling, the feelings of the Muslims both inside and outside this House are very strongly in favour of forming Muslim labour unions. The labour unions if they are confined only to labour matters we can understand them but the labour unions go out of their way. They do take part in other matters also. For instance here is a press cutting from the Free Press Journal dated the 30th April. It contains a report of a meeting of the Central Executive of the B. B. C. I. Railway Labour Union. (Interruption.) It has something to do with labour. Along with the resolution pertaining to their own grievances there is a resolution on the political situation and that resolution generally favours the Congress standpoint. There are a number of Muslim labourers employed by the B. B. C. I. Railway and I am sure many of them must be feeling not quite in accord with the Congress opinion. This resolution which they have passed is supposed to be the resolution of the Union which includes Muslim labourers also. What is the way out for them? Will my friend Prof. Ranga tell me? How can those Muslim labourers who are not of this view express their opinions? (Interruption by Prof. Ranga.) That is one point. When Muslim labour wants to organise itself separately there must be sufficient reason for it. As a matter of fact the experience in this country has been so bitter sometimes. Our experience in this very House with regard to our employees under the Railways, under the Government of India and under so many other establishments, and our special grievances with regard to our peculiar needs in respect of promotion for Muslims, conditions of enrolment and so on are such that they receive scant attention at the hands of joint labour unions. That is why we are for separate labour unions. As a matter of fact there is a strong Muslim Employees Association working in Delhi in connection with the Government Railways. It is a strong and well organised body and it has branches in Calcutta and Madras. There is a branch for the South Indian Railway. All these are working and they have shown that there is need for their existence. I do not see any reason why we should today in this House make a statutory provision that such labour unions shall not exist and if they exist they shall not be recognised. So far the law has not said anything. It is the policy of the Government not to recognise sectional labour unions. This is what they have said in reply to many questions and debates in this House. But that is a different matter. Today we are making a statutory provision. We provide by law that such labour unions shall not exist. I do not think that any of us on this side of the House would agree to this and I therefore strongly object to this provision.

There is only one point more and that is this. This new Government was finally formed only last week. I do not think that all the members of the Government sat together and discussed this matter. Therefore, all the more reason why a little time should be given, so that the members of the government should sit together and formulate their policy. My motion will help towards that. For these reasons I commend my motion to the acceptance of the House and I move it.

Mr. President: Amendment moved.

Miss Maniben Kara: Sir, I wholeheartedly welcome this Bill which has been sponsored by the Honourable Labour Member. As a matter of fact this Bill was circulated as far back as 1941 (An Honourable Member ‘The same Bill’). Yes. It was circulated for eliciting opinions. Certain useful suggestions were made by various labour organisations to the original draft which were accepted. The Bill was introduced after two years in this House, in 1943, and was allowed to lapse. As a matter of fact the very basic principle of this Bill which is the right of recognition of trade unions has been before the public ever since 1940. I cannot understand the views expressed by some members that they did not have sufficient time to consider the principle of the Bill. I was myself present at the last session and I can say with the authority of those who represent labour in this House that there was absolutely no opposition so far as the labour members were concerned to this Bill. It was not debated on, because of the opposition of one or the other parties in this House. I want to make this point very clear in view of the remarks made by the last speaker that even labour members of the House were opposed to the Bill.

Before proceeding into the details of this Bill and its various clauses, I would make some general observations on this Bill. The right of recognition is the most elementary right of the working class. As a matter of fact in all civilised countries this right of recognition of trade unions has been granted by private negotiations and accepting the principle of collective bargaining between the employers and the employees. It is unfortunate that in this country, even at this stage, we are compelled to bring in such legislation for such an elementary right of the workers to have recognition. As a matter of fact the Royal Commission on labour had recommended voluntary recognition of trade unions about 15 or 16 years back, and all these years we hoped for a change of heart of the employers who call themselves as trustees and great patriots—we hoped for change of heart on their part, which would help the growth of healthy trade union movement in this country. Unfortunately we see today that owing to the hostile attitude of the employers and of the government, there has not been that healthy growth of trade union movement. We are faced today with the position that even legislation is required for the very elementary right of the workers to have recognition of trade unions. I will make myself bold to say at this stage that I would lay the entire responsibility on the shoulders of the government and the employers that we have been required to have such legislation for the workers. It should have been possible for us to have recognition and the healthy growth of the trade union movement by collective bargaining and also by private understanding between the employers and the employees if they had accepted the principle of collective bargaining of the workers. I will say a few words in reply to my Honourable friend Mr. Siddiqi who spoke yesterday, and to the last speaker today. They made certain mention about what they called yesterday class organisation, and today they call communal organisations. I for one am not one of those who disputes the right of freedom of organisation to anybody. But I would certainly say that the very basic principle of trade union movement is a class organisation, and classes cut across all communities, religions and even nationalities. It is a class organisation to safeguard the interests of the employees, no matter whether they are Hindus or Muslims, Christians, Europeans or any community they may belong to. It would be an impractical proposition to have communal trade unions because in a factory which employs labour of all communities, is it possible for us to have any collective bargaining with the employers unless and until we have the co-operation of all those people who are working there? I would therefore appeal to my Muslim friends that whatever the points of differences between the two major upper class political parties may be, the differences need not be dragged into the trade union movement. Up till now the trade union movement has been free of any of these communal differences, because we are concerned with the economic uplift and the betterment of the conditions of life of the oppressed people. The politics of the trade union movement is essentially the politics of the working classes. It has no other politics. I am sorry the last honourable speaker did not actually give us the contents of the resolution passed by a railway union, but I make bold to say that whatever resolution was published in the Free Press Journal, could not be detrimental either to the Muslim masses or the Hindu masses or the Christian masses or workers of any other religion. That is why I would appeal to my Muslim friends and say let us not drag these communal problems, from which the trade union movement has always been free and will always remain free.

Mr Muhammad Nauman (Patna and Chota Nagpur cum Orissa Muhammadan) It has not been free, it will not be free, I am sorry to say.

Miss Maniben Kara: It will be free because the trade union movement is based on class struggle—it is a struggle between the employers and the employees. Here I would draw the attention of my friend Mr Nauman and ask him whether a Muslim employer—is he going to treat his Muslim employees any better if he would get Hindoo employees for less wages?

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: On a point of personal explanation.

Mr. President: Order, order. Let the Honourable Member go on.

Miss Maniben Kara: We hold the view that there are only two castes, or classes, so far as trade unions are concerned, one is of the exploiter and the other of the exploited. These are the only two castes in the trade union movement. I say this because I have spent my life in the working class movement and I speak with experience. I am the secretary of a union whose president is an ordinary sweeper—a Muslim of whom I am proud of. We have conducted our strikes and our struggles and fought our difficulties throughout all these years as brethren working in the same family. I would once again emphasise that where the question of economic uplift is concerned, even the differences between the political parties will be solved tomorrow. These questions are not solved by the upper class parties because the basis of political parties is not on economic uplift of the Indian masses—they are merely fighting for the loaves and fishes of office, I would appeal to my friends once again, that if we are to help the working class in this country let us not be satisfied merely with independence—let us fight for the freedom from want of the Indian people, and I would therefore appeal to the members on both sides, both the upper class parties to join hands for the entire reconstruction of the social order in this country which is now based on a feudal system, so that we can break up the entire social order which only will enable the people to be free from the want of the necessities of life. This is the only way we can healthily approach any problem.

Coming again to some of the arguments which are generally put forward for the non-recognition of trade unions—it is said that the trade union movement is not strong in this country. It is a vicious circle. Apart from various other factors which are existing in this country or which have existed for all these years, the main and fundamental reason for the lack of growth of unions is the refusal of the employers to recognise the trade unions. All sorts of suppression, victimisation and obstruction are placed in the way of the trade union movement. If the employers were enlightened enough to understand that the recognition of a union is the surest guarantee of industrial peace in the country I am sure industries would have been helped and so also the growth of trade union movement in this country. It is high time when the employers realised that they cannot say that they are nationalists, but they want to protect their industries against foreign competition. They must realise that they will not as the export trade at the cost of depressing labour wages. The test of nationalism will be the good Bills they bring for the uplift of the Indian workers. I would therefore expect my Muslim friends not to press for cancellation of this Bill but to see that this Bill is passed as quickly as possible. I shall now give the House some information about what is the state of affairs in certain South American countries where trade union movement is not as strong as say in America or England. In some places like Columbia, in order to help the formation of the healthy trade union movement, the consent of a labour judge is necessary even for the transfer of a trade union worker from one place to another. Even there the people have realised the value of healthy trade unionism, which would help the country as a whole. They have raised the status of the trade union leaders to an extent that an employer is not even in a position to transfer a worker from one place to another till a labour authority is consulted on the point. The same thing obtains in Brazil. There also the law provides for the absence of trade union workers without leave. In Bolivia, Chili and Columbia there is no dismissal of a worker (even after giving sufficient grounds for such a dismissal) without the authority of a labour judge. They are not in a position to dismiss just anyway they like. Even now the provisions in the present Bill before us falls short of those conditions can be better judged from the instances which I have given you this morning. These instances, I would once again repeat are found in South American countries where the growth of the trade union movement is not very strong and they have come to realise that it is in the interest of the country to give as many privileges as possible for the betterment of the workers. In Ecuador, if a member of the executive committee of a trade union is dismissed the employers have to pay him one year's wages. That goes to show that those countries have also realised that every facility should be given for the growth of the trade union movement.

Now, I shall deal with some of the sections in this Bill. I do not intend to deal in detail with all the clauses because the Bill is to be referred to the Select Committee. I am sure the Select Committee will give sufficient time and consideration to various suggestions. My friend and colleague Mr. N. M. Joshi is also going to address this House on the same question and he will be quite competent to deal in details. Yet I cannot help making some remarks on Section 28D. After saying all I have done in support of this very elementary right of the workers for recognition, I am surprised that even now numerous conditions are placed for recognition. Is it not good enough for recognition if a union is registered? After all registration of a union is not an easy thing. One has to satisfy the Registrar on so many points. I am pestered by so many letters and circulars from the registrar and you have to answer every time. Every six months we have to fill up forms saying how many meetings of the unions have been held, who are the office bearers, and so on. When all these conditions are already existing for a registered trade union, I cannot therefore understand why any extra difficulties should be placed in the way of the recognition of a trade union by keeping clauses (a) to (h). These clauses are absolutely redundant, because I feel that if a union which has been able to satisfy a Registrar and a union which has been registered should automatically get recognition from the employers.

Again there are certain other dangerous clauses in the Bill. Clause 28D (f)—only a representative Trade Union should get recognition. Who is to decide whether a union is representative or not. It is such a vague term, which is definitely dangerous and goes against the interest of the workers. I shall ask for the deletion of that clause.

I now come to 28E, item (3). I ask for the deletion of the last two lines beginning from 'and shall forward the application to the appropriate, etc.' Here we talk of the Industrial Court. An Independent Industrial Court has been appointed already. I do not see the necessity for recommendation to Government regarding the grant or withholding of recognition.

[Miss Maniben Kara]

Coming to 28F, et q Rights of Recognised trade unions, on the face of it, it appears generous. As a matter of fact, the right of a recognised union does not go far enough. It says that the employer will be good enough to receive and send replies to letters sent by the union. The right of the recognised union should not necessarily stop at receiving replies from the employers. They should be given facilities to hold meetings. They should be allowed to form mill committees, factory committees, make collections inside the pace of work. I may also draw the attention of this House that the Government are giving certain facilities to some unions, namely, the P and T Unions and the Railway Unions. Passes are given to the railway unions and the P and T Unions are getting leave to attend their meetings. These are the facilities enjoyed already and they must be put in the Bill because I am not one of those who believe in the change of heart. I would therefore, insist that everything should be put down in black and white, and these suggestions may be seriously considered by the Select Committee.

Sir, these are the few remarks which I wanted to make in support of this Bill and I would once again appeal to all the Members of this House that this Bill should be adopted as it has been put forward by the Honourable the Labour Member.

Mr. P. J. Griffiths (Assam European) Mr. President, Sir, if the measure now under discussion had been originally drafted and sponsored by the present Labour Member I should have regarded it as somewhat unfortunate that I was compelled to take a critical attitude of the first legislative measure brought before this House by the new Indian Government. Under those circumstances, I should have had to take comfort in the fact that the essence of the parliamentary system is the full and frank expression of opinion and that least of all would my friends on those Benches wish that my Group or my individual in this House should hesitate in expressing his honest views. I drew greater comfort from the fact that this Bill is not the product of the present Government or the present Labour Member but it is indeed a legacy, perhaps an embarrassing and unsatisfactory legacy, from their predecessors, or perhaps to be more accurate, I should say this is a legacy from that Labour Department which has already acquired in all sections of this House and in the country outside a reputation of some years' standing for nebulous drafting, loose thinking and undue haste. I trust therefore my Honourable friend will feel, that when I speak critically of certain portions of this measure that attitude does not denote any unwillingness on our part, in this Group, to help him to the utmost in ameliorating the conditions of labour and in bringing forward really progressive legislation. I want to make it clear at the outset that in spite of our critical attitude towards certain parts of this Bill, we propose to support the reference to Select Committee because we believe that, in spite of its many defects it does contain, some germs of good.

In attempting to analyse the main contents of the Bill, I do not propose to follow the provisions verbatim as set forth in the Bill, but I prefer rather to adopt in order which seems to me more convenient for logical analysis. The Bill deals with four main principles. Firstly, though it is not first in the Bill, it defines the rights of recognised Unions, secondly, it discusses the procedure to be followed by a Union to obtain recognition, thirdly, it deals with the conditions under which and the procedure by which, recognition can be withdrawn, and, finally, it lays down certain practices which on the part of the employers or the employed, are specified as unfair practices.

I want to take first the question of the rights of recognised Unions, and since after all, one of the issues implicit in this Bill is whether trade unionism is a good thing or a bad thing I want to take this opportunity of making clear, once for all the attitude of the employers representing this Group towards the establishment of Unions. I would like to remind my Honourable friends that we are not speaking of 1896 when employers by and large regarded Unions as bad things. We are speaking in 1946 when the average, intelligent employer takes towards this matter an attitude radically different from that which was taken some years ago

Sjt. N. G. Gadgil (Bombay Central Division Non-Muhammadan Urban)
There are still die-hards:

Mr. P. J. Griffiths: There are die-hards in every community and my Honourable friend is one of them in his own community. I want to make it quite clear that those employers whom we represent here have no ground whatsoever, for regarding with disapproval or dislike the growth of trade unionism. On the contrary, they see in the development of well-run, balanced and sound unions the best protection of the interests of the employers and the State alike. I do not know whether that statement carries conviction to some of my Labour friends in this House. Miss Mamben Kara said that she had no belief in a change of heart. I also do not believe in much changes of heart, either of individuals or parties, but I do believe that there is such a thing as a change of understanding and a readiness to adjust views to changed social and economic circumstances. The attitude of employers today towards the question of trade unions is based on a new understanding of what is required in the whole economic and social world. And there are three main reasons, it seems to me, why any intelligent employer today must look with a friendly eye upon the growth of good unions. The first of these reasons is a simple one, namely, that at times of disputes and even when a dispute is merely smouldering—before it bursts into flame—it is much easier and much more satisfactory to deal with one strong, organised and recognised body, than it is to deal with a thousand different people, each of whom wants something different, why because they have no proper spokesman, leaving you all the time in the dark as to their real demands. It is clear and sound logic confirmed by experience that, provided a Union is run with a genuine desire to fulfil the proper functions, of a Union, it puts the employer in a far better position in dealing with his work folk. The lack of organisation amongst working people was all right in the past, when they were passive and when they were content to be as they were and when they demanded nothing. But happily those days are now past. Now, the day has come when working people all over the world demand reasonable standards. It is far better for the employer that those demands should be expressed in a readily intelligible form by a strong and well-organised body, than that they should be unexpressed. There is another reason too. If Trade Unions are properly run, they provide the best protection for a good employer against under-cutting by unscrupulous employers. Most big industries in this country are organised into Associations, and those Associations make recommendations with regard to wages and other conditions of work. Ninety per cent of the employers carry out those recommendations, but a small percentage does not. The good employer, at present, has no means whatsoever of bringing pressure to bear on the bad employer to comply with those recommendations which the industry as a whole regards as reasonable. From the point of view of the good employer the existence of a trade union movement is a means of compelling the bad employer to come to his senses, and is thus not a harassment but a protection. I am giving not just my own views but the views which are held, after careful consideration, by the great body of employers which we in this Group from our various constituencies, represent. There is a third reason, too, why the growth of trade unionism is desirable even from the point of view of an employer and that is that nothing helps more than healthy trade unionism to build up the self-respect of the workers—and nothing, in the long run is better for the employer than to build up that self-respect. Short term considerations might suggest that the self-respect of the worker is an obstacle to the prosperity of the employer, but further consideration shows that view to be a thoroughly unsound one. If a worker has more self-respect he will demand a higher standard of living and want to do more work, benefit will accrue to the employer as well as to the employee. There are great industries in this country today where the workers want so little—or at any rate, they are prepared to earn, so little that they cannot be set to work for more than three or four days in the week. Employers in these industries go about almost cap in hand begging them to work more—and as a rule, with no successful result whatsoever. Why is this so? It is because these workers have not yet attained that degree of self-respect which makes them demand something better of life and makes them, therefore, ready to earn more than they now do. From all these points of view and without any of that change of heart of which Miss Mambin Kar is so rightly suspicious, there has come amongst intelligent employers today a change of understanding, a readiness to fit in with the social and economic conditions not of the 19th century but of today. Some form of representation, and so of protection for the interests of the workers there must be.

There are three forms which in theory might be regarded as possible. Firstly, there is protection by the State—and we all know what disadvantages that has though at times it may be necessary. In the second place, in some industries experiments have been made with Labour Advisory Committees. Those Committees have their advantages but they have their limitations too. It is not unnatural, therefore, that India should seek to experiment with the third method, the method which has been tried with success in the West, the method of trade unionism. I say, therefore, that no thinking employer today is going to object to the formation of Unions provided these Unions have the best interests of the workers at heart. Looked at in the light of these considerations, Section 28F which deals with the rights of recognised Trade Unions, appears to us wholly satisfactory. I am now speaking in general terms, not in details which are to be discussed in the Select Committee, and I say that

1 P M the provision in this section seems satisfactory. Incidentally when I read it for the first time, it provoked an amusing thought in my mind, that an employer should be compelled to reply to letters received from trade unions. I wished the Government itself would follow that principle, so that when we wrote to Government departments, we should obtain a reply at any rate within a reasonable time.

Passing on from that pleasantry, we do accept the principle contained in Section 28F, but we think, there should be some reciprocal obligation—that a Union should not be allowed to remain silent if questions are put to it, oral or written, by the employer. Much more important and much more difficult than this question is the second principle of the Bill, the principle of compulsory recognition. In this Bill two methods of recognition are envisaged. First there is voluntary recognition by the employer. When that fails, there is recognition by the State, made binding on the employer. This is our main quarrel with this part of the Bill. I have made it clear that we regard as vital the growth of healthy unions and when I speak of healthy unions, I mean unions led for the benefit of labour, not led by self-seeking agitators or by hysterical emotionalists. However important the growth of such unions may be, it is equally important to prevent the growth of certain kinds of unions, unions formed primarily for the purpose of fomenting discord (interruption). I will come to my friend Mr Joshi's point later on—I promise him I won't leave anything out, we will have nothing to do with unions the primary aim of which is not the benefit of workers but the fomenting of discord, unions which have some unjustifiable political motive—it may be to force the acceptance of a new form of economic structure, or a new ideology, by making it difficult, if not impossible, for the employer to carry on his business with profit. Let me repeat this point, that while we recognise the value to the community of the growth of unions which are really aimed at the welfare of the workers, we will never recognise the value of unions which are aimed at forcing a particular ideology on a country or a community which does not want it. We therefore apply this criterion to any legislation dealing with this matter of unions—will it encourage the growth of sound, healthy, legitimate, unions or will it retard the growth of such unions? Will it stimulate the right kind of unions or will it establish the wrong kind of unions? We have considered this measure very carefully from that point of view and it is our considered view—and I believe it is shared by most of those who from the employers' angle have experience of large scale labour—it is our considered view that this Bill will do harm and not good. This kind of hot-house-plant forcing, this compulsory recognition irrespective of the fitness or otherwise of a particular union will in the long run benefit neither the trade union movement nor the State nor the employer. Let us suppose that a group of men embark on some enterprise—say, a new business. There are two ways of dealing with them. You go to them and say—‘you deliver the goods, and turn out what is wanted, we shall then become your customers.’ On the other hand you can say,—‘as soon as you start the shop, we shall, of course, become your customers, we shall give up our right to examine or criticise the quality of your goods. Good or bad we will buy. Which of these two ways does one adopt in the ordinary transactions of life? Does that not present a very good analogy to the position which is before us, with regard to this proposal for compulsory recognition of trade unions. There are two ways of dealing with a new union. You can go to it and say ‘It is not for us to say whether your union is good or bad—we shall of course recognise it.’ Or you can say—‘We shall watch your achievements, and if we find that yours is a genuine union, aimed at the benefit of the workers, we shall certainly recognise it.’ Which is the better way? Let me make clear what I mean. If a union makes it its business to demand higher wages, better medical facilities, shorter hours of work and if you like and all those things which are really in the interest of labour, then that union is doing what it ought to do. As far as we are concerned, a union which does that fairly and legitimately will receive our recognition. We are not however willing to give up the right to watch the working of a union and decide whether it is bona fide, whether it is really aiming at the welfare of labour or whether there is some ulterior and unjustifiable political motive, some motive which is not really germane to the objects of the trade union movement. It is very important here not to confuse two entirely separate questions. Do not let us confuse the question of the desirability of unions with the question of compulsory recognition. There are many things in this world which are desirable, but it does not always follow that the State should rush in and make them compulsory. I understand the spirit, I respect the motive behind this particular part of the Bill. It rises out of a natural and justifiable impatience on the part of my labour friends, who think they can find a short cut to the growth of the union movement by introducing this principle of compulsion. But I believe they will find that the history of the labour movement throughout the world, as indeed the history of the world in most of its aspects, shows that in these matters there are no short cuts. Unions have to earn their recognition by showing that they are sober, reasonable bodies, bodies intending to do the job for which they were set up and not to do some other job. Take my own country. There is no country in the world where unions have acquired a more honourable position, where they have exercised more reasonable power where the relation between the unions and the employers are better than in Great Britain. How has that position been built up? It has not been built up under the shadow of compulsion. It has been built up because in their early days, unions had to learn by their own mistakes, unions had to prove not only to their employers, but to the public and to the State, that they were reasonable bodies. They went through that ordeal, they emerged successful, they showed the world at large that trade unions in my country were such sober and reasonable bodies that they ought to be given an honoured place in the State. Sometimes in the early days, employers were unreasonable and refused to recognise even reasonable unions. But once these unions convinced the public at large that they were in fact sober and responsible bodies, the employers’ opposition was quickly swept away and you soon reached a stage where trade unions were regarded as integral part of the economic structure. What were the points on which the unions there had to satisfy the public and in the last resort the Government. Firstly that they were sober and responsible bodies, secondly that they were representative. I am not using that word in the technical sense for the moment. They had to satisfy the public that they were really representative of workers, thirdly that they were efficient, that they could collect their subscriptions regularly for, after all it is no use having trade unions

where the members do not subscribe regularly, and where in case of a strike the unions cannot contribute to the upkeep of the members. A trade union which is not able to collect its members' subscriptions is of no use either to the employer, to the employee or to the State. If unions can satisfy the public that they are responsible, that they are reasonably representative and that they are reasonably efficient, then no employer can resist them. It does not matter a scrap whether an employer says he recognises them or not—he will have to deal with them. If on the other hand unions fail to satisfy those conditions—if they are not reasonable and representative and if they cannot collect their subscriptions, then they are either useless or dangerous and should be discouraged. And so my plea today is this—I believe with all my heart that the healthy growth of trade unionism will be one of the most important needs in this country in the years to come. Give that healthy growth a chance, and you do not give it a chance if you adopt hothouse methods from the very start. Still less do you give it a chance if you apply to it certain mechanical criteria. If a union by satisfying criteria, some of which have no relation to its attitude no relation to its sobriety or its responsibility—if merely by satisfying criteria of the kind specified in the relevant clause of this Bill a union can enforce recognition on the employer, you will take away any incentive to that union to grow into a reasonable and thoughtful body. You cannot build a new institution on a Government fiat, you can only build it by convincing reasonable men, in different parts of the community, that it is a necessary and a desirable institution. That indeed was the view which was taken by what was perhaps the ablest body which ever considered labour conditions in this country,—the Royal Commission on Labour. In their report they made it clear that recognition was not a matter for compulsion, because in the last resort the fruits of recognition would not be gathered unless recognition was based on willingness on the part of the employer and unless it was recognition in spirit as well as in the letter. My Honourable friend the Labour Member will I think agree that these are very cogent arguments. But I will apply myself to the question whether there are any arguments on the other side. Is there anything which, in spite of these cogent arguments still justifies us in going ahead with the principle of compulsion? When I received this Bill, as in old campaigner I naturally began by reading the Statement of Objects and Reasons. Then I went back to the previous Bill on the same subject and I read the Statement of Objects and Reasons there. All I could find there in justification of compulsion was this

"The position has not, however, improved in regard to voluntary recognition by employers."

Then being of a suspicious nature I turned again to the previous debate in this House and I saw that Dr Ambedkar at that time had produced no better reason to justify this extraordinary measure of compulsion. All I could find by way of reason adduced by him was this

"The House will remember that the Royal Commission at that stage stated that they would very much desire that the recognition was achieved voluntarily by the consent of the employers without any legal obligation upon them. The House will also remember that the Royal Commission reported in 1929. Practically 12 years have elapsed and there has been no willingness on the part of employers to recognise trade unions voluntarily. Indeed, the objections which employers made before the Royal Commission for opposing recognition of trade unions are still the objections which the employers are pressing for non recognition" (Vol IV, 1943 p 253)

When I read that I naturally turned back again to the report of the Royal Commission on Labour in order to find out the grounds on which employers, at that time were opposing the recognition of trade unions. I found on page 323 that the most important ones were five in number,—as given in 1929. The first reason was "That the union embraces only a minority of the class concerned"

Let me tell my Honourable friends, particularly my labour friends, that that objection has now been given up by every responsible body of employers in this country. If they will take the trouble to read the conditions which have been framed by various industrial associations on which they are prepared to recognise unions, they will find that the condition that the union must embrace a majority of workers has everywhere been given up. That presumably is one of the conditions which Dr Ambedkar had in mind in 1941, when he stated that the employers were still pressing the old objections as a reason for not recognising unions.

Mr. President: If it is convenient to the Honourable Member he may stop here and resume after Lunch.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr President (the Honourable Mr G V Mavalankar) in the Chair.

- (1) Syed Ghulam Bhik Nairang
- (2) Mr Sri Prakasa
- (3) Mr C P Lawson
- (4) Sardar Mangal Singh

According to the provision of the same Standing Order the Deputy President will be the Chairman of the Committee.

INDIAN TRADE UNIONS (AMENDMENT) BILL—contd

Mr. P. J. Griffiths: Mr President, before lunch after beginning by trying to establish that no modern intelligent employer is averse to the growth of healthy trade unions, I marshalled some of the arguments against the introduction of the principle of compulsion. From that I passed on to consider whether there were any compelling reasons which in spite of all the disadvantages of compulsion might still justify the inclusion of a clause of this nature. I went back to the time where the Labour Member's predecessor had said that the arguments used by employers against recognition of unions in 1929 were still being used against them now. To find out what those arguments were I had turned back to the report of the Royal Commission on Labour and in that Report I found it stated that five different lines of argument were used by employers against the recognition of unions. Of those five lines of argument I had dealt with two. I explained then that the first objection to the union, that it did not contain a majority of the workers, had since been given up by all employers. I then dealt with the second objection raised in 1929, which related to the presence of outsiders in the executive of the union, and I pointed out that that objection too had now been given up by practically all important industrial associations. Three objections remain. The third was, as stated by the Royal Commission on Labour, the failure of the union to register under the Trade Unions Act. I do not believe that any single member of this House, certainly no labour member, maintains that an employer today ought to recognize a union which has not even observed the elementary formality of registering itself under the Trade Unions Act. There remain two other grounds of objection which according to the Royal Commission were then being urged by employer. One of those was refusal of the union to dispense with the services of a particular official. That has taken place undoubtedly in a certain number of cases. But if my Honourable friends will look at any of the recent statement, by industrial associations and large employers as to the conditions on which they are prepared to recognize the unions, they will find no tolerance whatsoever to any right on the part of an employer to demand that a union shall dispense with the services of a particular official. So that out of the five grounds of objection taken at the time of the Royal Commission on Labour, four are no longer sustained by the employers.

The fifth reason is a very delicate matter. (Interruption) My friend says, why have you changed? The answer is because employers are sufficiently intelligent to adjust themselves to the march of events, they do not stand on ancient slogans and shibboleths, but they are ready to adapt themselves to the needs of the hour. The fifth ground then given is a very difficult and delicate matter indeed. It was the prior existence of another union. This is an extremely difficult question. It is a question about which there is room for two reasonable points of view. I may hold, as I do hold, that the existence of more than one recognized union in the same concern can be disastrous to the employer and the employees alike. Be that as it may, it is a question which is not dealt with in the present Bill. The point I want to make now is that when Dr Ambedkar stated that the objections which were being urged by employers in 1929 for the recognition of unions were still being urged, he was stating something which was completely incorrect. Of those five objections four have been openly and publicly given up, and the fifth is a matter in which there is a room for reasonable difference of opinion. So that the argument set forth in the Statement of Objects and Reasons that this compulsion had to be introduced because things had not improved, has no foundation in fact. My Honourable friend, Miss Maniben Kara, who unfortunately has to be elsewhere this afternoon for another Labour Conference, said in effect that unions had not developed in the last twelve years—or fifteen years it may have been—and that of course this was the fault of the employers. They had not developed because the employers would not let them develop. Had it occurred to my Honourable friend that there are two parties to the development of a union and to the recognition of a union. On the one hand there is the employer and on the other there is labour. And I should be prepared to assert that at any rate in many industries, the reason why unions have not developed is that my Honourable friends in this House, who are distinguished labour leaders, in spite of all their efforts have not yet succeeded in those industries in persuading the labour to recognise that unions are what they need. It is an utterly unfair and unsound assumption that because unions have not developed, employers must necessarily have been putting obstacles in their way. I can give an example of one large industry, an industry which employs more labour than any other industry in this country and as far as that industry is concerned I say categorically that the allegation is not true. We have not put and we are not putting obstacles in the way of the formation of trade unions. The formation of unions in industry generally will take place as and when labour begins to feel that it needs unions and as and when it begins to get confidence in those who come forward to lead them. One of the biggest reasons for this backwardness is the lack of a sufficient number of leaders of the right calibre. I have said in this House before and I will say it again that if we had a thousand Joshis the labour movement would go fast. Every one respects Mr Joshi for what he has done and is still trying to do in the cause of labour, but one Mr Joshi and one Mr Gadgil and two or three others cannot lead labour movements designed to cover millions of people. The lack of labour leaders of the right kind is the main reason for the little progress that has been made since the time of Royal Commission sat in the organisation and recognition of labour unions. It is a calumny, it is not to say that employers in these recent years are in general refusing to recognize unions and are putting obstacles in the way of their development. Several of the large industrial associations with which I have dealings have sometime since drawn up simple conditions of recognition for unions. They have made it perfectly clear that they will recognize any union tomorrow which grows up in compliance with those conditions. I am prepared to show those conditions to the Labour Member, or my Honourable friend, Mr Joshi, or to any labour member of this House, and I can tell you, Sir, that when he reads them he will be surprised to find a complete absence from them of any pettifogging restrictions. He will be convinced that they represent a genuine desire on the part of employers to meet the needs and wishes of labour as soon as those needs and wishes begin to make themselves felt. So that the argument that you must have this compulsion because employers have played unfairly is without foundation. And here I want to make a plea to my Honourable friend, the Labour Member, and to this House. Of recent years, particularly within the last two or three years, a new spirit has been born, not only in this country but throughout the world with regard to all these labour matters. Employers today approach these problems from a different angle and with a different emotional background. A new atmosphere has been created. Give this new atmosphere a chance to make itself felt. Give us a chance to see what can be done in the way of developing good relations between employers and the employees, without vitiating that atmosphere by the distasteful principle of compulsion. What my Honourable friend says in effect is "you must have compulsion because in the bad old days before the war when men's minds were different in many respects, before new light on these subjects had dawned—because in those days employers were hidebound—just as in those days labour leaders were hidebound—because of the conditions which prevailed then, now we must have the element of compulsion." Give the new spirit a chance to work. Accept the view of the Royal Commission on Labour. In the last resort, the power and the strength and the development of unions will depend not on formalities and legal principles, but on the spirit in forming their action on the one hand and of the employers on the other. I will tell my Honourable friend, the Labour Member, that if he will adopt that policy he will find the employers of 1946 ready to meet him and labour very much more than half way. I do therefore beg that this element of compulsion shall be removed from this Bill.

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated Non-Official) What will remain of it?

Mr. P. J. Griffiths: The first thing remaining will be the statement of the rights of a recognised union. Secondly, moral recognition will have been given by Government and by this House and by employers to the fact that trade unions are a desirable and essential part of the economic structure. My Honourable friend, Mr Joshi, tends to live in legal formulas or textbooks. Let us get into the spirit of compromise. I can promise my Honourable friend, that as far as those whom we in this group represent are concerned, he will not find us stiff, but ready to develop this Trade Union movement. If Government will not accept my plea, I have another suggestion, a kind of halfway house, and the idea of this halfway house really arises from a very useful interjection by Mr Joshi. When I was speaking this morning and was trying to develop the theme that it was important to encourage a sound, balanced and healthy union and to discourage the unsound, unhealthy union having some ulterior motive other than the mere benefit of labour. Mr Joshi nodded that wise head of his and said, "Who is to be the judge?" There, of course, is the crux of the problem. Who is to be the judge as to the behaviour and attitude of any particular union. My contention is that in the first place the employer must be the judge. But if Government will not accept my plea for the abolition of compulsion altogether, my next contention is, let there be a court of appeal. Let the employer be the judge in the first place and have the right to refuse to recognise a union. Then let the union come and allege that recognition has been refused unreasonably. Let all the relevant facts and circumstances be taken into consideration, as to whether the refusal by the employer has been unreasonable or not. This present Bill, as now drafted, does not provide for that. It lays down certain mechanical criteria to which and by which the industrial court is confined. As the Bill is now framed, if an employer refuses recognition, three months later the union can go to the industrial court and there it has to establish certain criteria. Those criteria are all in a sense mechanical in their nature. The most important of them are, firstly, that all the ordinary members are workmen employed in the same trade or industry; secondly, that it has for twelve months been a registered union; I pass over the third as I do not want to be involved in this extremely contentious matter of a communal nature; fourthly, that the rules provide the procedure for declaring strikes; fifthly, that the meeting of the executive shall be held once in every six months; sixthly, that it is a representative trade union. I will come back in a minute to the question of a representative trade union.

The point I wish to make is that all that the industrial court is entitled to do is to consider whether the union has complied with these conditions or not. There is not a word here that authorises the industrial court to consider how the union is behaving or what are the evidences to its intentions—whether it is a responsible body, whether it exists for making trouble or whether its primary purpose is political. The moment the union can satisfy the industrial court that it conforms to these purely mechanical criteria, the industrial court can do nothing but recommend recognition to Government.

In the next section you have some words which may mean anything or nothing. They say "On the receipt of a report, a Provincial Government, if satisfied that a trade union is fit to be recognised, may by notification, etc

I have two points about that. Is it really right when we in this House are trying to lay down the conditions under which a union shall be recognised, that we should wave an airy hand and say we cannot lay down the details, but that if Government thinks a union is fit to be recognised, that is good enough for us? Is that legislation or is it shirking our duties? I say with all respect that it is entirely wrong in principle for the Labour Member or his predecessor to come to this House, and ask us to give our sanction to a blanket clause of a kind which says that a Provincial Government can recognise whatever it likes to recognise. Let us say so, if we mean that. If that is our wish let us say with regard to trade unions that the Provincial Government can please itself as to what it does with regard to union. But I do not believe the House will accept that view. We are here to give guidance by legislation to Provincial Governments as to the principles they should apply in deciding whether a union is fit for recognition or not. I do urge that this kind of vague blanket legislation is not satisfactory.

I come back to my point that as things stand, a union may be irresponsible, dangerous, and devoted to some improper object, but it still may satisfy the criteria laid down by the Bill for the industrial court. The only protection then that we are given—and by 'we' I mean the employer and the State—is that the Provincial Government can make up its mind whether the union is or is not fit to be recognised. This does not go far enough.

I want to go further. I do ask my Honourable friend, the Labour Member to consider the desirability of laying it down that in the normal way, the employer is to have the right to recognise or refuse to recognise a union. From that refusal if necessary the right of appeal may lie with the proper authority and the grounds for the right of appeal should be that the employer has acted unreasonably. I shall have much more to say about that when we come to the Select Committee. But I do ask my honourable friend to accept the principle that more definition is necessary, that the onus of recognition rightly belongs to the employer and that it is only in those exceptional circumstances, where an employer unreasonably refuses to recognise a union that Government or an industrial court ought to intervene. That intervention ought to be governed by principles clearly laid down in this Act.

I pass on from that, because I have already taken too long a time over it. There are still a few points with which I must deal.

The first is with regard to the complete lack of any definition in this Bill as to what is meant by a representative union. That phrase, representative union, seems to be the keypoint of the whole Bill, for in fact what the Bill says amounts to this. That if a union is a representative union, then provided it satisfied certain criteria, it shall be recognised by the State and that recognition shall be binding on the employer. That means nothing to me, unless you tell me what your starting point is. It is no use saying that a representative union is to be a recognised union, if you do not tell me what a representative union is. It is wrong in principle to take a matter of this kind and leave it entirely to the rules. Rules exist to carry out the purposes of the Act and not to define those purposes. The essential purpose of this Act is to give recognition to a representative union, and yet forsooth, we cannot be told what principles are involved in deciding what representative unions are. As I have said on previous occasions, this means a shirking of our responsibility. We are here to lay down guiding principles. We are here to define those points on which the working of the Statute will depend. I do urge my friend to accept the principle that when the Select Committee stage is reached, an attempt will be made and must be made, to make clear what we mean by a representative union.

My friend says, and I understand his point, that in these matters elasticity must be left. Some discretion must be left to the Provincial Government. I agree for circumstances do vary from province to province and from industry to industry. But he must lay down some overriding principle. Let him lay down that there must be a minimum percentage for membership, and having done that if he likes to leave Provincial Governments to vary the percentage, I have no objection. But if this phrase "representative union" is to mean anything at all, you must have some kind of minimum membership clause in it, I know the arguments against such a clause. It is very often said that a small trade union may be better than a large trade union, but that is one of those nice copy book sayings that you cannot translate into practice. How does it work in real life? If you had a union to which only 5 per cent. of your labour force belonged, what would it mean, if you said that it was a representative union? It is merely misusing words. You have in practice to deal with the other 95 per cent. outside the ambit of the union. On the other hand, if a trade union contains 90 per cent. of the labour force, it does not matter whether you recognise it or not. It will in fact be representative and you will have to deal with it. There must therefore be some connection between representative capacity and numerical strength. I am not here concerned to argue that a particular percentage should be fixed, nor am I concerned necessarily to insist that that percentage must be the same in all industries and in all parts of the country. But the principle must be laid down in this Bill that no union can be deemed to be representative unless it contains a minimum percentage, to be defined according to the circumstances of the industry and the Province, if you like, of the membership of each individual concern. I want to stress this point—each individual concern. You may have a union covering 70 or 80 different concerns, but which may not have a single member in the particular concern in which I happen to be interested or which I happen to own. If you were to call that union 'representative' in my concern, would it mean anything in practice? I will develop this point in more detail at the select committee stage. I do trust the Honourable the Labour Member will give the most serious consideration to this aspect of the matter. I have urged upon him three points. I have urged that the principle of compulsion is bad. I have gone on to urge that recognition is the normal function of the employer and that intervention by the State or by an Industrial Court is only justified where it can be shown conclusively by the union that the refusal to recognise has been unreasonable. I have gone on from that to argue that before he gets even to that stage, he must give some more point to his definition of a "representative union."

[Mr P. J. Griffiths]

I have only two more points to make now and the first relates to the question of withdrawal of recognition. In this Bill, just as we define the procedure for granting of recognition, so it is sought to lay down the procedure for withdrawal of recognition. This section requires the most careful examination, for it contains features which may well become a prolific source of strife and dispute. For example, as the Bill now stands, any Union can apply for the withdrawal of recognition from another union. What a pretty kettle of fish. What a state of affairs it when two or three rival unions have started in a particular concern, each starts coming along and claiming that Government must cancel the recognition already granted to another union. There is bound to be difficulty there and I realise that the Labour Member has an awkward problem to solve. We will try to discuss in Select Committee as to what the solution ought to be. But I do want to stress the fact that the section, as it stands at present, will not solve the problem. It is defective in other respects too. For example, it is illegal in the extreme, that an employer in the first place has the right to grant or not to grant recognition but has no right whatsoever to withdraw recognition, even if the union behaves in exactly the kind of way which would have justified him morally in not granting recognition when it was first formed. Clearly there ought to be some provision as to the right of withdrawal of recognition by an employer, subject, if you will to an appeal on the ground that the withdrawal has been unreasonable, to some competent authority.

My last topic is a very brief one and it relates to that section which deals with unfair practices. Here I have no general objection to the section as it stands, but it seems to me to require very much more detailed examination with regard to certain important points. For example, we are told that if the majority of the members of a union take part in an illegal strike or if the executive of the union encourage any irregular strike, that shall be a ground for the withdrawal of recognition. This sounds grand on paper but in practice it does not take a majority of the workers of a union to dislocate an important industry. It may easily happen that an important section of the workers in a particular industry, for less than a majority, can bring about dislocation and produce exactly the same disastrous results as would ensue if a strike had been called regularly by the union in the ordinary way. A small percentage of the members of a union acting against the views of the union can go on strike and cause dislocation, even when a majority of the members of the union are opposed to the strike. Does it not seem that there ought to be some provision for a union to prove its bona fides, that it was not behind the strike, that by expelling these of its workers who indulge in irregular strike without its sanction. I am not now saying anything dogmatic or putting forward a final opinion. I am mentioning the problem as a matter for consideration. What can be done to deal with this particular difficulty is a matter which we shall have to discuss in the Select Committee.

There is one more point under this same head which seems to require clarification too. There is a section or clause, clause 28 (K) which speaks about the rights of a trade union. That may be a very good section or it may be a very bad section. I find it hard to judge, because I have no idea as to what the Honourable the Labour Member has in mind, when he talks about the rights of a trade union. Have they, for example, the right to hold their meetings in working hours? Is the employer expected to allow them to hold their meetings in the time for which he pays his workers? Have they the right to hold their meetings within business premises? All this is not clear. I dislike and apprehend greatly the use of these vague blanket phrases such as the rights of a trade union. I believe that more harm has been done in this world by the loose use of vague general phrases about rights like this about the rights of a trade union than by most other political causes. Do not let us talk in such abstract terms about the rights of a trade union. Let us say what those rights are. This is one of the many points in this Bill which requires clarification.

Sir, that is all that I have to say at this stage, except for one final appeal to the Honourable the Labour Member. I have been forced to adopt today an attitude towards his Bill which must be distasteful to him, although I propose to support the reference to select committee, I have made it clear that the draughtsmanship is defective that in the Bill there are many lacunae and that altogether, I think, it is a badly thought out Bill. That point of view must be distasteful to the Honourable Member but I have expressed myself frankly to him now because I want to ask him to take the chance, the chance which has been provided to him by his coming into office in the present Government of giving his Department a new start. For years past the Labour Department has gone on bludgeoning its way through—producing hastily drafted legislation—either not consulting the interests concerned or consulting them after the draft has been completed—calling tripartite conferences, not presenting those conferences with the agenda beforehand and putting him before them for the first time actually in the middle of a conference. Those have been the kind of bludgeoning tactics adopted by the Labour Department for some years past. Every section of this House subscribes to my view on this matter and every section of this House hopes that, with the advent to power of a new Government there will be—I dare not say change of heart, in view of what I have said about changes of heart this morning—a change of understanding. The Labour Member will realise that we do not meet in the old diehard days of 20 or 30 years ago. He has to deal on this side of the House with a body representing employers who will co-operate with him who will back up his efforts to promote the welfare of labour and in return we expect from his department that consideration, courtesy and consultation which have been conspicuously lacking in recent years.

Pandit Balkrishna Sharma (Cities of the United Provinces, Non-Muhammadan Urban). Sir, I rise to support the motion that the Bill be referred to the select committee. When I was hearing the very able exposition of my Honourable friend Mr Griffiths on the Bill before us I was reminded of a conversation that I had with the President of the Employers Association of Northern India, Sir Tracy Gavin Jones, in the year 1938. At that time there was a very serious labour trouble in my own city, the city of Cawnpore, and I had to do something with that strike which ultimately took place. I almost went on my knees before him and I requested Sir Tracy Gavin Jones to be good enough to grant recognition to that union, which was smarting under the disability of not having been recognised, and Sir Tracy put the question to me—“You raise this question of recognition, but I want to know what the aims of your labour union are.” I said that the aims have been laid down in the constitution. He said “No, you are not purely a trade union, there is something of an ulterior motive behind your trade union, which is your politics, and hence I am not going to advise the Employers Association to grant recognition to you.” I appealed to him to broaden his policy. I requested him to give the labour leaders and the representatives of labour a chance to sit with the employers and to thrash out matters which were agitating labour at that time. But Sir Tracy would not budge an inch, and today while I was hearing Mr Griffiths I was reminded of that conversation, and I found that there was precious little change so far as the understanding of the situation was concerned. As Mr Griffiths said, it is not proper here perhaps, where intellectuals are sitting, to talk about change of heart, but only of a change of understanding. Till 1938 or 1939, that change of understanding did not come over the members of the Employers Association of Northern India.

A great deal of time has been wasted by talking about what actually trade union activities are and what should be the motive which should guide the various trade unions in the country. Mr Griffiths would not object to a trade union demanding higher wages, better conditions of service, old age pensions and all that, but perhaps Mr Griffiths would not touch a trade union with a pair of tongs if that trade union were to place before it the ideal of bringing about a complete social change in the body politics of society, which means that wherever there is the least possible doubt regarding the motive with which the trade union functions, and which according to Mr Griffiths is not within the ambit of trade unionism, he would not tolerate it. To me it appears that at this hour of the day it is not possible for us to circumscribe the activities of a trade union. A trade union should be perfectly at liberty to have as its objective the reconstruction of society on such economic principles as do not today find acceptance with friends of the way of thinking of Mr Griffiths. If you do not permit trade unions to function with those aims and objectives before them, you will be really putting a great deal of hindrance in the way of the development of trade unionism in the country. After all, life cannot be divided in watertight compartments. For the life of me I cannot understand why a trade union which has got that ideal before it should not be considered as a properly constituted trade union, and why merely because it happens to bring about or to strive to bring about, a change in the economic and social conditions it should not find recognition or it should not be considered as working on trade union lines. I quite understand the trouble which the employers feel from trade unions which have not been formed on proper lines. I myself, in my capacity as a humble servant of labour, have felt that sometimes, or even oftener, the labour leaders and workers go out of their way to create trouble, but then, we are passing through a period of transition, and we cannot, situated as we are, all of a sudden, try to bring all our movements under effective control. Such lapses should not in any way be put down to the idea that because that particular labour union happens to have a wider objective before it, therefore all these troubles are arising.

My Honourable friend Mr Ghantis has gone into the reasons which are responsible for not bringing trade unions into proper shape in this country. Ours has been a position peculiar to ourselves. Nowhere in the world had the labour movement to work under those conditions under which our trade union movement had to function. The primary consideration before the country for the last twenty five years has been political freedom and the best intellects of the country have devoted their time and energy to that cause. Naturally, it was not possible for us, in this very peculiar political condition in which we found ourselves, to devote our energies to the development of sound trade unions in the country. That is one of the main reasons why trade unionism has not functioned in the country in the way it should have.

I quite agree with Mr Griffiths that we could not find trade union leaders of calibre. That difficulty again has been before us but the one factor, which Mr Griffiths so hotly repudiated, has also worked to our disadvantage and that has been that during the last 25 years we have never received any encouragement whatsoever from the employers to organise our labour on sound trade union lines. Mr Griffith's protestations cannot take away this fact from consideration.

Then, again, Sir, we have heard criticisms of various clauses in the Bill. Some criticisms are of the nature which require consideration in the Select Committee but there are some criticisms which have been levelled against this Bill which more or less are of a fundamental nature. My friend Mr Sattar Seth has asked why we should put hindrance in the way of organising labour on communal lines. As a man who has been associated with labour for the last 25 years of his life in a way, I can say that if we promote or encourage anything of that sort I can assure Seth Abdus Sattar that the whole labour movement in the country will go to dogs. Maulana Hasrat Mohani, a revered friend, was approached by certain friends in my city and he was asked to organise a Muslim trade union in the city. I had an occasion to talk with Maulana Hasrat Mohani about this question and he said 'Well, Panditji, it will be disastrous if we promote this sort of organisation so far as the labour of the country is concerned.' I can quite understand some of the labour unions functioning on communal lines but I certainly cannot understand why the Government should encourage this, knowing as we do that that will certainly cut across the labour interests in the country, be they Hindu or Muslim. If anything, the leaders of public opinion in this House should take into consideration one fact, that so far as the employers are concerned, they know no distinction either of nationality or of race or of religion or of community. Nearly all the employers in Northern India who are employers worth the name are members of the Employers Association of Northern India. Hindus, Muslims, Europeans, Christians, whoever they are, they are there. Then, if the employers are feeling that country of interest so far as their economic interests are concerned, how is it that we here should raise our voice against the very sound principle that labour should not have any organisation whatsoever on communal lines. After all labour organisations are not faced with political questions day in and day out. There are certain occasions, as my friend Mr. Seth pointed out, when some burning political topic comes up before a certain trade union organisation and the majority of the members perhaps express their opinion contrary to the views of the minority. Well, if certain occasions like this arise, the minority in that organisation must be left free to express its opinion in the way it likes, but because such occasions arise we should not encourage communal unions to be formed. If that happens, then we shall be weakening the trade union movement and the labour movement of the country to a very great extent. I would appeal to my friend not to insist upon getting this Bill circulated and to withdraw his motion.

Naturally there are certain clauses in the Bill which require redrafting and reconsideration. Some of them have been mentioned by Mr. Griffiths. He has put forward certain suggestions also and I hope in the Select Committee he will be of immense help to all those who are there to make the Bill acceptable to all sections of the House.

So far as the question of compulsion is concerned, I think we cannot be too legalistic about it. And we cannot stand on principle to such an extent that we may endanger the development of the whole labour movement in the country. Even the veteran labour leaders do not like the trade unions to be recognised merely by the fiat of executive authority, merely because the State has granted recognition to a particular union. That is all right, but then the whole trade union movement is in its infancy and when we want to build it up on proper lines it is necessary that the State should accord some help towards the building up of that movement and I think this Bill is nothing more than a help towards making the trade unions function on proper lines. Compulsion is not a very good thing and the employers will naturally resent that sort of compulsion but then after this great armageddon we have seen how employers have readily fallen in with the amount of compulsion which nobody could dream of before the last war. Even in England we have seen employers carrying out the wishes of the State without making too much upon the principle of laissez faire and, therefore, today to raise our voice against a slight compulsion that might be in one legislation or the other, is like going against the current. Compulsion is there. Compulsion will have to be there if we want our society to be reconstructed on proper lines. I therefore think that we should not in any way come in the way of the present government in bringing on the anvil various labour legislations which the Honourable the Labour Member has before him. As I was hearing another friend of mine in this House on this Bill, I was thinking whether we shall allow this canker of communalism to eat into every walk of our public life. So far, we have succeeded in keeping the Trade Union movement of the country free from any bias of religion or communalism, but if we allow the slightest possible encouragement from the side of the State in that direction, then I think we shall be harming the labour interests which look up to you in this House for protection. With these words I support the motion for the Bill being referred to the Select Committee.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Mr. President, the Bill which we have been discussing for some time since yesterday evening is a small measure intended to remove one

[Mr. N. M. Joshi] of the difficulties experienced by the trade union movement in this country. The employers in this country have pleaded many excuses for not recognising trade unions of their employees. I do not wish to traverse over the ground which has been covered by my Honourable friend Mr Griffiths, who quoted the arguments pleaded by the employers against the recognition of their employees as given by the Royal Commission on Indian Labour. They have pleaded many excuses, but Mr Griffiths quoted five of them as given by the Labour Commission. Mr Griffiths said that most of these arguments which the employers used against the recognition of trade unions have been now given up by the employers. He said that the employers may not have changed their hearts but they have changed their understanding. He made us understand that the employers of this country have given up their former attitude towards the trade unions. But, Sir, from the speech to which we all listened this morning and part of this afternoon, I feel that not only the employers of this country have not shown any change of heart but I am afraid they have shown no change even of understanding. I do not find from his speech that he understands the trade union movement in this country any better than his predecessors of 25 or even 50 years ago.

Sgt N. V. Gadgil They are Bourbons!

Mr. N. M. Joshi. He told us that the employers now do not object to the outsiders working in the trade union movement. Even there he was not quite accurate. If he had said some of the employers now do not object, he would have been right. But I know even today some of the employers who object to the outsiders taking part in the trade unions of their employees. I am however prepared to admit that some of the employers have given up some of their old prejudices. Unfortunately, when people do not really at heart realise that the trade unions are an essential part of the industrial organisation and if they cannot plead the old arguments they are clumsy enough to find out new arguments. My friend Mr Griffiths told us that the employers would be very willing to recognise trade unions if all the trade unionists were very good men and if their objects had been such as the employers approved. If they did not take part in politics and if they did not create any discord, then there would be no difficulty in the employers recognising the trade unions.

Mr. Manu Subedar (Indian Merchants Chamber and Bureau Indian Commerce) And they have to bring a Joshi.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: When I have become old and incapable of starting new unions and making fights on their behalf, he is quite willing to show consideration to me personally.

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir (Nominated Non-Official) He appreciated your services all along.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: He said that the trade unions must not create any discord between the employers and the employees. It is not the business of a trade union to create discord. A trade union is intended to protect the rights of its members, the employees. If the rights of the members could be protected by negotiation a trade union worthy of its name would prefer that method of settlement. But it is not always possible to protect the rights of the members of the trade unions without some kind of fight. He said that the trade unions, in India took part in semi political activities. He wants the trade unions to be content with asking for the reduction of hours, asking for the increase of wages and such things. But he suggests to us that it is not the business of a trade union to enter into politics. And then Sir he told us that he was an admirer of the British trade union movement and he told us perhaps to follow the great example of the British trade union movement. Let me assure him that I am one of the admirers of the British trade union movement, but I have yet to learn that the British trade unions do not enter into politics or do not fight with the employers in that country.

Mr. P. J. Griffiths: They do

Mr. N. M. Joshi: They do. Therefore, a trade union movement will on some occasions create some discord between the employers and the employees. It is therefore not right for him to expect trade unions not to create any discord.

Mr. P. J. Griffiths: On a point of personal explanation, Sir, I did not object to the fact that the Union would in practice have to fight against the employers. I referred to the motive underlying the formation of a union and I objected to an Union which was created for the purpose of fomenting discord rather than for the purpose of looking after the real welfare of the labour.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: I said very clearly the object of a trade union is to protect the interests of its members.

Mr. P. J. Griffiths: It should be.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: That is the object.

Mr. P. J. Griffiths: Not always.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: And if to fulfil that object it has to fight the employers, well, the union will have to fight. Has the British Trade Union Congress given up politics? He may know something about the British Trade Union Congress, though he may not have attended any of their meetings.

Mr. P. J. Griffiths: I have attended their meetings.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: So have I. The British Trade Union Congress has not eschewed politics. On the contrary, they give great importance to political questions. The British Trade Union Congress has not given up asking for the abolition of the capitalist system. The British Trade Union Congress is trying its very best to see that a socialist democracy is established in Great Britain as early as possible. I, therefore, feel that when Mr Griffiths told us that the trade unions in India were not good unions because they created discord between the employers and the employees and because they took part in the political movement of this country.

Mr. P. J. Griffiths: I rise on a point of personal explanation again. I am sorry to interrupt the Honourable Member but he is unintentionally misrepresenting me. I did not object to unions taking part in politics. I objected to those unions the primary object of which was not the welfare of the labour but the forcing of a particular economic structure on society. To put it more plainly, a union whose primary aim is not labour welfare but communism is a bad union.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Well, Sir, I again repeat for the benefit of my Honourable friend Mr Griffiths that the primary object of a trade union is to protect the interests of its members.

Mr. P. J. Griffiths: Should be.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: And whatever legally and legitimately is necessary for the protection of those interests, the union is justified in doing. If the interests of the members cannot be protected without the abolition of the capitalist system, well the union will advocate the abolition of the capitalist system.

Sir Cowasjee Jahangir: Will it go on strike for that purpose?

Mr. N. M. Joshi: I will come to the question of recognition. It is in these circumstances when the employers even today do not show a proper understanding of trade union movement in this country that the Honourable Labour Minister has brought forward this small measure. Sir, my Honourable friend Mr Griffiths quoted the Royal Commission on Indian labour. I happened to be a Member of that Commission and as a Member of that Commission after having studied the whole question very anxiously and carefully at that time, we came to the conclusion that if recognition is to serve its object completely, it will be better if the recognition was voluntary and genuine. Sir, I subscribe to that view sincerely and fully. We felt that you may give the trade union some kind of recognition by law, but a real and sincere recognition is difficult to be obtained by law. You may take a horse to the water, but it is not easy to make him drink the water. You may make a law compelling an employer to write a reply to a letter sent by a trade union, but in any case it is very difficult to compel an employer to write a reasonable reply.

Mr. P. J. Griffiths: You cannot even compel Government to do that.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: You may compel an employer to grant an interview to the representative of a trade union, but you cannot by law persuade an employer to be just and fair to his employees. It is on account of these difficulties that the Royal Commission at that time came to the conclusion that it is better to see that the employers in this country learn in the course of time the wisdom of recognising unions, the wisdom of recognising that trade union is an essential part of the industrial organisation of the country. Unfortunately employers in this country did not learn much during the fifteen years that have elapsed since the Royal Commission wrote its report. It is on account of that that the Honourable Member in charge of the Labour Department has been compelled to bring forward this measure. As has been explained both by Mr Griffiths and the Honourable Member in charge, the measure creates a right, in my humble judgment a very small right, for the working classes in this country by laying down a principle that an employer shall reply to the letters written by a recognised trade union and grant interviews to the representatives of that trade union. Even the small right which this Bill proposes to give to the trade unions is again whittled down. The employer is only bound to reply to the letter written by the trade union once, but if the employer comes to a decision either favourable or unfavourable, then for six months the trade unions cannot write another letter on that subject to the employer and expect a reply. You will see even the small right which the Bill proposes to give to the trade union has been whittled down to a great extent by the provision that the employer need not reply to the letter, if the point had been covered once by a previous letter and decided by the employer. I feel that the rights given by this legislation are very small and very meagre. But that is not the complaint which I propose to make just now at this stage. The complaint which I make now against the Government is that in order to give this small right to the trade unions the Government is imposing very heavy conditions upon the trade unions in this country. After all what is the right the Government is giving to the trade unions? The Government is giving to the trade unions the moral right which every employee of an employer has got. The employee has the moral right if he has to make written representations as regards his conditions of work to the employer, to get a reply from his employer. Similarly an employee has the moral right to see his employer and talk to him on the conditions of life and work in the factory or in that industry. If the Government therefore gives this moral right and puts it into legislation the Government is not justified in imposing heavy conditions. I would have preferred the Government of India to lay down in simple language this moral right, in legal phraseology that every employer shall reply to the representations made by the employee or his representative, the trade union, similarly every employer shall grant an interview to the employee or his representative, the trade union. So, a simple laying down of a principle of this kind in legal phraseology would have been enough for the working classes in this country. But Sir the Government of India whenever they want to give something to labour they are always afraid of the employers. They feel that if a small right is conferred upon the employees they must exact the price and therefore the Government of India have laid down in this Bill very heavy conditions. I shall not go into details of these conditions. But I must state in this House that not only are these conditions heavy but they are likely to create complications which will make the administration of this law difficult and may even hamper the growth of the trade union movement in this country. One of the conditions is that the union to be recognised must confine itself to one industry. I lay the charge on the Government of being vague as regards this condition. One does not know what an industry is. You insist that a trade union must derive its membership from one industry. Is the textile industry one industry? You may say that the cotton textile industry is one industry, woollen textile is another industry, silk textile is a third industry and the handloom industry is a fourth industry. The word "industry" is not defined and, I am afraid, will not be easy to define. Similarly we would like to have one union for the transport industry. But the transport industry may consist of railways, motor transport and air transport, and unless we define the word "industry" we shall not know what sort of unions to start. So far as I am concerned I feel that this restriction or condition imposed upon trade unions is not only unnecessary but is likely to create great difficulties and may hamper the growth of trade unions. We want large trade unions in order that these trade unions should function effectively and should protect the interests of their members. If the word "industry" is narrowly interpreted the growth of the trade union movement in this country will be hampered and weakened.

I will also mention another condition laid down by the Government of India, and along with my Honourable friend Mr Griffiths I will say that the condition is very vague. It says that the union to be recognised must be 'representative'. I do not exactly understand what the meaning of that is. And again if you try to define it you will find that the administration, even looking at it from your own point of view, will not be easy, and from the labour point of view it will certainly create obstacles in the way of the growth of the trade union movement. A union extending over a province will be representative in Bombay, having a membership prescribed by the provincial Government—10 or 15 per cent whatever may be laid down—but it may not have a representative character in another place like Sholapur in the Bombay province. We want all these trade unions to amalgamate themselves and work together and if you lay down a condition by which unions which are recognised in one place and not recognised in another place you will create great difficulties. Even in the same city it will not be easy for you to define the word in such a way that the smooth working of that condition will become practicable and the laying down of this condition will not create an obstacle in the way of sound trade union movement.

Then, Sir, the Government of India propose to give power to the Provincial Governments to lay down any condition which the provincial Government wants. Sir, these are days of dictatorships, Hitler is gone and the Tsars are gone, but then spirit has not disappeared. I do not really understand what the Government of India mean by giving this power to the provincial Governments. It is true that the Government of India say that the new conditions to be imposed must not be inconsistent with the conditions laid down in that section. This clause will give power to the provincial Governments to lay down any conditions. My Honourable friend Mr Griffiths wanted perhaps some condition to be laid down as regards the unions taking part in politics. What will prevent a provincial Government saying that a union to be recognised must possess politics of a certain character and must not possess politics of some other character? It is quite possible that such a condition may be laid down and I do not see how, if such a condition is laid down, it will be inconsistent with the conditions mentioned in that clause. The power which he proposes to give to the provincial Governments is a very wide power and the trade unions in this country will not be willing to give such power to the provincial Governments. I realise that the Honourable Member may say that the powers given to the provincial Governments are to be controlled by the Central Government. Sir I have great respect for the members of the Central Government but I am not prepared to give even then my confidence to this extent that they may lay down any conditions they like for the recognition of trade unions in this country. I therefore feel, Sir, that the Government of India have unnecessarily gone into the question of laying down conditions. The rights which they are giving to trade unions are very small rights, the fundamental primary right that belongs to every employee that he has access to his employer to discuss the conditions of his life and work, and therefore the laying down of these conditions is not at all necessary

Sir, there are other smaller matters in this Bill to which I shall refer very briefly. The Government of India propose in this Bill to establish an industrial court in order to judge whether a trade union seeking affiliation has fulfilled the conditions laid down in this Bill. Here again the Government of India desire to keep power in their own hands. They are willing to appoint an industrial court and they ask the court to judge an application and make recommendations to Government. Now after the industrial court has made a recommendation what else can the Government of India judge upon? They are not willing to trust the industrial court, they simply say that the court should make a recommendation to the Government of India, and if the Government of India are satisfied, then only they will grant rights of recognition to that body. What are the Government of India going to do to be satisfied? They will depend on some other information which has not been placed before the industrial court. I therefore feel that the Government of India are needlessly increasing their own responsibilities by not trusting the industrial court. I suggest that they should trust that court and not increase their own responsibilities. I am quite sure that the Honourable Labour Minister will himself not like to take up this responsibility of sitting in judgment on the recommendation of the industrial court.

Mr. President: I believe it is not the Government of India but the appropriate Government which is given power, and it may include the Government of India.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Unfortunately the Government of India also happen to be the appropriate Government in respect of certain industries.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: Now it is certainly appropriate!

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Yes Sir, the Honourable Member is providing not only for the grant of recognition but also for the withdrawal of recognition, and there he makes a suggestion by his Bill that if a trade union goes on an irregular strike the recognition should be taken away. In my judgment this irregular strike, as is defined in this Bill, is an internal matter of a trade union. The recognition of a trade union cannot be withdrawn because an officer of the trade union breaks the constitution of that trade union.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: If no disciplinary action is taken against that officer.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: It is an internal business of the trade union.

Mr President, I have placed my general views before the Assembly on this question. The subject of this Bill is a very difficult one but I have no doubt that if all the members of the Select Committee consider this question only from the point of view of the interest of the working classes of this country, we may be able to arrive at conclusions which may be acceptable to the working classes. Therefore Sir, I support the motion for sending this Bill to the Select Committee, and I have every hope that the Bill as will emerge out of the Select Committee will be acceptable to the working classes in this country.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: I rise to support the motion for circulation and in doing so I feel I am doing it in the ultimate interest of labour. By circulation we do not propose to delay as was suggested by Prof. Ranga but what we want really is to have on the Statute Book a complete legislation in the matter of recognition of trade unions and in the matter of relation of labour with the Employers' organisations here. I do not want to dilate on the issue whether this is a complete codification required for a civilized country, or not. On that question my Honourable friend Dr Zia Uddin has made certain suggestions. He pointed out the way in which labour would be satisfied and how labour unions should be organised.

Then, Sir, I want to discuss how the Bill stands today. My Honourable friend, Mr Ishaq Seth, in moving his motion for circulation made a very able speech and said that although this Bill was circulated for public opinion the time given for eliciting public opinion was too short. It was done probably by an executive order. Besides, in doing so this draft Bill was not sent for opinion to many important organisations which are interested in the issues involved in the Bill. We find that this draft Bill was not sent to the Associations of Muslim merchants either in Bihar, Ajmer, U P, or for the matter of that in any other province. The Muslim Chamber of Commerce, Bihar, and similarly so many other Muslim Chambers of Commerce and Muslim Labour organisations do not know about this, and the Government, intentionally or otherwise, did not send a copy of the draft Bill to them for eliciting their opinion. Of course the draft Bill was sent for opinion to the Bihar Chamber of Commerce which is an organisation of merchants of nationalities other than Muslims. So we find that the Muslim organisations in the country have not been given a chance to express their opinion on this draft Bill. How and why it has happened I am not concerned with that. In the circumstances I hope the House will agree with us that this is one of the reasons why this Bill should be circulated for eliciting public opinion once again.

My Honourable friend, Mr Ishaq Seth, in moving the motion said that we do not propose to indulge in any dilatory tactics, and the circulation of this Bill will not cause any unreasonable delay. We want that opinions should be called for by the end of February and if we proceed with the Select Committee immediately after that, it will take approximately the same time for its passage as it will take now. There may be a difference of few weeks, but it will not make any material difference. That is also one of the grounds on which we have every reason to suppose that the House will agree with us in the matter of circulation. I am saying this once again as I wish to dispel from the minds of some Honourable Members the idea that we have brought this motion of circulation in order to delay the passage of this Bill.

We have full sympathy for every legislation which is meant for the betterment of labour conditions, but at the same time we have got to give serious consideration as this legislation may bring on a certain class or community in India.

Now I will make certain observations on the merits of the Bill. Clause 28D provides "A trade Union shall not be entitled to recognition under this Act, unless it fulfils the following conditions, namely —

* * * *

(c) that its rules do not provide for the exclusion of members on communal or religious grounds "

Mr Ishaq Seth has already referred to the Resolution which I moved in 1943 with regard to the recognition of Muslim Labour Unions. It was not the first time when such a resolution was moved. I have been doing so since 1939 onwards, and other members of the Muslim League Party have also been moving resolutions on this subject practically every year in the Budget Session since a long time. In reply to my speech on the resolution which was moved by me, in 1943 in this House Mr Raper said that it was done by an order of the Government of India, but there was nothing on the Statute Book with regard to non-recognition of Commercial Unions. He said

"In the State Railway Code, Volume I, it is provided that recognition will not ordinarily be granted to any association unless it complies with the following conditions —

- (1) It must consist of a distinct class of Government employees, and
- (2) All Government employees of the same class must be eligible for membership "

[Mr Muhammad Nauman]

In spite of this Government of India debarred members of any community to join themselves into a union because the Government was influenced by other sections of the people here. This legislation proposed is a deviation even from that position, for it seeks to bring on the Statute Book a legislation which debars a union from being recognised if it consists of people of a particular community. That is a very peculiar thing to do. I will now compare the conditions with other countries where probably the national and religious issues are not so diverse as in this country, and I would like to point out that even in the European countries where such feelings are not quite so strong as in India you will notice that there are trade unions recognised by Government which consists of a certain class and community. I will quote certain instances which my Honourable friend Dr Zia Uddin has included in his book on the Indian Railways. In Holland there are at present seven principal Unions and the three most important of them are Netherlands' Federation of Trade Unions having 190,179 members, Roman Catholic Workers Federation having 90,475 members and Netherlands' Federation of Christian Trade Unions having 48,327 members. These unions do definitely prohibit the admission of Jews or for the matter of that in the Roman Catholic Workers Federation of any Christians but Roman Catholics and yet they are recognised unions by the Government of the time there.

In Holland even Communists' Unions are recognised. In England the Jews have a separate Union called Jewish Bakers' Union. In Holland 4 M.P. they have a separate Union for diamond workers. In Poland they were not allowed to become members of the Socialist Union. They organised themselves in a general Union for all the professions. In this Jewish Federation only Jews can become members and it is recognised by the Government.

[At this stage Mr. President vacated the Chair which was then occupied by Mr. Deputy President (Khan Mohammad Yamin Khan)]

In Italy and Germany the Unions have all combined under the influence of Mussolini and Hitler. Even the Roman Catholic Unions in Italy have been merged into a General Union, an agreement has been reached between the Pope and Mussolini. The sentiments of Catholic religion have been accepted by Mussolini. But before that the Italian Union and the Christians were different from the Union of Jews, and the Jewish Bakers' Union was also a recognised organisation. I would ask the Honourable Member in charge of Labour to place before me the constitution of any legislation in Europe or in any other part of the world where it is written that a certain class or community cannot get recognition because the union consists of a particular community or people of a particular religion.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: But have they asked for this sort of recognition?

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: They have.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Certainly not!

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: If Prof. Ranga is trying to plead ignorance, I can only cite facts. I can plead my case but I cannot carry conviction if he is not prepared to be convinced.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: But give facts. It is no use abusing.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: I am quoting the particular names of the unions. I am quoting the countries and their membership. What else you want me to do?

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai (Ahmedabad Millowners' Association Indian Commerce). Is there compulsory recognition there of communal unions?

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: But they are recognised unions. They are recognised by the Government of the day. They are recognised by the Governments of Italy, Holland and Germany. Whether recognition is compulsory or optional is a matter for your own research.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: Do not listen to Prof Ranga Go ahead!

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: This is a very peculiar clause which has been attempted to be introduced into this country. If you look to the labour legislation of England, you will not find any clause like that where the rules do not provide for the exclusion of members on communal or religious grounds. The mere fact that there is no clause on the statute book on labour legislation in England and Germany means that any union can be organised with any other limitation they may chose to have. I do not suppose that any organization of the textile mills or railways will have a quarrel as to why they have called the Road-Rail Union instead of saying it a Railway Union or 'A Textile Union'. There could not be any argument to say that it should not be recognised because the members as a rule are wearing a certain particular garment and that others not dressing in that way are to be eligible for membership of that union.

Mr. Vadlal Lalubhar: But there are communal unions here!

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: There are, but they are not recognised. On the Statute Book so far there was no bar against them. But now the Government of the day is proposing to bring a bar against the recognition of a union which consists of a particular community or people of a particular section or religion. That, Sir, is a position which we cannot accept in any case. I do not want to dilate on this issue and quote the entire history of the national denominations in this country and the point of view that the Mussalmans and the Muslim League hold because that is too open a secret and I do not want to take the time of the House in discussing it over and over again. I wanted to impress upon the House that there is no legislation in any part of the world with regard to the recognition of a union which has got a clause that a particular section or a group of people forming a union will not have recognition. The other point which I want to make and which I have made by citing examples that in all parts of the world instances are not lacking where the membership is restricted to a particular section of people of a certain community or religion and those unions are recognised by the Governments of the day. Also they are recognised by the employers and industrialists in their own way in all other countries. I do not want to give names probably I do not know many. But the few I know I do not want to expose them here. Even in Manchester and Lancashire those mills do recognise certain unions which have got their membership limited to a certain particular section of christianity. They do not object to the fact that a certain particular union is meant for Roman Catholics or Protestants or for the Jews. But in this case, if we place this clause on the Statute Book, it will mean that no section of the people of this country will be able to organise a union and say that persons of other community will not have a right of entrance. Professor Ranga was trying to say that it is only a question of predominancy. It can be predominantly Hindu or Muslim. Predominantly it may be anything but an organisation has got to have some basic principles.

My lady friend, Miss Kara was trying to say where is the issue that one labour union may have a different ideology from the ideology of another union of a section or community, meaning, where is the question when Muslim employees may have different issues as against the Hindu employees. But probably she does not know that there are many instances and many questions about leave and holidays that we have got absolutely different problems distinctly different from Hindus and people of many other religions. During the Ramzan, the Muslim labourers require that they should have one or two hours recess earlier than the others. Whereas this is not the question with the Hindu labourer. About Juma Prayer, celebration in Id and other festival, leave rules, have to be different.

Then again, Miss Kara was trying to say something about which she was not fully acquainted. In Calcutta it has happened that over 500 to 600 Muslim labourers have been dismissed from the mills by the Hindu industrialists on the ground that they were Muslims. I can cite several cases from the railway records. I say that all the cases that the Railwaymen's Federation has been bringing up have been concerning Hindus and mostly against the interests of the Muslim employees. If in spite of those things, someone says that we cannot see eye to eye, he is not speaking the truth. He knows the facts but he does not want to confess it. That is the trouble. What more facts are we to place before the House when the House knows that the Members of this House have their own separate existence on religious grounds, we have developed a position in this country in which a separate organisation of the two nations Hindus and Muslims has got to be maintained in every sphere of activity. That has been in the past and we have done it now in spite of the fact that the Government has not recognised different railway unions of the Muslims and the railwaymen's federation cannot claim more than one per cent of Muslim representation just as the Congress claim representation in their own group. That is the position I want to clear. I would request the House to face the reality and see that we cannot have any harmony in this country unless we do recognise the rights and privileges of the few sections of people living in this country, say the Hindus, the Muslims and the Scheduled Castes. They will remain where they have been all through the past.

My friend Mr Gadgil was trying to tell you that this Bill has been prepared by a Scheduled Caste Representative, Dr Ambedkar. It is not important to us who it was that prepared it. It has always been the British influence which brought the Bills. The present Government should face realities in a more real manner than was done by Dr Ambedkar and others. If this combination of the Interim Government is also going to behave in the same manner as Dr Ambedkar's group did I would only say that I do not know what is going to happen to this country. I am not prepared to accept the position that this was a Bill which took any cognisance of the situation in this country or that its authors thought what effect it will have on the members of the different nationalities, which includes the Scheduled Castes also as a separate nation. Whether we like it or not the fact remains as it is today. I think the House will agree, if the Bill is sent for circulation, as the mover has said this morning, this Government will also be able to have a little more time to think over the clauses and come to the House with better facts and figures and face the position in which we are placed today. I do not want to take much more time of the House and with these words I support the circulation motion.

Sir Gowasjee Jehangir: Sir, I was very sorry to hear my old friend Mr Joshi say that he was getting too old to bring new unions into existence and to fight an honourable and legitimate against the employers. I can only express the hope that he will live long to organise more unions and continue these healthy and honest fights.

Now, Mr Deputy President, I think the range of the discussion on this Bill has been fairly wide. As I read the Bill the main object of it is to lessen the chances of strikes in this country and it is as a subsidiary to the Bill that the Honourable Member has just introduced the Industrial Disputes Bill. Everybody sympathises with any legislation which is brought before this House or a provincial House whose object is to lessen the chance of strikes and industrial disputes in this country. But, Sir, as I said, the discussion on the Bill has ranged over a wider field. Personally I will not dispute the right of a union, the right of any association, the right of any collection of men to discuss politics or to express their views freely on the political future of their country. But the point is, how far are unions likely to make political objects the reasons for strikes? If unions are allowed to use political objects as an instrument for strikes they will be bad unions but if unions are brought into existence and they continue to be in existence for the purpose of ameliorating the conditions of the workmen in any particular industry, they are well justified, however much they may fight against the employer. I can imagine a strike engineered for a purely political purpose. The Union may advocate a socialistic principle. It has every right to do so. It has every right to carry on propaganda for an ultra socialistic purpose. But has it a right to create a strike in an industry in order to further that propaganda? That is the question that I ask and I answer it definitely in the negative. I will give you an instance that has come very prominently to my notice very lately. There is a threatened strike in a part of India by the whole of a particular industry—I will not call it an industry, it is not exactly an industry—but by a whole class of employees and they have produced what they call a Charter of Rights. That Charter of Rights is now before an Industrial Disputes Court. Two of these rights that they demand are

(1) That the dividends paid by that class of company shall be limited to a certain small percentage on the capital value of the shares and that the profits of that company after paying those limited dividends shall be divided half and half between the staff and the reserves of that company.

Sgt. N V Gadgil: That is very moderate!

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir: The second demand is that there shall be two Directors on the Board of the company appointed over the said. Now, Sir, I have not the slightest objection to any union advocating a share in the profits for its employees; no, here I have objection to any union or any congress of unions advocating that the employees should have representation on the administration of a company. But I strongly object to a strike being sanctioned for the purpose of these two objects which are of all-India importance, which can only be discussed by the legislature and by Government. Objects which are of a character which should not be used to foment strikes, objects which should be advocated which should be propagated both inside and outside the legislature and objects which should be enacted in the law of the land. Such demands in that character are in contravention of the articles of association of the company and the provisions of the Companies Act. Notwithstanding that, these two demands have been clearly laid down in this charter of rights with a threat of strike behind it.

Therefore there is a great difference between saying that unions shall not take part in politics and unions shall not make political demands the reasons for strikes. I contend the latter is the correct view—that unions or congresses of labour unions may discuss politics as much as they like. In England the present political life of the country has been built up by unions and congresses of unions. Today the Labour Government is in power in England, due to the work of those trade unions, but labour never threatened strikes in England in order to attain their object. They attained their object by laborious and hard work of propaganda, by converting people to their point of view—not with a pistol at their heads. That is the difference between what Mr Griffiths advocated and what some others say they want to do. I would suggest that trade unionism in this country has gone far ahead since the time of the Labour Commission. To deny that fact would not be keeping our eyes open to the present labour position in this country. Unions are freely recognised by the industry today. I admit that 25 years ago, when the Labour Commission was sitting, industry was reluctant to allow the formation of unions and far more to recognise them. But today any legitimate union is freely recognised by employers. I can say that from experience and with some authority with regard to my own part of the world—Bombay. To make a bold assertion that India is today where she was 25 years ago with regard to labour agitation is making a statement that is not correct. In those days the only representative of labour in this House was my old Honourable friend Mr Joshi. Today we have ladies representing labour and an Honourable friend behind me who can speak in a voice that can be heard not only in this House but outside without the aid of a loud speaker. Do you mean to tell me that today labour's voice is not heard in this House or outside this House, as it might not have been 25 years ago? Have they made no advance? Nobody can swallow that statement. The strikes all over the country are proof of the advancement of labour—a bad proof, an unwholesome proof. It is in order to prevent that that such legislation is brought before this House, but that is a very different thing to asserting boldly that labour has made no advance, and if labour has made an advance let me repeat that it was due to the work of men like my friend Mr Joshi—and I repeat without hesitation—I do not wish to pay my old friend of forty years' standing unnecessary compliments—but I really assert that if we can get labour leaders of his calibre, of his sincerity, and of his honesty of purpose, labour never shall regret having a leader. But is that possible? Is that likely? The answer must be in the negative. As has been said, one of the reasons why labour unions and labour organisations have not advanced as they should have done in the last 25 years is that we have not had labour leaders of the proper calibre. Let us avoid that. Let us get away from that. Do not make labour suffer for want of honest leadership. Do not let labour be out of work for a day for reasons other than their complete and entire benefit. Let that be the foundation of the Bill or any Bill that the Honourable Member may bring before this House. It is possible—it is a fact, that there are some black sheep amongst employers as there are amongst labour leaders. Nobody is perfect in this world, nor are there any class of people that is perfect, and I am prepared to admit that there have been and are employers of labour who are prepared to sweat labour if they can. I am prepared to admit that let my labour friends on the other side willingly admit that labour leadership is not so easy and that a little more honesty in labour leadership will do no harm to this country, as a little more honesty amongst the employers of labour. Both go together.

I am also of the opinion that compulsion in any form between labour and employers is not a good thing. I am prepared to admit that there are cases or have been cases where employers have refused to admit unions for the simple reason that they do not like unions. I am prepared to admit that. But for a few black sheep, to introduce principles which may do harm ultimately is not an issue that should be considered lightly. If there is a via media such as the one suggested by my Honourable friend Mr Griffiths, I am sure that the Select Committee that has been appointed will produce a Bill that will satisfy all.

But there is one point I would like to make. Do not rush labour legislation through legislatures without mature consideration and consultation. We are suffering from that in my province. A very important piece of labour legislation was driven through the local legislature without circulation and without a select committee. A similar sort of legislation has been introduced by my Honourable friend a couple of days ago. Do not let him attempt to push it through this House as my Government pushed it through the local legislature. I think he will do well to allow it to be discussed, to be considered and improved in every direction. In most things consultation is advisable. In labour legislation it is absolutely necessary. You must know all points of view and it is not possible to get all points of view expressed in this Honourable House—it is only when experts in each direction apply their minds to each clause of a Bill that you get the real significance of that clause, and to push Bills through without circulation and without a select committee will result in nothing but harm to the country. That is the note of warning I do sound after some bitter experience. If this Bill, when it becomes an Act, is going to lessen the chances of strikes in this country, every Honourable Member of this House ought to give it his blessing.

Sjt N. V. Gadgil: Mr Deputy President, I rise to support the motion moved by the Member in charge for reference of the Bill to the Select Committee. In doing this I am guided by one consideration, namely, whether this Bill will secure peace in industry. A motion has been made on behalf of the Muslim League Party that the consideration of this be postponed and the Bill be circulated to elicit opinion thereon. I only want to point out to my friends the urgency of this Bill. In fact, this Bill should have been passed in the last Assembly session. You will be surprised to know that in the course of the first six months of this year there were 985 labour disputes—185 in January, 180 in February, 160 in March, 185 in April, 180 in May, 145 in June. Now, 12,97,886 workers were involved in this. The man hours lost, come to 62,64,048. Now, out of 985 disputes, only 40 per cent were for better wages and out of the remaining, quite a substantial number of them was for petty matters and if there had been a machinery for joint consultation through recognised unions, probably there would have been less trouble in the industrial world of India.

My Honourable friend Mr. Abdus Sattar stated that the public did not have enough time to express itself so far as the merits of this Bill are concerned. I understand that this Bill has been before the country for more than two years. In any case, since this was introduced in the last session, more than six months have elapsed and those who were interested in labour problems have certainly studied it in greater details and they have not complained lack of time to express their views and submit their opinions on the merits of the Bill, but assuming that there may be some still left, some who are very earnest and who sincerely want to give some suggestions towards the solution of the problem which everybody knows to be very serious, I suggest a course which was adopted by this House when the Bill to amend the Indian Motor Vehicles Act was under consideration. The House accepted a reference to the Select Committee on the understanding that the Select Committee should meet after a couple of months and during that interval by executive order the Government could invite opinions thereon. Some such course is easily possible and I am sure Government will not find it difficult to accept this but I submit that the matter is really urgent and if the motion of my Honourable friend Mr. Abdus Sattar is accepted it means that this matter will not come before the House anyway before the end of February 1947. Everybody knows that the month of March is exhausted in the consideration of the budget proposals and the Finance Bill and other matters which may be very urgent will get top priority then. It will virtually mean that this Bill will not reach the statute even in the winter session of 1947. I know my friend Mr. Sattar for a dozen years and I do not want to suggest that he has my intention to obstruct the passage of the Bill but the constructive suggestion that I have made I am sure, will meet with his approval and I am sure he will contribute whatever suggestions he has in the deliberations of the Select Committee.

With respect to the other item which was urged with more heat than light by my old friend Mr. Naiman. I want to tell him that economic interests do not coincide with religious interests. It must be his experience, as it is mine, that Hindu zamindars make no distinction between their Hindu tenant and Muslim tenants and Muslim zamindars between their Hindu tenants and Muslim tenants. Even in this House we have found, when it is a question that touches one's pocket, there is no regard paid to questions of caste, creed or religion.

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan (Finance Member) : On colour.

Sgt. N. V. Gadgil : I accept the amendment of my friend, the Finance Member—on colour. Now, I would only tell my Honourable friend that he should have no objection to what is stated in this Bill, because that is intended to keep the solidarity of the working class. I just pose a question for him. If the employer happens to be a Hindu—and employers are all alike—he can encourage two unions on religious and racial lines and can play off one against the other and thereby get on with his work without giving anything either to the Muslim Union or the Hindu Union. My Honourable friend will find that in the interest of the workers themselves a provision of this character is necessary. He seems to be under the misapprehension that if such a clause is ultimately accepted and put in the Act that may be finally passed, it will not be possible to start unions purely on religious grounds. In the first place there should be no unions on such grounds. Have we not had enough of "Muslim pan" and "Hindu pan"? Do you want Muslim unions, Hindu unions, Brahmin unions and unions of the 340 castes which, I am told, exist in this country. In the second place, if you come to the Government and you want the help of the Government, at least Government must be far above these party considerations, far above these sectional considerations, more so in the case of a Central Government the function of which is to pass what we usually term normative laws. They should be a model for the provinces or for the Constituent States whatever may be the nomenclature in the Constitution. Therefore, if this clause is incorporated, I think it is in the highest interests of the working class itself.

[Sjt N. V. Gadgil]

It was pointed out by Mr. Nauman that this may not be liked by the scheduled castes. I notice new-found sympathy for the scheduled castes in that section of the House but that itself shows that you cannot in politics remain confined merely to religion. That implication is clear. Why not extend it? It is a good principle and none should be ashamed of it. It should be constructively handled and incorporated in our social life no less in our political life. I may however point out to him that this Bill was introduced by the Honourable Dr. Ambedkar, himself a leader of a certain section—and an important section—of the scheduled castes. Obviously he could not have introduced it before putting it before the Government of the day and we must presume, till the contrary is proved, that it was approved by that Government. If that Government thought it wise that it was a good piece of legislation, I do not think anything has happened between then and now to necessitate any change in that view or in that outlook.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman Do you accept everything that that Government thought to be wise?

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil I therefore submit for the consideration of this House that let us not be affected by considerations which are extraneous but let us judge it from the view point of the working classes.

Now, Sir, what is the main object of this Bill? The main object of it is to facilitate the solution of trade disputes or questions that may arise between the employers and the employees. As has been stated in the Statement of Objects and Reasons, the demand for a statutory recognition has come from the labour section from the labour leaders. My friend Mr. Griffiths said that recognition must be purely a voluntary act and that it must not be based on fear of State. Assume that the employers do not consent and do not voluntarily grant recognition what then? If the State has to interfere and thereby to all influence that can successfully interfere between the employers and the employees in a nation, then the State to which both the parties owe and must owe allegiance must interfere. Now if there are questions on which parties don't agree, what should be the machinery to resolve the differences? The employer may say. Here is a man who has nothing to do with labour, he has come here to try his political philosophy and is creating trouble in these factories or in that industry. The labour unions may reply that it is not so. If we have not got real grievances, it does not matter who represents them. But if the grievances are substantial, if they are real, apart from the personal philosophy of the representatives they have got to be considered on their merits. In case of such a dispute, who is to decide? It can be settled through consultation. Only through some machinery of conciliation, peace and progress in the industry are possible and not otherwise. We must put our heads together and evolve a mechanism which will answer that purpose. As I said before you cannot have any other agency except the State and the State must have an agency in judicial in character as possible to consider whether a particular thing is reasonable or not. Recognition must be based on reason and that is exactly what has been laid down as the proper condition of recognition in the report of the Royal Commission on Labour.

Admittedly the State has a right to interfere, we are not going back to the philosophy of laissez-faire where there is perfect freedom of contract. It is no longer valid and no longer respectable, although in their heart of hearts many of the employers will like to have it. The State interference has come to stay. When industries of the modern character are being set up in this country, the corresponding reactions in the labour world are bound to take the same lines as they have taken in Western countries where they have gone through the process of industrialisation. If in the early stages trade unionism has not come up to a standard which was expected, the fault is not with the workers nor even with those who led them. The fault is more with the employers who are, on any hypothesis, better educated and who obviously know more. I want to know from my Honourable friend Mr. Griffiths what the employers as a class in this country have done in order to encourage a proper spirit of trade unionism. On the contrary, as appears from the report of the Royal Commission on Labour, pretending to agree with the general theory of trade unionism, they made much of the difficulties and have not shown any love for recognition. And that was not the attitude of the private employer only, it was also the attitude of the Government of the day. After the taking over of the railways in this country by the Government, the Government virtually became the biggest employer.

You will permit me, Mr. Deputy President, if I make a reference to what happened in the case of the G. I. P. Railwaymen's Union after the strike in 1930. I was one of the members of the Strike Committee and the whole trouble started with recognition. The strike ended, it was called off. For nearly a year and a half the Government was not prepared to restore recognition and I had an occasion then to interview one of the highest officials in the Railway Department. He was good enough when I got down at the Victoria Railway Station to come and receive me, but during the conversation he said that if we have X in our Executive Committee, we might not have recognition. That was the attitude of the Government of the day then. Therefore, when I say that the employers, whether private or the Government, have not done anything, except very recently, to encourage real trade unionism in this country, I am only stating what is the truth.

Now, Sir, recognition undoubtedly confers some status. Are not Employers' Associations very anxious to get representation on every committee that Government may appoint for the consideration of some trade question or industrial question either here or outside? They always get the ear of the Government. There are Chambers of Commerce and they always like to be put on the list of Government invitees. Why should not that ambition, if at all it is an ambition, be entertained by workers? In the case of workers recognition is a necessity. Why should they not feel that in industry they must have a recognised status? After all, which is the real source of production? Not mere materials. As was well said by my Honourable friend Dr. Ziauddin Ahmad, materials will remain materials, coal will remain in the womb of the earth, the corn will remain in the field, cotton will remain in the godown, unless the workers' hands touch them and turn them into consumer goods. Does it not mean that it is really human labour that really gives everything its utility and worth? It is very regrettable that that factor of production, the most important factor of production is most neglected. I think it is time that it must come into its own. It is very good to preach the philosophy that after all industry is a joint enterprise in which capital and labour, like the lion and the lamb must come together and work for the mutual and common benefit. That is a good idea. But the point is, that it is expected of one party only to live up to that idea. When the question of wages comes up before us, we are always told that you must take into consideration the capacity of the industry to pay. But when we say that a man who works from morning till dusk must have enough to live, apart from any leisure which your system may not allow him, he at least must have enough to live and when he makes a modest claim for that, then in nine cases out of ten, it is turned down. Therefore, if he exercises his right as a citizen to combine and its collateral right to refuse to work till conditions are improved, you cannot say that he is acting against the industry or he is acting against the good of the country. Is he not included in the country? Has he nothing to do with the country? Is he simply to slave and sweat for my Honourable friend Mr. Griffiths to live in a luxurious bungalow in his plantation or for Mr. Gadgil to live in some modest house in Poona? Has he no right to live at least as decently and comfortably, if not more comfortably and more decently, like any other in the middle class family? What is it you have done so far? It was only in the last Assembly session that a Bill to fix minimum wage has been introduced. I am sure it will meet with greater opposition (interruption)—wait and see—from other quarters also. It will meet with greater opposition than we are finding so far as this Bill is concerned.

Now, Sir, this recognition is tantamount to some status to the working classes as organised in unions. Whatever the nature of the organisation, whether it is vertical or whether it is horizontal, the meaning is that the worker must have a place, he must have a status. I know, Sir, only last year when I had an occasion to appear before the President of this Assembly, he was not then the President, in a dispute between a big engineering concern and its workers in the Deccan, the management plainly told us that if it came to closing down the entire work, they would rather prefer that than add an anna or two to the wages of the workers. So, Sir, I do not accept my Honourable friend Mr Griffith's version of the fact that the employers have changed and they have also now come to believe that even for the better running of the industry and earning more profit, good trade unionism is necessary. They are accepting it as inevitable, as an evil which they cannot avoid and if the State interferes, they always feel that the State is going beyond the orbit of its proper function. Let me tell my Honourable friend Mr Griffiths and all the employers who are here, there and behind that the right to interfere in an industry which the State has come to exercise will grow more and more and will be exercised in more and more industries in wider and wider areas. My Honourable friend Sir Cowasjee Jehangir referred to an incident in which a Union demanded that there should be a hunt on the distribution of dividends, that at least two Directors should be taken from labour on the Board of Directors and he was surprised at the audacity of these suggestions.

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir. On a point of explanation, Sir, I am not surprised at their demand. I was surprised that they should threaten a strike in order to get this demand fulfilled.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil. The demand should not have been pressed with the threat of a strike. The remedy is to fight it out here in the Assembly.

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir. How is one to fight it out in the Assembly when it is a strike for an illegal purpose?

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil. Up till now there has been no opportunity for labour to get into power by constitutional means. It was only recently that in the town in which my Honourable friend lives municipal franchise was granted on the principle of adult franchise. In the higher sphere labour is nowhere. When labour finds that it can by constitutional means enforce what it wants, it will certainly not be very anxious to give them up and take to means which are violent. It knows that violence very rarely pays. That is the recent experience also. But in the absence of any real remedy if workers take to strike, then certainly they have a right to strike.

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir. For illegal purposes?

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil. What is wrong there?

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir. It is against the law of the land at present.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil. The law of the land made not by the representatives of the people. May I tell my Honourable friend that the validity of a law depends upon the consent of those on whom it operates. Do not go by the old Austrian principle that law is law because it has been promulgated by the government in power. That would be wrong. That is a discarded philosophy. The basis of law is the willing consent, the willing obedience of those on whose lives it operates.

Mr Deputy President: It is now five of the Clock. The Honourable Member may resume his speech tomorrow. The House will now adjourn.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Thursday, the 31st October, 1946.

MEMBER SWORN

Mr Eric Ingoldby, C I E, M L A (Government of India Nominated Official)

STARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

(a) ORAL ANSWERS

SURPLUS MILITARY STORES

106 *Sardar Mangal Singh (.) Will the Honorable Member for Industries and Supplies please state what percentage of military stores has so far been declared surplus and how much more stores are likely to be declared surplus and when this process is likely to terminate ?

(b) Are Government aware of the difficulties of the purchasers due to the uncertainties about the total quantities of goods available in the market ?

(c) Is it a fact that certain quantities of certain goods have been destroyed by the orders of Government ? If so, will Government please state what goods have been destroyed and how much ?

The Honourable Dr John Matthai (.) It would be useful to distinguish between the surplus stores of the American Forces and others. The former have all been declared surplus. In the latter the actual declaration of material as surplus does not fall within the field of the Disposals organisation for which I am responsible, but the broad position is that about 60 per cent of the anticipated surpluses have been declared. What remains would be about 600,000 tons. So far vehicles are concerned about one third of a total estimated surplus of 1,00,000 motor vehicles of all kinds has been declared. That would indicate a residue of about 100,000. As I find the declaration of surpluses does not lie within my field and I am afraid I can give no positive prophecy as to when the declaration process will be finished. Such declarations are part of a completed background of demobilisation, military equipment policy, etc.

(b) Yes, Sir. And these difficulties are frequently brought to our notice. On the other hand for reasons already given accurate forecasts of declarations are difficult. We do everything possible, however, to give wide information of what actually has been declared, for example by publishing catalogues and inviting tenders.

(c) Stores to be destroyed are either warlike stores which it would not be in the interest of public order to make available to the public such as fighter aeroplanes, arms, ammunition, explosives, etc. or certain items which have now deteriorated to such an extent as to be unfit for human consumption and in some cases dangerous. These include certain drugs, medicines and food-stuffs. Before such articles are destroyed every possibility of putting them to useful purpose is considered.

Mr. Manu Subedar In view of the importance of distributing more consumer goods to the public and also as an anti-inflationary measure will the Honourable Member give an assurance to this House that a high-level joint board of his department and the military department would sit into it in order to expedite these declarations of the still existing surpluses with the Indian army ?

The Honourable Dr John Matthai I have made some inquiries since I received the information which I put into this reply. I think the process of declaration has really made greater progress than we have been officially informed, and I think the declaration process will be completed within a short time

Mr. Manu Subedar: In view of the fact that there are vested interests at several military camps who do not desire that the particular camp which is taking care of surpluses should be disbanded, and that there are delays through departmental red-tape in the military department, would it not be advisable to have a joint high-level committee of the two departments together to go into this so as to expedite the matter?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I expect the declarations will be completed soon, and if so, I do not know if it would be necessary to institute a committee of the kind suggested. In case the process of declaration is delayed further than I anticipate today I should be prepared to consider the Honourable Member's suggestion.

Maulana Zafar Ali Khan: With reference to part (c), what is the total amount of loss on account of the destruction of these goods?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: That is a matter about which I tried to get some information but I have been unable to. In regard to destroyed material it is difficult for us to get information as fully as we would like. There are certain inherent difficulties in compiling this information.

Shri Sri Prakasa: With reference to part (c), is it not a fact that masses of debris of broken and smashed aeroplanes are heaped up at the Bamrauli aerodrome near Allahabad? If so, why were the aeroplanes destroyed and to what use will all these debris be put?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I have no direct information on that point. I presume it is because the aeroplanes to which the Honourable Member referred fall within the particular category referred to in my reply.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know why fighter aeroplanes have been allowed to be destroyed?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I expect they are dangerous things to let loose.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know if fighter aeroplanes have been destroyed in all countries all over the world, or is it a danger only so far as this country is concerned?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I am unable to answer the question.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Will the Honourable Member make inquiries as to why an exception is made in this country alone?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Yes, I will.

Sardar Mangal Singh: What is the reply to the latter part of (c), as to what goods have been destroyed and how much?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: That is a question which another Honourable Member raised to which I gave the answer that in the nature of things it would be difficult to collect information which would be reliable.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable Member make sure that these destroyed aeroplanes could not be used for civil aviation?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I will look into that question.

Seth Govind Das: Does the Honourable Member know that much material is lying in the Arsenal Depot at Jubbulpore and is being spoiled on account of weather conditions?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I have no information.

Seth Govind Das: Will he enquire about it?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I will.

PROFITEERING BY GOVERNMENT IN THE DISPOSAL OF CERTAIN ARTICLES

107. *Sardar Mangal Singh : Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state .

(a) whether it is a fact that Government have made more than hundred per cent profits over their book values in the disposal of certain articles ,

(b) whether Government are aware of the fact that the Supply Department is indulging in profiteering and thereby raising the prices in the market , and

(c) whether Government are prepared to sell such articles at cost price through their own stores, as are largely used by the public such as footwear and ready-made clothes ?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: (a) No, Sir There has been to my knowledge only one case in which the disposal price exceeded the recorded book value to this extent Book values, based on original costs at different times, are in any case not necessarily a guide to the reasonableness of disposal prices

(b) No, Sir On the contrary, it is our view that a steady flow of surplus stores in the market will have a deflationary effect and check the tendency to blackmarketing

(c) Government are prepared to sell such common use items through Government shops at reasonable prices One showroom and retail shop has already been opened in Calcutta Another retail shop has been recently opened in Cawnpore A general scheme for opening more shops in these and other circles is under consideration

Prof. N. G. Ranga. Will Government consider the advisability of selling these things also through co-operative stores ?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I will have the matter looked into

Mr. Manu Subedar: Will Government find out why the suggestions made in the Disposals Committee that greater publicity should be given to the quantities sold and the prices at which goods have been sold also to the parties to whom goods have been sold by press circulars and press notes Will the Honourable Member look into it as to why this suggestion which was placed by me in the Disposals Advisory Committee in July has not been adopted and worked upon though it was accepted willingly by the whole committee including the Director of Disposals ?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai. May I ask the Honourable Member about what time he made this suggestion ?

Mr. Manu Subedar: In July

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I may inform the House, as probably the House knows, that many of the problems relating to disposals are now under discussion by a high-level committee and I would like to have decisions on these questions postponed until I am in a position to examine the conclusions arrived at by this committee This committee is expected to report within a month

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Is the Honourable Member aware that big quantities of military surplus cloth and clothings etc , have been given away to merchants at very cheap prices, while the same could have been given to various provinces under the quota system ?

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: In order to avoid further blackmarketing

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: The question I take it is why these things have been disposed of at very low prices As the House realizes the question I have been asked by the Honourable Sardar Mangal Singh is why these things are being sold at unnecessarily high prices So between the two I think we are somewhere about right Sardar Mangal Singh: May I know whether the Honourable Member will make enquiries that some of the articles disposed of by the Government have not found their way to the blackmarket ?

The Honourable Dr John Matthai. The process of tracing articles that have found the way to the blackmarket is an extremely difficult process.

Sardar Mangal Singh. Will the Honourable Member also make enquiries that certain articles have been sold by the Government above the control price?

The Honourable Dr John Matthai. I have already given this general reply to that question. Since I saw the particular question I looked up the papers dealing with this subject in my office. The general position is as far as disposals up-to-date are concerned, our realizations are considerably lower than the book values of the articles in question.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad. Is the Honourable Member aware of the fact that his department turned down the suggestions that I made that these articles should be sold not to one person but to different persons in different provinces so that one man should not have the monopoly and he may not pass the articles on to the blackmarket. Why was this suggestion turned down by his department?

The Honourable Dr John Matthai. It depends very largely on the type of article in question. I quite recognize the validity of the suggestion which my Honourable friend has made, but it is not possible to adopt a common method with regard to all these articles. They differ so widely that in each case you would have to determine the method to be adopted on the merits.

SINKING OF WELLS AND PUMP WELLS AS A RESULT OF "GROW MORE FOOD"

108 *Sardar Mangal Singh. (a) Will the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture please tell me how many wells and tube-wells have been sunk and how much more land has been brought under cultivation as a result of 'Grow More Food Campaign'.

(b) Is it a fact that the Government of India offered to raise the subsidy to 50 per cent of the cost of sinking wells but several Provincial Governments failed to avail of this offer?

(c) Is it a fact that the Punjab Government did not avail of this offer, if so, what reason they gave for their inability to accept this offer?

Sir Pheroz Kharegat: (a) A statement is placed on the table.

(b) The Central Government have undertaken since September 1944 to bear half the cost of the subsidy given by Provincial Governments to cultivators for the sinking of wells provided that such subsidy does not exceed 50 per cent of the cost. In April 1946 the terms of the offer were extended to cover private tube-wells. Some provinces have not applied to the Centre for financial assistance for well sinking schemes, presumably because local conditions are unfavourable for the construction of such wells. Some Provinces have decided to give subsidies of less than 50 per cent of the cost.

(c) The Punjab had originally decided to give a subsidy of 20 per cent of the cost for constructing 5,000 surface wells and a grant of Rs 7 lakhs was sanctioned from the Centre. The Punjab have now submitted a revised scheme for the construction of 15,000 surface wells, giving a subsidy of 50 per cent of the cost of the wells. This is under examination.

Statement showing Province wise the number of open wells and Tube Wells sunk up-to-date since the inauguration of Grow More Food Campaign and the additional area brought under irrigation as a result thereof

Province	Open or Masonry wells		Tube Wells	Additional area brought under irrigation (acres)	Remarks
	Sunk	Repaired or deepened
1 Ajmer-Merwara	24	4		168	A Scheme for the construction of 360 New Wells and deepening and improving 150 Old Wells has recently been sanctioned. It is hoped these new wells when constructed would be able to irrigate about 3,360 acres
2 Assam	.	.			Due to unfavourable local conditions construction of wells and Tube Wells was not undertaken. But 65,738 acres of additional land were brought under cultivation by construction of canals from natural Waterways, Bunds, sluice gates etc
3 Baluchistan	20	.		100
4 Bengal					Wells have not yet been found suitable for irrigation in Bengal. The Provincial Government have started experiments for evolving out a standard character of irrigation well. Result not so far encouraging. Tube well irrigation may prove successful and the Provincial Government have formulated a Scheme for sinking Tubewells
5 Bihar	Information	not	received

Province	Open or Masonry wells		Tube Wells	Additional area brought under irrigation (acres)	Remarks
	Sunk	Repaired or deepened
6. Bombay	923			5,538	In addition, another 3,300 open wells are under construction which, when completed, will bring at least another 19,800 acres of land under irrigation. No Tube wells sunk as their success in the Province is rather doubtful.
7. C. P. & Berar	3,014			9,598	In addition 3,037 wells were in the process of digging on 31st May 1946 out of which 855 wells have since been completed but the information about the area brought under irrigation by these wells has not yet been made available.
8. Coorg	1			5
9. Delhi	126	80		2,500	Construction of 280 more wells in progress which, it is hoped, will be completed within the next 3 months. These wells are estimated to bring another 4,000 acres under irrigation.
10. Madras	25,372	14,256		Information not yet available	One more Tubewell is under construction
11. North West Frontier Province			4	1,000
12. Orissa	4,616			8,931
13. Punjab	3,000			36,000	One thousand more wells are under construction. A Scheme for the sinking of tube wells is under consideration of the Provincial Government.
14. Sind	Information	not	received
15. United Provinces	216		516	42,730	390 more Masonry wells are under construction and would bring under irrigation 3,900 acres more.

Sardar Mangal Singh: May I know whether the Government of India offered to give 50 per cent subsidy for sinking wells, but the Punjab Government did not avail of it?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: As I have explained, in the instructions that were issued in September 1944 it was made clear that the Central Government would be prepared to give half the subsidy given by the province up to a maximum of 50 per cent of the cost of the wells. The Punjab Government however decided to limit their own subsidy to 20 per cent of the cost.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: In view of the fact that in several parts of India it is extremely costly to sink a well because of the rocky nature of the soil, will Government consider the advisability of making an exception in such cases and raising the proportion of their own subsidy?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: The point was raised by the Government of Bombay and they pointed out that in some parts of the province they can get wells constructed even by giving 10 or 20 per cent of the cost and in other cases they might have to give as much as 80 per cent of the cost to ensure construction of the wells. The Central Government have agreed that so long as the total subsidy for all the wells in all the areas in the Province does not exceed 50 per cent of the cost the Central Government will share the subsidy on a 50-50 basis.

Sreejot Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: May I know if the Government of Assam availed itself of the offer made with reference to paragraph 2 of the question?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: So far as Assam is concerned, the position is that due to unfavourable local conditions, the construction of wells and tube-wells were not undertaken, but 65,738 acres of additional lands were brought under cultivation by the construction of canals from natural waterways, bunds, dams, etc.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Is the Government aware that for want of boring instruments, pumping sets and crowbars, a number of wells have had to be abandoned after digging in the province of Madras? If so, what steps has the Government of India taken to provide these sets and other implements on a large scale?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: No such shortage has been brought to our notice but we are aware of the fact that special implements are needed for the construction of tubewells and an officer is on special duty in England at present to try and secure the new type of boring rigs which will enable wells to be constructed within a period of a fortnight each.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: Will the Honourable the Secretary tell me with reference to part (a), who is the authority who can deliver these tube-well materials? Is General Bradford or Sir William Stump or the Government of India or the Disposal Directorate, because I write to one I am always shelved to the other.

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: It is usually a combination of all of them.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: Then the combination of all means zero?

President: Order, order. Next question.

VEGETABLE GHEE FACTORIES

109. *Sardar Mangal Singh: Will the Secretary of the Food Department please state

(a) the number of factories, province-wise, for the manufacture of vegetable ghee which have been sanctioned,

(b) whether the vegetable ghee has come to stay, or whether efforts will still be made to replace it by pure ghee, and

(c) whether Government have examined its harmful effects on the general national health of the country where an overwhelming majority of the people are already vegetarian?

Mr. B. R. Sen: (a) Under their 'Immediate Plan' the Department of Food are assisting eighteen factories in British India of which eight are in Madras, five in Bengal, two in Bombay, and one each in Bihar, C. P. and Orissa.

(b) The Food Department, on the report of the Advisory Committee appointed by them, consider, there is no room for further expansion of the Vanaspathi Industry, in the near future.

The Agriculture Department are encouraging the Agrakul scheme for making pure ghee available.

(c) The nutritive value of Vanaspathi is subject of research, which is yet incomplete and the result of which so far obtained cannot be said to be unequivocal.

Sardar Mangal Singh: What principles were kept in view when distributing these factories?

Mr. B. R. Sen: The fat fertility in different provinces, the availability of ground-nuts and the accessibility of the markets.

Seth Govind Das: Is it a fact that an effort was made to colour this vegetable ghee to make a distinction between the ordinary ghee and vegetable ghee?

Mr. B. R. Sen: Yes, Sir. Experiments have been going on for some time. Originally the idea was to add a colour. It was found that the colour would not stay under certain temperatures. So the present proposal is to have a latent colour which will react to a simple chemical test and sesame oil is the substance to be added to Vanaspathi in future.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Will Government take steps to prevent the use of the word ghee in connection with this vegetable product in all advertisements, in official correspondence and elsewhere in order to safeguard the public interest in the natural product which alone is entitled to be called ghee?

Mr. B. R. Sen: We will consider that suggestion.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Will the Honourable Member in keeping with the allocation of these plantations, as such, has not been adopted as a policy of the Central Government, as a guide but instance the flow of capital to the persons in the province and allow persons from Northern India to open vegetable plants in Southern India, making the allocation futile to the province?

Mr. B. R. Sen: That is entirely a separate matter and the Provincial Governments have a good deal to say in it. The Honourable Member is referring to a factory to be established in Madras, the matter has been discussed by us with the Madras Government and as far as I recollect, the Madras Government have agreed to the original proposal we made.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: What is the original proposal that the Honourable Member has made? Is it that Birla and others should be allowed to start factories there?

Mr. B. R. Sen: Yes, Sir. That was the original proposal, but some of the capital for that factory will now come from the local capitalists.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Why not entrust it to local capital when it is plentifully available? On what basis have they shown preference to capitalists from Northern India? (After a pause) I want an answer.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: It is greater influence in Delhi.

President: Has the Honourable Member any answer to give?

Mr. B. R. Sen: No, Sir.

President: Next question.

CATERING AND VENDING ON STATE RAILWAYS.

110. *Sardar Mangal Singh : (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state whether Government have considered the proposal that all the catering and vending on all the State Railways will be taken over by Government and worked departmentally ?

(b) If Government have decided to take over all catering and vending, when is the proposal likely to be carried out ?

The Honourable Mr. M Asaf Ali : (a) Government have considered this matter in consultation with the Central Advisory Council for Railways who, at a meeting in April last decided, by a small majority, in favour of the principle of departmental working of all forms of catering excluding Vendors' Sub-committee which was appointed to examine the question of classification of refreshment rooms and location of other forms of dining facilities, has since recommended a case departmental catering because it is considered that, in existing circumstances, change over to departmental catering would not prove beneficial. This and other recommendations of the Sub-Committee will shortly receive the consideration of the Central Advisory Council on Railways.

(b) Government will take the final decision after the Central Advisory Council have further considered the matter.

Mr Muhammad Nauman. May I know, Sir, is Government aware that these contractors have been roaming about the premises of this House and going to all Member since the last two or three Sessions and trying to use all influence to their point of view ?

The Honourable Mr. M Asaf Ali : The information is being imparted to the Government now.

Mr N M Joshi : May I ask whether the Government of India will consult the Legislature before coming to a decision on this question ?

The Honourable Mr. M Asaf Ali : If that is the wish of the House, they certainly will, but as far as I can judge, it will be quite sufficient if the Government of India come to their final decision after consulting the Central Advisory Council on Railways.

Mr N M Joshi : The Legislature is very much interested in this.

The Honourable Mr. M Asaf Ali : The Legislature will have to vote for it.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar : Is the Honourable Member aware that at the first meeting of the Advisory Council, the General policy was laid down that catering must be taken up departmentally and a Sub-committee was appointed to work out details ? If, therefore, he had no right to pass a remark that it ought not to be taken up by the State ?

The Honourable Mr. M Asaf Ali : That is a matter which should be raised at the meeting of the Central Advisory Council when the report of the sub-committee is submitted to it.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar : May I know if it is not the policy of this Government to take up all these matters departmentally when two administrations the M & S M and S I Railways have already been running all these refreshment rooms departmentally ?

The Honourable Mr. M Asaf Ali : Government must consult every one concerned before they come to any conclusion and as that is why the Central Advisory Council has been created. We must know the views of the Central Advisory Council on the subject before we come to any conclusions. We cannot possibly form a policy without any reference to the Central Advisory Committee on this point.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena : May I know who are the members of this Committee ?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali : Mr Yamin Khan is the Chairman and the members who attended the meeting of the Sub-Committee were Messrs

Trimal Rao, Jagan Nath Das and S N Sinha, and A Mohan represented the Railway Board

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: Would not the Government consider it very dangerous, in view of the fact that contractors have been roaming and prowling in the corridors and lobbies of this House, to allow this House to vote on a purely administrative matter like catering of jalebi and kabab roti?

Mr. President: It is a matter of opinion

Sreejot Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: On a point of order, Sir can the Honourable Member put a question when he is not in his seat?

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: Is the Honourable Member aware of the fact that three years ago the Central Advisory Council for Railways had down a definite policy that no contractor will be given more than two divisions but the Government of the day flouted the decision and did not act upon it? It meant only that Government acts upon such advice as is

Mr. President: What is the question?

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: The question is, is the Honourable Member aware of this fact, that this is what has happened?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I want notice of that question. Unfortunately it does not arise out of the question which has been put to me today

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: I did not hear any answer to the question that I had asked

Mr. President: He wants notice

SUPPLY OF COPIES OF ORDERS TO ILLITERATE RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

111. *Seth Sukhdev: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state

(a) whether copies of orders on personnel or other matters are supplied to Railway employees, if not, why not,

(b) whether it is a fact that all official letters on matters relating to employees are addressed to their superiors in charge, and that illiterate employees find it difficult to have copies, and

(c) whether it is proposed to issue instructions to Railway officers to issue two copies of an order, one of which to be supplied to the employees concerned, if not what other steps Government propose to take to see that employees, specially those who are illiterate, get copies of orders?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) and (b) Every order imposing a penalty on a railway servant is communicated to him in writing. Orders regarding postings, transfers, promotions, etc., which are personal to individuals, are addressed to the official in charge who is required to obtain the initials of the person concerned, if literate, in token of having received the order. In the case of illiterate persons, the order is verbally communicated to the person concerned by the official in charge. Orders of general interest are invariably published in the Railway Gazette for the information of all concerned. Government have no information to show that illiterate employees generally have difficulty in obtaining on request copies of orders on matters personal to them.

(c) Government propose to examine the matter to see to what extent the proposal of the Honourable Member in the first part of the question is administratively practicable.

HOLIDAYS TO ADMINISTRATION CLERKS IN THE SIND AREA OF N.W. RAILWAY

112 *Seth Spkhdev: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state

(a) whether it is a fact that Administration Clerks in the Sind Area of the North Western Railway neither enjoy Sind Government holidays nor those given by the North Western Railway Administration in the remaining Divisions of their system, if so, why,

(b) the sanctioned number of holidays during 1946 for—(i) the Karachi Division (Sind Area), (ii) the Sind Government, (iii) the Punjab Government, and (iv) the North Western Railway Administration for the rest of the Divisions of the Railway System; and

(c) if the difference between the holidays given in the Karachi Division and other Divisions is considerable, what steps Government propose to take to remove the anomaly?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (i) and (c) Presumably the Honourable Member means that the clerks of the Divisional Offices in Karachi Division do not enjoy all the holidays given by the Sind Government or those enjoyed by the other Divisions of the Railway. If so the reply is in the affirmative. The staff of the offices at the headquarters of the various Divisions of the North Western Railway are normally granted the holidays notified by Provincial Governments under Section 25 of the Negotiable Instruments Act of 1881, except the holiday granted on account of the Bank's half-yearly closing. The grant of additional sectional and local holidays to staff of Divisional Offices is left to the discretion of the Divisional Superintendents. The cause of the difference between the holidays enjoyed by the staff of the Karachi Divisional Office and other Divisional Offices of the N. W. Railway is being enquired into and the information when received will be laid on the table of the House.

(b) The sanctioned number of holidays during 1946 is as follows:

(i) Karachi Division	23
(ii) Sind Government	32
(iii) Punjab Government	28
(iv) Divisional Offices other than Karachi	27

QUALIFICATIONS FOR THE POST OF CHIEF MEDICAL AND HEALTH OFFICER ON RAILWAYS

113 *Seth Sukhdev: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state

(a) whether it is a fact that the post of Chief Medical and Health Officer of a Railway is to be held by a person possessing the degree of D.P.H.,

(b) whether any rule exists to this effect, if so, whether Government propose to lay a copy thereof on the table of the House,

(c) whether it is a fact that the post of the Chief Medical and Health Officer, North Western Railway is being given to an officer who does not possess the degree of D.P.H.,

(d) whether it is a fact that this officer is a European and that the appointment was made by the Cairetake Government

(e) whether Government are aware that the policy hitherto followed by the Railway Board is to give preference to Europeans on the plea of possessing British qualifications, but when Indians possess better qualifications, seniority is considered as the determining factor, and

(f) what steps Government propose to take to recognise qualification as a prerequisite for promotion to the post of the Chief Medical and Health Officer, if none, why?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) and (b) In accordance with the provisions of Rule 127 of the State Railway Establishment Code, Vol. 1, a copy of which is in the Library of the House, a District Medical Officer shall not ordinarily be considered eligible for promotion unless he possesses a Degree or Diploma in Public Health. The orders prescribing this condition were issued on the 8th January 1930, and, as stated in the reply to parts (b) and (c) of Pandit Thakurdas Bhargava's Starred Question No. 180, asked on the 5th April 1946, the condition has been relaxed in favour of those Medical Officers who joined service before the date of the orders.

(c) Yes, but the officer is covered by the relaxation mentioned in my reply to parts (a) and (b)

(d) The reply to the first portion is in the affirmative and to the latter portion in the negative

(e) Government do not accept the implication of this question. The policy followed by the Railway Board in making appointments to higher posts which are selection posts, is to select the most suitable officer for the post taking into consideration his qualifications, experience and seniority

(f) In view of my reply to part (c) this does not arise

PROMOTION OF UNQUALIFIED ANGLO INDIAN AND CHRISTIAN INSPECTORS OF ACCOUNTS TO THE POSTS OF ASSISTANT COMMERCIAL OFFICERS ON N.W. RAILWAY

114. *Seth Sukhdev Will the Honorable the Railway Member be pleased to state

(a) whether it is a fact that certain Anglo Indian and Christian Inspectors of Accounts were taken up as Assistant Commercial Officers on the North Western Railway,

(b) whether it is a fact that, with a view to regularise this importation, these men were taken up as Commercial Inspectors to avoid their reversion from gazetted posts,

(c) whether the normal channel of promotion of the Accounts Inspectors is not in the Commercial Inspector posts or Assistant Commercial Officers, if so, the reason for this importation

(d) whether any Indian Inspectors of Accounts were considered for posts of Commercial Inspectors or Assistant Commercial Officers, if not, why not,

(e) whether it is a fact that these imported Accounts Inspectors have been placed senior to Transportation Inspectors in the selection list of Commercial Inspectors, if so, why,

(f) whether it is a fact that these imported Accounts Inspectors have passed no commercial qualifying examination from the Warton Training School, and

(g) the steps Government propose to take to ensure that no employee will be given undue preference owing to racial considerations, and what steps are proposed to be taken to revert accounts people to their own branch of service?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali (a) Yes. Two Anglo Indians who were formerly Inspectors of Accounts but who were, at the time, holding respectively the appointments of Personal Assistant to the Station Superintendent, Keamari and Traffic Inspector Commercial were appointed as Assistant Commercial Officers.

(b) When a selection was held for the posts of Commercial Inspectors these two persons, who were already in the Traffic Department, were also considered along with others and were selected by a properly constituted Selection Board. Accordingly it is not correct to say that they were appointed as Commercial Inspectors to avoid their reversion from Gazetted posts.

(c) Appointment to Commercial Inspector or Assistant Commercial Officer is not in the normal channel of promotion of Accounts Inspectors. As regards the latter portion, these two men were absorbed on the Commercial side of the Traffic Department due to their extensive knowledge of the commercial conditions prevailing in the Karachi Port area and on the Karachi Division.

(d) No. Inspectors of Accounts are not considered, as a rule, for posts of Commercial Inspectors or Assistant Commercial Officers. As I have already explained, the two persons referred to in this question were actually in the Traffic Department, and not in the Accounts Department, when they were selected for Commercial Inspectors' posts.

(e) The reply is in the affirmative. These two men were placed on the selection list of Commercial Inspectors in the order of merit decided on by the Selection Board.

(f) The reply is in the affirmative.

(g) In view of my replies to the preceding parts of this question there is no ground for inferring that these two employees were given undue preference owing to racial considerations, and Government do not, therefore, consider that their reversion to the Accounts Branch is called for.

SHORTAGE OF PASSENGER TRAINS ON NAGPUR-BHUSAVAL LINE OF G I P RAILWAY

115 *Mr P. B. Gole (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state how many Passenger, Mail and Express Trains were running daily between Nagpur and Bhusaval prior to the War?

(b) Is it a fact that only one Passenger and one Mail train ran between Nagpur and Bhusaval even now when it is more than 10 years after the cessation of hostilities?

(c) Are Government aware that there has always been a normal crowding of passenger traffic on the Nagpur-Bhusaval line owing to the running of only two trains?

(d) Are Government aware that the travelling public is highly inconvenienced owing to the shortage of passenger trains and that there were even deaths by suffocation owing to overcrowding?

(e) Are Government aware that several representations have been made to the Great Indian Peninsula Railway by the travelling public and by public bodies for increase in the number of Passenger Trains on the Bhusaval Nagpur Section and that the answer given by the Authorities of the said Railway is that passenger coaches are not available?

(f) Is it a fact that the Bombay, Borda and Central India Railway, the East Indian Railway, the North Western Railway and other Railways have already resumed pre-war passenger service and that the Great Indian Peninsula Railway has not yet done so on other lines?

(g) Do Government propose to issue instructions to the Great Indian Peninsula Railway to introduce at least the Nagpur Express and one more Passenger Train in order to relieve heavy congestion of passenger traffic between Nagpur and Bhusaval?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali (a) One mail, one express and three passenger trains were running between Nagpur and Bhusaval prior to the war.

(b) Yes, but I am informed that, in addition, two local services have been introduced from the 1st October 1946 one between Nagpur and Wardha, and the other between Wardha and Bhusaval to cater for local traffic, which has somewhat eased the position.

(c) Overcrowding is, I am afraid not confined to the Nagpur-Bhusaval line but is unfortunately an unavoidable feature wherever passenger train services have had to be curtailed owing to conditions brought about by the war.

(d) Both the Government and the Railway Administration are fully conscious of the inconvenience caused to the public by the lack of adequate train services, but the Railway is doing its best to restore the curtailed services as soon as possible, within the limits of its available resources. No deaths from suffocation due to overcrowding have been brought to notice.

(e) Yes.

(f) A large number of train services have been restored on all railways including the G I P Railway, though it would not be correct to say that the pre-war level was reached. The fact that the G I P Railway have increased services elsewhere does not mean that the interests of the public in the Nagpur-Bhusaval area have been over-looked. My Honourable friend will no doubt concede that it is the duty of the Railway Administration to take a comprehensive view of the needs of the public as a whole, and to utilise its resources as they become available in the order of priority of the public need.

(g) The question of re-introducing the Bombay-Nagpur Express trains is already engaging the attention of the Railway Administration, who intend to afford the required relief as early as possible. In the meanwhile I propose to send a copy of the question and my reply to the Railway Administration concerned to bring the matter prominently to their notice.

Mr. P. B. Gole: May I know from the Honourable Member when a decision will be reached regarding the restarting of the Nagpur Express?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I am afraid I cannot set any time.

PROPOSAL FOR ABOLITION OF INTER CLASS AND REDUCTION OF RATES OF SECOND CLASS ON STATE RAILWAYS

116. *Pandit Sri Krishna Dutt Paliwal Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state

(a) whether Government intend to abolish the Inter class and reduce the rates of the Second class on State Railways, if so, when, and

(b) whether Government have any scheme under contemplation?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) Yes. The date on which this alteration is to be introduced is still under consideration.

(b) Government are considering the desirability and financial implications of providing, on main lines, four classes of travel, namely, air-conditioned, 1st Class, 2nd Class and 3rd Class. On small branch lines only two classes are proposed, namely, (1) Special, (2) General. Details of the future layouts for the various classes are now in preparation. The financial implications are complicated and difficult to assess, and it is not expected that any such arrangement can be introduced without a general increase in the level of passenger fares.

Seth Govind Das: Will Government think it advisable to have only two classes—Upper and Lower—as is happening between Gondia and Jabulpore and abolish first, second and inter class?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: It is a very interesting suggestion, Sir.

Seth Govind Das: But will the Government consider the suggestion?

Mr. Manu Subedar: Will Government examine the question of abolishing the first class altogether as has been suggested before in this House, particularly because air-conditioned compartments have now been introduced? Have Government considered the necessity of having both an air-conditioned and first class compartments in every train?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: That will have to be examined before I can say Yes or No.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Is the Honourable Member aware that the Central Advisory Council for Railways advised that the first class may be abolished and that there should be only second, inter and third classes?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I am afraid I am not in a position to answer that question at present.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: May I know whether the Honourable Member is going to travel second class like provincial ministers or is he going to travel in his saloon?

Mr. President: Order, order.

Seth Govind Das: Will Government consider the desirability of retaining the inter class and providing sitting accommodation there?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: According to this arrangement Inter class goes out and the second class will be as good as first class

RESTORATION OF PRE-WAR RAILWAY CONCESSIONS TO PASSENGERS

117 *Pandit Sri Krishna Dutt Paliwal Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state if Government intend to restore the various pre-war Railway concessions to travelling public, such as Return Tickets, etc? If so, when, and how many of them?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: It is the Government's intention that the various railway concessions enjoyed by the travelling public prior to the war shall be restored at the earliest possible moment, that is, as soon as train services and travel conditions improve sufficiently to permit of the encouragement of rail travel by the grant of concessions

Shri Sri Prakasa: In view of the fact that there is a paucity of railway tickets these days, will not the Honourable Member introduce the system of return tickets charging full fare both ways so that the difficulty of securing a ticket on the return journey may be avoided?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: That again is a very interesting suggestion which should be examined

Shri Sri Prakasa: Not only interesting, it is useful also!

PROVISION OF FANS AND REMOVAL OF OTHER GRIEVANCES OF III CLASS PASSENGERS ON RAILWAYS

118 *Pandit Sri Krishna Dutt Paliwal Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state if Government intend to remove the long standing grievance of third class passengers, such as provision of fans in the compartments, adequate supply of drinking water and suitable food at stations? If so, when and in what directions?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: Government have already under consideration the question of provision of fans in III class carriages and a new method of meeting the additional electric load which would be involved is under close examination by the Railway Board, but no decision has yet been reached

Instructions have been issued to railways that where possible, drinking water should be supplied on platforms by the provision of hydrants. Simultaneously "Gharras" mounted on wheeled barrows should be made available for supplying water to passengers sitting in their compartments. The North Western Railway also arrange, during summer season, for the supply of drinking water to passengers from a 3rd class compartment reserved for the purpose on most of their trains. There are also travelling watermen in these compartments who go and serve passengers with water in their own compartments. The extension of this arrangement to other railways will be shortly considered

Every effort is being made to improve the quality of food served to passengers by arranging periodical medical inspections and by inviting one or two members of Railway Local Advisory Committees to make occasional tours on the railways and offer suggestions for improvement

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Is the Honourable Member aware that even to this date bulbs in most of the compartments and bath-rooms are missing, and if so will he take early steps to remedy this state of affairs?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I am perfectly aware of that fact. In fact it is one of my complaints, that no bulbs on the B A Railway can possibly last more than 24 hours and it is for members of the public to take note of that fact and restrain those who are smashing up those bulbs

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: What about the M S M Railway in respect of which we have got similar complaints?

(No answer was given)

OVERCROWDING ON RAILWAYS

119 *Pandit Sri Krishna Dutt Pahwal Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state the steps which Government intend to take to achieve overcrowding in Railways?

The Honourable Mr. M Asaf Ali. To relieve overcrowding additional train services have been introduced and more will be put on as and when the resources of coaching stock and power permit. At the present moment the Army Department are absorbing a considerable number of vehicles for their use, and as these are surrendered, more stock will be available for augmenting the present services. It is the intention to seek outside assistance in the manufacture of coaching stock to tide over the present shortage, as the railway workshops are fully employed in repairing the present stock and manufacturing new stock to the limit of their capacity.

Every possible effort is in the meanwhile being made to minimise discomfort to the travelling public by the adoption of measures such as

(a) Strengthening of passenger train services by attaching extra carriages as far as available within the permissible hauling capacity of the engines.

(b) Intensive use of all available coaching stock.

(c) Vigorous efforts to prevent ticketless travel.

PROVISION FOR PEDESTRIAN TRAFFIC BY THE SIDE OF ALL RAILWAY CULVERTS AND BRIDGES

120 *Shri Sri Prakasa Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state

(a) if it is a fact that Railway make no arrangement for pedestrians to go over their culverts and bridges at various places.

(b) whether Government are aware that due to high embankment of Railways there is water-logging at various places and pedestrians have no other method of going across except over the Railway culverts and bridges.

(c) whether Government are aware that many accidents have occurred owing to this, and

(d) whether Government propose to issue instructions to Railway Admin. stations to make proper provision for pedestrian traffic by the side of all their culverts and bridges?

The Honourable Mr. M Asaf Ali. (a) Yes, this is so. Culverts and bridges are in general provided solely for the passage of railway traffic. In certain cases exceptions have been made and especially constructed footpaths have been added to existing structures. If, however, a new bridge is constructed or an old one regraded, Provincial Governments are consulted and they are afforded an opportunity in each case of offering to share in the cost should a combined structure be required.

(b) and (c) Government have no information. If there is any water-logging in any place due to a railway embankment the Provincial Government concerned invariably approach the Railway Department for additional accommodation works.

(d) There is an inherent objection to attracting pedestrians and perhaps cattle and cycle traffic to railway embankments etc. Even so, the Railways are always prepared to consider the provision of such facilities for the public, provided the Provincial Government or the Local Authorities requiring these facilities pay the first cost and the maintenance charges.

QUESTION RE RUNNING OF E I RAILWAY CUM G I P RAILWAY, BOMBAY-CALCUTTA
Mails VIA BENARES CANTT BETWEEN ALLAHABAD AND MOGHULSARAI

121 *Shri Sri Prakasa Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state

(a) the progress so far made in the consideration of the question of taking the East Indian Railway cum Great Indian Peninsula Railways' Up and Down Bombay-Calcutta Mails via Benares Cantonment between Allahabad and Moghalsara, and

(b) if there is any intention of reopening the Chheoki Railway Station for these trains?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) For the reasons stated at length in my predecessor's letter No 3818-TT of the 29th June, 1946 to my Honourable friend, I am unable to report any tangible progress. As I understand the position, the proposal cannot be usefully considered till the reconstruction of the Dufferin Bridge has been completed.

(b) I am informed by the East Indian Railway Administration that there is no intention of re-opening the Chheoki Railway Station for these trains in the immediate future.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Can the Honourable Member inform us if there is any intention of strengthening the line between Paphamau and Janghai to enable these mails to be diverted from the Murzapore route to the Benares route?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I am afraid I could not answer that question straight off.

Shri Sri Prakasa: May I take it that the only reason why this diversion is not taking place is that the Dufferin Bridge is in course of renovation or are there any other reasons? And if that is the sole reason, why was not any step taken before the renovation process began, because I have been at it for the last 23 years?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I have not the slightest doubt about the fact that the Honourable Member has been at it for a long time. I have got a letter written to him by my predecessor, if he likes I can read it out to him, it gives all the reasons.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Could the Honourable Member in the meantime arrange for a through bogie to be run from Benares to Bombay by the Bombay Mails?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: The question will be examined.

Pandit Govind Malaviya: In any case, in view of the great facility which that arrangement will provide for the inhabitants of a very important town in the United Provinces, will the Honourable Member ignore the fact that nothing has been done about it during the last 23 years, and apply his new energy to it and see if anything can be done in that direction now?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I will try my best.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR CONNECTING TRAINS AT JUNCTION STATIONS

122 * Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state

(a) whether Government are aware that it is the policy of the Railway Administrations not to arrange for proper connecting trains at junction stations with a view to discourage travelling,

(b) if it is a fact that passengers are left for whole twenty-four hours at junction stations like Gaya, Moghalsara, Bhusaval, Itarsi, etc., due to their missing Railway connections, and

(c) what steps, if any, Government are taking or propose to take to avoid such inconvenience?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) No, both the policy and the practice are to make every effort to make sure of such connections.

(b) Cases do occur in which passengers sometimes have to wait for trains up to 24 hours at junction stations if they miss their connection due to late running of trains.

(c) The punctuality of trains is, I regret to say, still far from satisfactory. This is due to a number of causes such as heavy loads, heavy passenger and parcels traffic, bad quality coal, etc.

Railway Administrations are being constantly urged to improve the punctuality of trains and a close scrutiny is maintained by Transportation Officers on Guard's Train Journals and Train Control Charts with a view to taking prompt action in cases of avoidable delays.

I propose to send a copy of the Honourable Member's question to all principal Railways and to urge on them the necessity for redoubling their efforts to attain the maximum measure of punctuality, other factors permitting.

Shri Sri Prakasa: In view of what the Honourable Member has stated in reply to part (a) of the question, may I request him to examine the time table at Moghul Serai—I can lend him a copy if he likes—and see if proper connections are given for passengers from Benares to catch the 1 Up and the 11 Up and if he is satisfied with those arrangements and if they are in consonance with the principles which he has just enunciated?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I am thankful for the suggestion. I shall have it examined.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: Is the Honourable Member aware of the fact that it is the vendors who manage that there shall be no connection in these important junctions?

(No answer was given.)

BREAK OF JOURNEY ON RAILWAYS

123.* Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state

(a) if it is a fact that no break of journey is now permitted for passengers holding tickets for less than 250 miles, while formerly passengers with tickets for 100 miles or more were permitted to break journey,

(b) if it is a fact that passengers are now required to complete the minimum journey of 250 miles before they can break journey, while formerly they could break journey before travelling the minimum they held tickets for more than the requisite minimum number of miles,

(c) if Government propose and, if so, when, to bring back the old system, and

(d) whether pending the reduction of the number of miles to be travelled before break of journey is permitted Government propose at least to permit break of journey before the minimum of 250 miles is travelled by persons holding tickets for 250 miles and more?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) and (b) Yes.

(c) The Honourable Member is referred to the reply given to part (b) of question No 1188 asked by him in the Legislative Assembly on the 25th March 1946.

(d) No. The relaxation suggested would defeat the object of the revision of the Rule.

Shri Sri Prakasa: In view of the fact that much water has flown under the bridges since the date mentioned by the Honourable Member, will the Honourable Member consider the proposition afresh and could he inform us how the object of this rule is frustrated if passengers are allowed to break journey before the minimum number of miles is travelled and how it was not frustrated when this rule was not in operation?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: The whole of this question was very carefully considered and I can tell the Honourable Member some of the reasons against the relaxation he is asking for. The reasons were that a check on their fraudulent use was impossible, and the change of this rule assisted the Railways in reducing overcrowding in through trains in which short distance passengers were restricted and it was expected to bring slightly more revenue.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Is the last the main reason?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: No, certainly not

LATE RUNNING OF RAILWAY TRAINS

124 *Shri Sri Prakasa Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state

(a) if there is a general complaint about the late running of trains, sometimes by as many as four to six hours,

(b) the causes of this, and

(c) the steps that are being taken to meet the difficulties and ensure trains running to schedule?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) Complaints regarding the late running of trains are received from time to time but cases of trains running from four to six hours late are rare

(b) The chief causes of late running are heavy loads of trains, poor quality coal and heavy passenger traffic involving detentions at stations en route

(c) A careful check is maintained on punctuality by Railway Administrations Guards' train journals and traffic control charts showing detentions en route are carefully scrutinised by Transportation Officers, avoidable detentions are taken up and suitable action is taken to avoid recurrence. A considerable increase in train services has already been effected and as further services are introduced they will relieve the pressure on trains generally, thus improving punctuality

Shri Sri Prakasa: Is the Honourable Member aware that it is rarely that 88 Up and 84 Down on the E I R run less than four to six hours late?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I am not quite sure about that particular train. I know for a fact that recently the E I R have tightened up their organisation and the E I R trains are now running to time as far as possible

Mr. Manu Subedar: Will the Honourable Member give an assurance to this House that amongst the measures taken in order to curtail the lateness of a train speeding up of the engine driver will not be one and that no unnecessary risks will be taken, due to undue speeding in order to make up time?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I am prepared to give that assurance. In fact it is one of the most important points which are always kept in view by all Administrations Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know from the Honourable Member whether in the history of the Grant Trunk Express it ever came in time?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I think my Honourable friend knows that much better than I do

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: If the Grant Trunk Express is late by half an hour to begin with, it eventually arrives four hours late, because it is detained on the way to enable goods trains to pass. Will the Honourable Member take steps to see, because this is an Express train, that it gets priority over goods trains and other trains?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: The suggestion made by the Honourable Member will be sent to the appropriate authorities and the matter will be looked into Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Is the Honourable Member aware that the Grant Trunk Express, even when it starts from the Delhi station, is allowed to start from half an hour to an hour late?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I am not aware of that fact

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: Is the Honourable Member aware of the fact that it has been established that the Grand Trunk Express is neither Grand, nor is it a Trunk nor is it an Express?

Pandit Govind Malaviya: May I draw the attention of the Honourable Member to the fact that, as was pointed out in relation to the Grand Trunk Express, once a train begins to get late, other trains get preference, with the result that it continues to become more and more late, with the result that it reaches its destination several hours late? Will he therefore consider whether a rule cannot be laid down that at least Mail and Express trains, even if they are late, should be given preference over other goods and other trains all over the system?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I am afraid I cannot possibly go into all these administrative details at this stage and these points really do not arise out of this question.

BLACKMARKETTING IN NEW MOTOR CARS SOLD AGAINST CHIEF COMMISSIONER'S PERMITS

125 *Mr. C. P. Lawson: Will the Honourable Member for Transport be pleased to state

- (a) how many new motor cars have arrived in Delhi during 1946 for sale against permits issued under the auspices of the Chief Commissioner,
- (b) what steps, if any, are taken to ensure that cars purchased against these priority permits are not immediately resold at blackmarket prices, and
- (c) what authority adjudicates in the matter of priorities?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) 255 new cars were allotted to Delhi Province during the period from January to the end of September, 1946, of which 221 actually arrived in Delhi before the end of September.

(b) During the period of control, permits to purchase cars were issued only to essential users. There was, however, no provision in the Civil Motor Cars Control Order—which expired on the 30th of September—to prohibit a person who had purchased a controlled car against a priority permit from selling it to another person. No case of reselling a car at a higher price was reported to the authorities in Delhi.

(c) The Provincial Motor Transport Controller adjudicated in the matter subject to the approval of the Chief Commissioner.

Mr. C. P. Lawson: May I ask the Honourable Member whether in his alternate capacity as member in charge of Railways he has noticed whether any of these cars have been shipped away from Delhi immediately after purchase?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: No such case has been brought to our notice so far but if the Honourable Member will give me definite information, I shall have the whole question examined.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: It is very difficult to buy a new car in Delhi today particularly because dealers expect Rs 3 to 4 thousand extra beyond the control price. May I inquire from the Honourable Member whether Government will take steps to stop this blackmarketing on the part of the dealers?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: We have absolutely no control over cars now. As you know, the ordinance expired on the 30th September and dealers can do exactly as they like.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: May I take it that it is the policy to encourage blackmarketing on the part of the dealers?

Mr. President: That does not arise.

STEAM VESSELS FLYING IN INLAND WATERS

126. *Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Transport be pleased to refer to starred question No 129 of the 8th February, 1946, on the subject of future Government policy regarding ownership and management of steam vessels plying in inland waters, and state what progress has been made in the consideration of the question?

(b) Will the Honourable Member particularly indicate the purport of the opinions expressed by the Provincial Governments concerned, and whether the matter has been considered by the Policy Committee on Transport?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) and (b) As stated in the reply to question No. 129, answered on the 8th of February 1946, a memorandum setting out the major issues was sent to the Provincial Governments of Bengal, Bihar and Assam. The Section 93 Governments in Bengal and Bihar expressed tentative views on the question but rightly pointed out that this was a matter on which the views of a responsible Ministry should be asked for. A reply has been received from the Provincial Ministry Government of Assam. They are provisionally inclined to favour the idea of nationalising the river services. No reply has been received from the Ministry Governments of Bengal and Bihar and they have been asked to expedite consideration of the case. The matter was not placed before the Policy Committee on Transport because replies had not been received from the Ministry Governments of Bengal and Bihar and it is not now considered appropriate to place the case before the Policy Committee on Transport as previously constituted. A brief memorandum on the subject will be placed in the very near future before the Advisory Planning Board which has recently been set up and the Standing Committee of the legislature will also be consulted when replies have been received from the two Provinces mentioned. At a later date it may be necessary to convene a joint conference to consider the matter on which the Provincial Governments concerned, the railway and river transport interests would probably be represented.

PROPOSAL BY THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE PORT OF CALCUTTA FOR A CANAL FROM KIDDERPORE TO DIAMOND HARBOUR

127 *Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable Member for Transport be pleased to state

(a) whether Government are aware of the proposal of the Commissioners of the Port of Calcutta for excavating a ship canal from Kidderpore to Diamond Harbour, as an alternative navigation canal for ships regarding which a notification under Section 4 of the Land Acquisition Act was published in the Calcutta Gazette on the 28th March, 1946;

(b) the necessity for such a scheme;

(c) (i) at whose instance such a scheme has been formulated and (ii) the authority which can give final approval to the scheme;

(d) the area involved in the scheme and the project and the extent of crop growing lands (nature of the crops to be indicated) in the said area;

(e) whether Government are aware of the protests made against the scheme and the project by the Corporation of Calcutta by other public bodies, by the public at meetings, by members of the Legislatures, and by the Newspapers pointing out the threatened enormous loss to several thousands of agriculturists families and to agriculture in respect of several hundred thousands of bighas of lands and liquidation of a large number of villages, and

(f) whether Government have examined the implications of the whole matter and the policy?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) Yes

(b) The port of Calcutta is one of very difficult approach even to small ships and the ship canal scheme has been put forward to short-circuit the 42 miles of dangerous and difficult river navigation between Diamond Harbour and Calcutta and to provide sheltered deep water approach to the Port Commissioners' dock system

(c) (i) The scheme which is entirely in an exploratory stage has been formulated by the Calcutta Port Commissioners

(ii) The Central Government

(d) It is not possible to give any definite information on this point as the scheme has not yet been worked out in detail. According to the notification published under the Land Acquisition Act, pieces of land altogether measuring about 18,210 acres are likely to be required in the district of 24 Parganas

(e) Yes

(f) Not yet As already stated, the whole scheme is still in an exploratory stage. The possibility of achieving the same object by river works in the Hooghly will soon be under expert investigation. The views of the Bengal Government and the Commissioners for the Port of Calcutta on recommendation (4) of the Ports (Technical) Committee regarding the ship canal and river training works are awaited.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable Member be pleased to state whether the Government will be prepared to ask for the opinion of the other local self-governing institutions, namely the district boards and municipalities concerned, before they come to a final decision in this matter?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: It is quite obvious that the whole scheme is in an embryonic stage. Let the Government come to some conclusion first, before they can consult anybody else. The question really does not arise at this stage.

Mr. President: The question hour is over.

(b) WRITTEN ANSWERS

COMPARATIVE PRICES OF LAC, WHEAT AND RICE IN THE CENTRAL PROVINCES

128. *Seth Govind Das: Will the Secretary of the Department of Food be pleased to state

(a) whether it is a fact that Teora (lac) is selling at a higher price in the Central Provinces than wheat and rice, and that the price of Teora (lac) is not controlled by Government;

(b) whether it is a fact that the prices of wheat and rice are low due to the sole reason that these have been so fixed by Government;

(c) whether Government are aware that at the respective prices of Teora (lac) and wheat it is unprofitable for the cultivators to grow wheat, with the result that the acreage under Teora is steadily increasing at the cost of wheat; and

(d) whether Government propose to take immediate steps to either raise the controlled price of wheat and rice or control the price of Teora (lac) also?

Mr. B. B. Sen: An enquiry has been made from the Government of the C P and the information will be laid on the table of the House when received.

REFORM OF THE LAND REVENUE SYSTEM AND THE REMOVAL OF ZAMINDARS

129. *Seth Govind Das: Will the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture be pleased to state

(a) whether he is aware of the fact that most of the Provincial Governments have expressed the desire to reform their land revenue systems by removing intermediaries between the cultivator and the State;

(b) whether payment of compensation to these intermediaries is necessary under Section 199 of the Government of India Act, 1935, if their rights are taken away; and

(c) whether the Government of India propose to move the British Parliament to so amend the Act that it becomes possible to acquire the rights without payment of any compensation?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: (a) So far as I am aware the Governments of five of the eleven Governors' Provinces have expressed a relevant intention.

(b) The question whether a particular law attracts sub-section (2) of Section 299 is a question for the Courts, but prima facie the answer appears to be in the affirmative.

(c) No, Sir.

FINANCING OF PROVINCES BY GOVERNMENT OF INDIA FOR COMPENSATING ZAMINDARS

130 *Seth Govind Das : Will the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture please state whether the Government of India propose to ask Provincial Governments to adopt a co-ordinated plan and accept a uniform policy for the purpose of reforming land revenue systems in Provinces by removing intermediaries between the cultivator and the State ?

(b) Do the Government of India propose to undertake to finance Provinces for compensating intermediaries whose rights are to be acquired ?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat : (a) The systems of land tenures vary considerably from province to province and sometimes even in different parts of a province. It is not considered practicable to have a co-ordinated plan or a uniform policy for all provinces. The Government of India do not therefore propose to address the provinces to adopt the same. Several provinces are looking into the whole question themselves, land revenue being a provincial subject.

(b) If such proposals are included in the post-war development plans of a province they will be examined on their merits for deciding whether to approve them for inclusion in the schemes for which grants or loans are admissible from the Centre.

NATIONALIZATION OF AIR TRANSPORT IN INDIA

131 *Seth Govind Das : (a) Will the Honourable Member for Communications be pleased to state whether Government are aware that there has been and continues to be a rapid growth of air transport in India and that transport services are in private hands ?

(b) Do Government propose to take steps to nationalise the air transport and so plan it that the facility of carriage of passengers and posts by air comes within the reach of towns with a population of two lakhs and above ?

Sir Harold Shobert : (a) Yes.

(b) The policy decided by the previous Government was in favour of regulated controlled private enterprise. The present Government has had no time to review the policy, but intends to do so soon. I may, however add that the House will have an opportunity to discuss this subject on Sardar Mangal Singh's resolution to be debated on 8th November. Probably by that time I may be in a position to indicate the Government policy.

SHORTAGE OF BOOKINGS OF TIMBER ON THE SATPURA DIVISION OF B. N. RAILWAY

132 *Seth Govind Das : Will the Honourable Member for Transport be pleased to state

(a) whether Government are aware that the narrow gauge Satpura Division of the Bengal Nagpur Railway is the worst sufferer under the 'Regional Railway Priority Controls' as bookings are available to them only on a very limited scale and for a very short while ;

(b) whether Government are aware that allotment of wagons for transport of timber is made on the recommendations of the Timber Transport Advisory Committee, Central Provinces and Berar ;

(c) whether Government propose to abolish the medium of the Timber Transport Advisory Committee and constitute a committee of its own for the purpose, and

(d) whether Government propose to place on the table of the House information promised in reply to parts (b) and (c) of unstarred question No. 137 of the 14th March, 1946 ?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali : (a) The "Satpura Division", or more properly, the Nainpur District of the B. N. Railway, is a narrow gauge district with very limited rolling stock. The best possible use is made of such stock as is available. In June, 1946, it was necessary to concentrate on the transport of foodgrains and fire-wood to Nagpur and Jabulpore at the earnest request of the Provincial Government in order to build up stocks against the possibility of a general railway strike. All other traffic suffered during this period. Except for this time of emergency, an equitable distribution of transport is the general practice, but it may be noted that the railway is particularly short of trucks suitable for the loading of long timber. Only some 15 trucks a day of such traffic can be cleared.

(b) Timber Transport Advisory Committees have operated in all timber despatching areas for some years. It is the practice for Regional Controllers of Railway Priorities to meet these committees monthly and allocate wagon quotas for timber in consultation with them. Thereafter the Forest Department takes steps to allocate trucks and to make arrangements for the transport of timber. These arrangements have worked with great success and Government are not aware of any public discontent in connection with the working of the Central Provinces and Berar Committee.

(c) Government see no valid reason for ordering the abolition of Timber Transport Advisory Committees.

(d) The information was placed on the table of the House in April 1946 and is printed at page 4266 of the Legislative Assembly Debates April 18th 1946, Vol VI—No 3.

POLICY OF GOVERNMENT INCREASE IN YIELD OF FOOD CROPS

133 *Mr. Madandhar Singh: Will the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture be pleased to state the future policy of Government in regard to increasing the yield of food crop and for making agriculture a paying business?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: The policy of Government is stated in the Statement of Agriculture and Food Policy in India copies of which are available in the Library.

APPOINTMENT OF MR P M GLOVER AS ENTOMOLOGIST IN INDIAN LAC RESEARCH INSTITUTE

134 *Babu Ram Narayan Singh: Will the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture be pleased to state

(a) if it is a fact that at the time when Mr (now Major) P M Glover was being appointed Entomologist in the Indian Lac Research Institute the post was advertised in England only notwithstanding the specific direction of the Committee of the Indian Lac Association to advertise it both in India and in England,

(b) whether the Chairman of the Committee was responsible for the action taken in contravention of this direction and for thus depriving Indians in this country of the opportunity of applying for the post,

(c) whether the Chairman in question was an Englishman and

(d) if it is a fact that Mr Glover had no previous knowledge of lac when he was appointed?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: (a) to (d) Mr Glover was appointed in 1929 i.e., 17 years ago. Information as regards the circumstances of the recruitment is not available and is being collected.

PAYMENTS TO MR GLOVER BY INDIAN LAC CESS COMMITTEE WITHOUT CENTRAL GOVERNMENT'S SANCTION

135 *Babu Ram Narayan Singh: Will the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture be pleased to state

(a) if it is a fact that during the currency of his last contract, Mr P M Glover was called up for military service in connection with the recent war under the National Service Act,

(b) whether in disregard of section 6 of the Indian Lac Cess Act enjoining that the proceeds of the Lac Cess should be devoted only to promoting research on and sale of lac, the Indian Lac Cess Committee decided to pay Mr Glover the difference between his pay in the Indian Lac Research Institute and his pay in the Army ;

(c) whether the Committee asked for the sanction of the Central Government to the proposal ;

(d) whether subsequently the Committee authorised the payment to him of the difference between his Civil and Army pay in anticipation of Government sanction, and

(e) whether any audit objection was raised against these payments ?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: (a) Yes

(b) The Committee did decide to pay Mr Glover the difference between his pay under the Committee and his pay in the Army. Such payment was in accordance with the general practice adopted by Government and by private firms and is not in contravention of Section 6 of the Act.

(c) Yes

(d) The sanction was applied for in September 1940 and reminders sent in October and December 1940 and in January 1941. No reply having been received, the Committee decided in February 1941 to authorise the payment in anticipation of Government sanction and informed Government of this decision. The orders of Government were not received till July 1942.

(e) No

RECOVERY OF OVER-PAYMENTS MADE TO MR GLOVER

136 *Babu Ram Narayan Singh: Will the Secretary for Agriculture Department be pleased state

(a) if it is a fact that payments of difference between the Civil and Army pay of Mr Glover continued to be made by the Indian Lac Cess Committee to Mr Glover until the Central Government's reply rejecting the proposal of the Committee was actually received by the Committee that the total amount thus paid to Mr. Glover was nearly Rs 10,000 ;

(b) if it is a fact that before the first payment was made to Mr Glover he was informed that he would have to refund the amounts drawn by him in anticipation of Government sanction, if this sanction was eventually refused ;

(c) whether the recovery was waived by the Central Government on the recommendation of the Committee even without an application from Mr Glover ;

(d) whether Government will be pleased to consider the question of recovering the sums irregularly paid to Mr Glover from him or from the President and members of the Committee and those officers of the Central Government responsible for allowing the payments to be made in anticipation of Government sanction and for waiving recovery even without an application from Mr Glover, and

(e) whether Government will also be pleased to consider the desirability of terminating the arrangement with the Auditors for their failure to raise any objections in audit ?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: (a) Yes

(b) Yes

(c) The Committee recommended that the recovery might be waived or the amount of leave due might be reduced by nine months so that leave salary might not have to be paid for this period. The Government decided to waive recovery. It is not known if any formal request was made by Mr Glover, but requests were made by him both orally and in Demi-official correspondence.

(d) and (e) Do not arise

REPAYMENT OF LOAN TAKEN BY MR GLOVER

137. *Babu Ram Narayan Singh: (a) Will the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture please state if it is a fact—

(i) that Mr Glover who is still in the Army holds a lien on his appointment in the Indian Lac Research Institute, and that it is proposed to allow him to return and serve the Committee for the remaining period of his contract,

(ii) that sometime in 1942 he applied to the Committee for a loan of more than Rs 2,000 on the plea that it was required to enable him to meet his various liabilities, and that he undertook in accordance with the Provident Fund Rules to repay the loan in regular monthly instalments,

(iii) that he has in the course of four years or more made only two or three payments of Rs 100 each,

(iv) that he has paid little or no heed to the several reminders sent to him; and

(v) that it now transpires that he took the loan not to meet any liabilities, but to invest the amount in war bonds?

(b) Whether Government will be pleased to state the action if any taken against Mr Glover?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: (a) and (b) An enquiry has been made from the Committee whose reply has not yet been received. A reply will be given at a later date.

ENLARGEMENT OF POWERS AND JURISDICTION OF FEDERAL COURT

138 *Mr Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal Will the Honourable the Law Member be pleased to state

(a) what steps are being taken for the immediate enlargement of the powers and jurisdiction of the Federal Court so as to vest the same with full and final authority of the Supreme Judiciary in the country, and

(b) whether it is proposed to have a discussion of the matter in the House in the course of the present session?

Sir George Spence: (a) and (b) No immediate action in this direction is contemplated. In view of the fact that the Constituent Assembly will be meeting soon to draft a constitution for India and must consider the question of a Supreme Court for India, it is not considered necessary to promote a discussion of this subject in the current Session.

ERASING OF NAMES OF RAILWAY STATIONS WRITTEN IN URDU SCRIPT IN THE PURNEA DISTRICT ON B A RAILWAY

139 *Choudhury Md. Abid Hussam (a) Is the Honourable the Railway Member aware that the names of Railway Stations written in Urdu script on all the Station of the Bengal Assam Railway in the District of Purnea (Bihar Province) have been recently erased to the great inconvenience of the Muslim passengers?

(b) Have the local authorities been instructed by the Central Government to do so?

(c) If not, why and with what motive are the local authorities putting the Muslim passengers in difficulty by erasing the name in the Urdu script?

(d) Do Government propose to issue instructions to the local authorities to re-write the names of the stations in the Urdu script also?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a), (b) and (c) As a security measure, during the war, the names of Railway Stations had been obliterated from Station buildings and name boards removed from station premises. Recently, while replacing the name boards at Stations in the Railway District of Katihar (Purnea District) the Urdu Script was used by mistake in addition to English and Bengali. This was a departure from the old standard practice and was rectified as soon as detected. It is understood from the Imperial Gazetteer of India that the population in the Purnea District is mainly Hindi speaking and to a smaller extent Bengali speaking.

(d) The Government intend to have the position reviewed by the B A Railway administration in consultation with the Provincial Government and the Local Advisory Committees.

UNLAWFUL STOPPING OF RAILWAY TRAINS BY NATIONAL CONGRESS VOLUNTEERS IN BIHAR

140 *Choudhury Md. Abid Hussam : (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state if Government are aware that in Bihar both on the East Indian Railway and the Oudh and Tirhut Railway National Congress Volunteers often pull chains and stop trains without any cause, putting bona fide travellers to great inconvenience?

(b) Is it a fact that those volunteers travel without purchasing tickets for their train journey and that they break their journey whenever they like by stopping trains?

(c) Have Government taken any steps to check this kind of stopping of trains? If so, what?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) Government are aware that in Bihar, both on the East Indian and Oudh Tirhut Railways, alarm chains are often needlessly pulled which result in inconvenience to bona fide passengers and railway working generally. Government have been advised that the main offenders are batches of young students.

(b) It is a fact that these offenders often travel without purchasing tickets and break journeys where they like by pulling alarm chains.

(c) Yes. Intensive checks are being carried out by squads of Travelling Ticket Examiners in collaboration with Government Railway Police. In some cases these squads are accompanied by Travelling Magistrates and prison vans. On the East Indian Railway a drive has also been made by Travelling Ticket Examiners in plain clothes with the object of detecting offenders.

LIGHTING ARRANGEMENT ON PASSENGER COACHES ON B. A. RAILWAY, METER GAUGE SECTION.

25. Mr. K. C. Neogy : (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to refer to unstarred question No. 28 of the 8th February, 1946, on the subject of night passenger coaches on the Bengal Assam Railway, Meter Gauge Section, and lay on the table of the House a statement showing the total number of passenger train services, excluding day trains, that were run month by month, since 1945, in the districts of Dacca and Mymensingh and which were not equipped with lighting arrangements in passenger coaches, and indicate the progress that has been made in the provision of lighting arrangements?

(b) Are Government aware that due to the running of passenger trains at night without lighting arrangements in the coaches, thefts, looting, assaults on passenger and even abduction of women from trains were facilitated in certain parts of the above section of the Railway?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) I regret that it will not be possible to compile the statement asked for by the Honourable Member, since the necessary information regarding deficiencies in lighting arrangements in individual coaches from October, 1945, on the section of the Bengal Assam Railway referred to, is not available.

As regards the progress that has been made in the provision of lighting arrangements, the Bengal Assam Railway Administration are receiving supplies of electric bulbs to the extent of 2,000 per month. During 1945, they arranged for at least one bulb to be fitted in each compartment on the Dacca-Chittagong Division. Unfortunately, however, thefts of electric bulbs and fittings increased to such an extent that at present only 50 per cent of the carriages are provided with lights. The administration expect, however, that provided the rate of theft does not increase, they will be in a position again to provide at least one bulb in each compartment within the next two or three months.

During the period from January, 1945, to December, 1945, 30,000 electric bulbs were stolen on the B A Railway and heavy thefts and damage to electric fittings still continue. In an effort to stop thefts, the railway administration have for some time been fitting strong wire cages around the electric bulbs in carriages, but it will necessarily take some time for this work to be completed.

(b) Government are of course aware that inadequate lighting in trains is a factor which facilitates crime at night, but the Honourable Member will, I think, concede that it is by no means the only factor which has facilitated the commission of the outrages which have unfortunately been perpetrated in certain parts of the section of the B A Railway referred to.

LICENCES AND FACILITIES FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW COTTON MILLS IN INDIA

26. Mr K. C. Neogy: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to lay on the table of the House a statement showing the number of licences for the establishment of new cotton mills, or addition to the production capacity of the existing mills that have been granted in different provinces, and Indian States, respectively?

(b) What are the prospects of necessary machinery and other equipment being available in the near future in connection with the above projects, and what facilities are Government providing for expediting the fruition of the above schemes?

(c) What is the number of applications for licence for the establishment of new cotton textile mills that are now pending consideration in respect of each province and what is the number of looms and spindles, respectively, that are involved in such applications?

(d) When is Government decision expected to be taken on these applications for licence in each province and Indian State?

(e) What facilities exist at present in India for the manufacture of cotton textile machinery, and what is the maximum capacity of the existing manufacturing concerns in this matter? Is there any proposal for further expanding the capacity for the manufacture of cotton textile machinery in the country; and what assistance, if any, are Government prepared to render in that behalf?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: (a) The information desired by the Honourable Member is as follows

Province or State	New Mills		Expansion of existing mills

(e) Only powerlooms and spare parts of spinning and weaving machines are being manufactured by some firms in India. No reliable information is available regarding their capacity. Two firms have produced Ring frames on a small scale, but quality and performance are not known. To investigate the possibilities of setting up manufacture of textile machinery in India a Mission consisting of Mr Krishnarat, M D Thackersey, Mr D M Khatau, Sir Frederick Stones and Mr T P. Barat and sponsored by Government has left for U. K., U. S. A. and Switzerland.

PRODUCTION AND SUPPLY OF COTTON TEXTILES AND COTTON YARN IN INDIA.

27. Mr K. C. Neogy : (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to lay on the table of the House a statement regarding the present position of the production and supply of cotton textiles and cotton yarn in the country, indicating in respect of the previous year, as also the current year, —

(i) the total estimated supply and its distribution by Provinces,

(ii) the quantities of authorised export from India to different countries, respectively,

(iii) the levels of controlled prices, and

(iv) the prevalence of blackmarket practices if any province or province?

(b) Will the Honourable Member please state how the production programme of the cotton textile industry in each province suffered during the previous year, as well as the current year, respectively on a count of (i) strikes, (ii) port supplies of coal or other fuel, and (iii) any other cause?

The Honourable Dr John Matthai : (a) (i) and (ii) — The information desired is contained in the following statements.

INDIAN TRADE UNIONS (AMENDMENT) BILL

Mr. President: The House will now proceed to consider the legislative business, namely, the motion of the Honourable the Labour Member to refer the Bill further to amend the Indian Trade Unions Act, 1926, to the Select Committee as well as the amendment moved to it

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil (Bombay Central Division Non-Mulimmiidun Rural)
 Mr. President, when the House rose yesterday, I was referring to the fact that the employers had done nothing in order to encourage sound trade unionism in this country. The argument advanced by them was that it was for labour to build their organisation. It was stated that the employers were always willing to grant recognition and there was no necessity for making provision for the same under the statute of the land. Now, in the course of the last 16 years since the report of the Royal Commission on Labour in India was published, it will be found that no effort worth the name has ever been made by the employers towards the development of sound trade unionism. They are repeating the same plot which they repeated before the Royal Commission on Labour. It was argued by my Honourable friend Mr. Griffiths that they always welcomed healthy growth of trade unionism but he declined to define in clear terms what was really healthy trade unionism. We are troubled with the definition of loyalty. Every citizen who salutes the officer and does not question his authority is a loyal citizen. Similarly every worker who accepts whatever the employer offers is a good trade unionist. If he is prepared to accept everything in the spirit of reward and not in his right for due remuneration he is a good trade unionist. But if he tries to measure his dignity with the employer, the answer is that it is not healthy trade unionism. This plot that the employers have always been willing to encourage trade unionism on healthy lines is one which I cannot accept in the face of facts in reference to which I made a statement yesterday. At the same time I agree that recognition should have been the result of good organisation on the part of labour in this country. Labour has not been so organised. That is the unfortunate part of it.

Mr. President, if I were to read some figures relating to the number of trade unions registered, their membership and how many of them were organised and how many of them failed to give in returns under the provisions of the Trade Union Act, it will be found that even labour in this connection has not come up to the standard. In 1927-28 the number of registered unions was only 29 and the number of trade unions who returned their accounts under the provisions of the Trade Union Act was 28. Now I take the year 1930-31. The number of registered unions was 119, the number of trade unions which made returns was 101 and the total membership was 2,19,000. Now in the year 1935-36 the number of registered unions rose to 211, the number of registered unions which made returns rose to 205 and the membership practically remained the same, namely, 2,68,000. Then I take the pre-war year 1938-39. In this year the number of registered unions rose to 562 whereas the number of trade unions which made the returns was 391 and the membership being roughly 4 lakhs. I take the last year for which figures are available, namely, 1942-43. In this year the number of registered unions was 693 whereas the number of trade unions that submitted returns comes to 489 and the membership came to 6,85,299.

Now, it is obvious that if the trade unions failed to submit returns it only means that there is some deficiency in the organisation. I will not refer to the funds of the various trade unions nor to their management or mismanagement apart from the facts that I have quoted now one thing is clear that the labour is not strongly organised and is not able to secure recognition without the help of State intervention. Now the point is this. If the employers have done nothing to encourage healthy trade unionism and at the same time the labour is not organised and at the same time the strikes are on the increase, which is evident from facts I gave yesterday it becomes the duty of the State to intervene and bring about a state of affairs in which it will be possible to avoid dislocation in industry and to secure peace. It is no longer tenable now to say that the State [Sjt N V Gadgil] should only see that the two contestants observe the rules of the game and the State will only watch from outside the ring. That is no longer tenable for the simple reason that the nature of the State has undergone a great change. The modern State is not merely a police State but it has become in many countries, and gradually it will be here also a sort of social service corporation. If that is so and if that is the future of State in India, it is up to us that we must move in the right direction and also have a right sort of legislation so that we may not have to go through the same process of bitter experience through which other countries have gone. Now, Mr. President so far as the criticism that was levelled against this Bill is concerned, I answered a few points yesterday raised by some of the Honourable Members of the Muslim League Party as well as the Leader of the European Group. In connection with the definition of representative union, Mr. Griffiths said that it would be much better that if the Bill provided a definition in which the whole thing would be left to the provinces. Recognised union should be that union which has been recognised by the Provincial Government, that is what he urged. If I understood him rightly, then it only means that this legislation is absolutely useless. The object of any legislation on the part of the Central Government is, as I said yesterday, to have a normative law—a model law which will be a guide to those of the provinces and the States which constitute the Central Government. Even apart from that Mr. Griffiths knows very well that there are activities in which the Central Government is directly interested, there are in which the Central Government directly exercises. Even for these things there must be some law.

* Mr. P. J. Griffiths (Assam European). On a point of personal explanation. My Honourable friend has misunderstood me. My complaint was that the Bill did not give direction to the provincial governments as to what would constitute a representative union. I pleaded for more direction in the Bill not for less.

Sjt N V Gadgil. However, the point remains that the Central Government must guide for two reasons: one is I said to provide a model or a normative law and secondly to have some law for those areas and in those subjects in which it is directly interested. Another line of criticism that was taken by Dr. Z. Uddin Ahmad is—this is piecemeal legislation. So far as that point is concerned, nobody would welcome it now to have a fuller labour code for this country than myself. But because it is not possible in the immediate future—and when the urgency of such a Bill is practically appreciated I submit that that good should not be considered enemy of the better. Let us proceed on these lines and when time permits have a good labour code so that all matters concerning labour may be incorporated in one code but till such a thing materialises, let us not wait and create fresh difficulties and throw the entire industrial world in a disturbed condition. I am sure it is the object of every section of the House that there must be peace in industry. Now, so the activities of the trade unions so far as this country is concerned have been mainly confined in the course of the last 25 years to a consideration of wages and disputes. Beyond that they have not gone for the simple reason that there was no strong organisation, they had no funds and above all there was no encouragement either from the employers or from the State. Therefore the necessity is now that the State must intervene and if the State has to intervene, the State will do so in a manner most judicious and most impartial.

So concerning the merits of the Bill, it was suggested by my Honourable friend Miss Mam Ben Kara that the rights that will accrue after a union is recognised are not many. According to her, it virtually comes to this that the unions will have merely the right which is defined in section 28F.

* The executive of a recognised trade union shall be entitled to negotiate with employers in respect of matters connected with the employment or non-employment or the terms of employment or the conditions of labour of all or any of its members and the employer shall

I agree, Sir, that this is a matter into which the Select Committee ought to go. If my direction is necessary I may respectfully point out to this House that a Bill has just been passed by the Bombay Legislative Assembly. That Bill is a Bill to regulate the relations of employers and employees, to make provision for settlement of industrial disputes and to provide for certain other purposes. In that Bill there is clause 25 which relates to rights of officers of approved unions, which are really recognised unions. Those rights cover the following points:

to hold discussions with the employees of an undertaking on the premises of the undertaking; to meet and discuss with an employer or any person appointed by him for the purpose all grievances of its members employed in his undertaking; to inspect at any place in any undertaking where any member of the union is employed, at any time reasonable by members to the union on the premises where wages are paid to them, a notice board on the premises of the undertaking in which its members are employed and affix notices thereon."

Further the Bombay Bill provides that an approved union has the right to appear before a Labour Court or an Industrial Court and may apply to the Court for the grant of legal aid at the expense of the provincial Government. Now, Sir, if some of these provisions are incorporated in section 28D, I think that should meet the wishes of my Honourable friend Miss Man. B. K. Now, Sir, so far as the withdrawal provisions are concerned I think if the Statute lays down certain conditions and the object of those conditions is to save trade unions which are recognised, work according to certain standard of efficiency and honesty, there is nothing wrong in it. My Honourable friend Mr. Griffiths referred to certain points which were made out in the report of the Royal Commission on Labour. He stated that the employers were unwilling to grant recognition firstly because the union represented only a minority of workers, secondly there was rival union rivalry, there was some political motive in it, some outsider either in the executive or in the lead and lastly, no registration. Now, Sir, there is a real difficulty in determining the representative character of the union concerned. If a union is so strong in numbers, it will not go to beg for recognition from the employer. It will come to it either by strike or by threat of a strike but it is hardly statesmanship to give recognition as a result or reward of strike. But if the union is not so strong in numbers, does it mean that there should be no recognition of a union merely because it has a small proportion of workers in that particular undertaking or industry. My humble submission is that two tests should be laid down, one of number and/or of the method by which the union functions. In other words, as has been laid down in the report of the Royal Commission on Labour the basis of the entire thing should be reason and not force. If these things are kept in mind, I have no doubt that those who are members of the Select Committee will evolve an acceptable formula whereby it will be possible to fix in suitable language a proper definition of a representative union.

As regards rival unions, the Bombay Bill has made a provision that in the case of any question arising as to which of two unions is better representative the test should be of numbers and the one having larger membership should be recognised. But there is no such thing in the present Bill. Even two unions may be recognised, the proposed section 28D does not bar the existence of two recognised unions, although I should like to agree with the principles that are incorporated in the Bombay Bill.

Now referring to the third circumstance which the employers think is a good ground for refusing recognition, namely, political opinions, I should say that it comes all from the employers. So long as the system of franchise is not entirely territorial, so long as interests are represented, so long as commerce and industry want representation in the provincial legislature as well as in the Central, labour interests must be represented wherever commercial and industrial interests are represented. If that is so—and it is so even under the provisions of the present constitution—how can you bar consideration of political matters if they come at the proper occasion before any trade union? It may be that you may not like the politics of one union, it may be that you may not like the ideology of another, but so long as man is a political being—and I am sure even the employers are prepared to concede that claim to poor labourers—they cannot but think in political terms on occasions. If it is said that because of the presence of political agitators it is not possible to go ahead and grant recognition, I can only repeat the words which have been used by the Royal Commission on Labour, namely, that a dishonest political worker will not have a long innings in any trade union, for labourers surely have as much common sense as any of us and they do not take long to understand who really stands for their interests and who does not. Therefore this is something which ought not to weigh with us in considering whether that should be a good circumstance for refusing recognition, and I am glad that it has not been made so in the present Bill.

Now about unfair practices by the employers some complaint has been made. I particularly invite your attention to proposed section 28k(d) which relates to discharging or discriminating against a workman who has made allegations or given evidence in any proceedings. So you will remember that you were an arbitrator in certain proceedings in connection with a dispute between an engineering firm and its employees. One of its engineers was good enough to prepare a brief for me and supply me with all the necessary statistics. As soon as your award, which was greatly appreciated all over my province, was given, within a month of that this engineer was sacked. If I were to tell the House about the political views of that firm they are more communistic than the actual members of the Communist party. But they victimised the man, the workers went on strike. Again as a matter of settlement a judge of the Bombay High Court was appointed to decide whether it was a case of victimisation. The judge held that it was victimisation but had no power to rectify it and he could not do anything except to give some amount by way of damages. He ordered that the Engineer should be paid one year's salary. How can you prevent this except by making victimisation a offence? If on the one hand you provide in this Bill that it will be an unfair practice for a trade union for a majority of its members to take part in an irregular strike—this phrase 'irregular' is new and includes 'illegal' strike—and for the executive of the union to advise or actively to support or to instigate an irregular strike, the State—if it is to hold the scales even—must make a corresponding provision which will affect the employers. And my only regret is that it is not sufficiently strong.

I will now refer to some points which have been urged by my Honourable friend Mr Joshi. I think his speech justified his nomination—it was a pity that he was not here throughout. In his speech he said that there is no definition of the word 'industry', and I am sure the Select Committee will take this point into consideration. But if I may be of any help in indicating the lines on which the Select Committee may proceed, I will draw attention to the fact that the word 'industry' has been defined in the Bombay Bill to which I made reference just now, in section 2(18) of that Bill. And the word ought to be defined here also. In the original Act the object was not so comprehensive as is the object of the present Bill. This covers altogether a new field. There was perhaps no necessity felt for defining the word 'industry' at the time when the original Act was passed. But when you are extending the scope of that Act by amending it I think it is a case in which this word should be defined, and I am sure it will be done. Then Mr Joshi made a very good point that if the industrial court decides anything this decision of the industrial court is not binding on the Government. It is laid down in clause 28F that 'the Industrial Court shall investigate whether the Trade Union fulfils the conditions for recognition set out in section 28D, and shall forward the application to the appropriate Government with a report and a recommendation regarding the grant or withholding of recognition'. On receipt of the application for recognition and the report referred to under sub-section (3) the appropriate Government, if satisfied that the Trade Union is fit to be recognised may by notification in the official Gazette, declare the Trade Union to be a 'Recognised Trade Union'. I agree with him that if there is a necessity for some judicial machinery to determine whether a union is entitled to be a recognised union and when you lay down the conditions.

which ought to weigh with the judicial authority or quasi-judicial authority, it would not be very fair to say that the Government if otherwise satisfied will accept the finding. "It satisfied has caused me great dissatisfaction for it means that the Government will take into consideration such other things as are not mentioned in the Bill as necessary conditions for recognition. Possibly political considerations may weigh. I think, Sir, that just as I have appealed to the employers and I have condemned them for not doing what they should do, I will also appeal to the Government to give much more thought to this point which has been raised by Mr. Joshi. If the Industrial Court gives the finding that a particular Union is entitled to recognition, the Government ought to accept its finding on them."

In this connection again I wish to point out to the House that in the recent Bill which was passed by the Bombay Assembly to which I have already made reference, there is a provision—clause 95—by which the findings of the Industrial Court in binding on the parties to the dispute and Government or any department of the Government under the direction of which any industry or any undertaking is managed is equally subject to it. This is what clause 95 says:

"An order, decision or award of the Industrial Court shall be binding on:

(a) all parties to the industrial dispute who appeared or were represented before it;
(b) all parties who were summoned to appear as parties to the dispute whether they appeared or not, unless the Industrial Court is of opinion that they were improperly ~~not~~ parties;

(c) in the case of an employer who is a party to the proceeding before such Court in respect of the undertaking to which the dispute relates, his successors, heirs or assigns in respect of the undertaking to which the dispute relates; and

(d) in the case of a registered union which is a party to the proceeding before such Court all persons represented by the union at the date of the award, as well as thereafter."

I therefore submit that to bring about better relations between the employers and the employees and really to further the object, which it is stated is the object of bringing forward this Bill, I think the recommendations of the Industrial Court should be considered as binding on the parties. I therefore submit, Sir, that all these points which are put before this House will be taken into consideration by the Select Committee and the Bill that will emerge from the Select Committee will be acceptable generally to the whole House. Sir, I support the motion.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai (Ahmedabad Millowners' Association, Indian Commerce). Before I come to the original Bill, Sir, I would like to state a few things about the circulation motion that has been made by my Honourable friend, Mr. Ishaq Seth. It is a move which is very unfair to labour, especially when this Bill had been mooted originally in the year 1940. It is now nearly six years that the matter is pending, it would be wrong to keep this matter pending any further. If the Government allow any further delay in this matter it would be reasonable if the labour accuse the Government for not looking to the interests of labour as well as they ought to.

One of the reasons given in support of circulation is that there is some suggestion in clause 28D that communal unions may not be recognized. I would just like to remind this House about the amount of trouble there is already in the communal field. The communal trouble is not only harmed the whole country, but the industry also has been harmed to a great extent. Labour has lost millions of rupees in wages, and we must have lost millions of yards of cloth and various other consumers goods. If we take these communal differences into the factory premises and if we ask that labour may be divided into two or several communal groups, the danger would be that the strife, of which we are all tired, would get into the industrial field. Factories are good so long as they produce goods, factories are dangerous if fight gets into the factory premises. In view of this it would be very unfair to labour if we waste any further time. I would therefore suggest to the Honourable the Labour Member that as we have considered the Bill in all its aspects for the last so many years, the Select Committee may be asked to finish their work in a day or two, and if that can be done, we can pass this Bill even in this Session. If the Select Committee appointed today, they can meet this evening and tomorrow and finish their work as soon as possible. It is a simple matter. All the points have already been put forth in various aspects, and so I hope that we will be able to pass this Bill in this very Session.

I would like to judge the Bill by two tests. If these tests are satisfied, I would say that the Bill is good, if not, the Bill is bad. Wherever we find that these objects are not satisfied, we must try to improve the Bill and put it on the right lines. These two tests are: firstly, the improvement and stabilisation of labour conditions and improvement of labour welfare, and secondly, the efficiency of the industry should not be injured by any provision whatsoever. If the industry is not run on efficient lines ultimately the whole country and even labour will suffer. We are a backward country industrially. We must run our industries to be put on a par with those of the West and America. If we have to see that we do not put any clause inadvertently which may be harmful to industry. If we do not run the industries efficiently and the industries are started, protection has to be granted and that for a long time. How long are we going to protect industries which run inefficiently? No labour or industrial legislation should be introduced to injure industry in any way.

Further, I must add that my honourable friend, Mr. Joshi, clarified certain points. This time I decided to speak later, so that many points may be clarified from various sides of the House, because my experience of the last session was that anything coming from an industrialist may be viewed with suspicion, and if it had come from me I fear some of the good points made by my friend, Mr. Joshi, would have been taken otherwise. If we remember the discussions in the last session on the Factory Act (Amendment) Bill, we may recall what happened. Some suggestions were made. Government had made suggestions in the Objects of the Bill while amending the Factory Act, et c., that certain industries would require some exemption from the 8 hour working day provision; that the cloth production being low, they would have to see that its production is not jeopardised; that the textile industry should be allowed some time to adjust itself. But anything coming from an industrialist was suspect, and that is why I feel that it is good I am speaking at this hour. My friend Dr. Ziauddin was talking of burning all mills. That has been his hobby. This is not the first time he has been talking about that.

Sgt. N. V. Gadgil: He has many hobbies!

Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai: Whom is he going to harm? The industries are well protected for all risks—it is the public consumer and the country that will suffer. That is not the way to talk of industrial labour relations. I know that my friend does not know what industrial relations are. He may be a good mathematician. He remains in his university and therefore it is permissible for him to say anything as he may like without actually knowing the facts.

Now, coming to the Bill, some of the points have been already clarified by my honourable friends, Mr. Joshi, Mr. Griffiths and Mr. Gadgil. I would not therefore dilate upon them much, but I would like to say something about the character of a representative union. I do not want to create controversies here today as to whether there should be compulsion in recognising a union or not. I would wish that there is no compulsion. But even if there is any compulsion, I would not mind. So far as we in Ahmedabad are concerned, we have had very good labour relations. There was no question of whether a union is recognised or not; rather we went further. We had permanent arbitration boards and they were run so well that the whole world was watching them and wondering how in Ahmedabad things could go on peacefully between employers and employees and this system was in existence till 1938 when the Bombay Bill came into existence and the Industrial Courts took their place. However, if there is to be compulsion I do not mind. But at the same time one has to be very careful in revising a Bill as a result of which any union that may be recognised may be a perfect trade union. I would therefore propose that in Section 28F we must put in some sub-clauses which would clarify the position further. I agree with my friend, Mr Gadgil, that there may be politics in unions but let the politics not come into the factory. While we are working the factories the factories must be run economically, and not on political basis. Politics would come in only so far as the wages are concerned, or profit-sharing is concerned, or nationalization of industries is concerned.

Regarding my suggestions as to further points which should be added for conditions of recognition, I would suggest the following:

(1) That its rules provide for peaceful and legitimate methods being followed in all disputes with employers,

(2) That its rules provide for control of the union by actual workers representing a substantial number of persons whom the union claims to represent

(3) That its rules provide for prohibition of strikes without notice

We find in Clause 3 this

'(f) after clause (i) as relettered by this section, the following clause shall be inserted, namely

'(j) "strike" and "illegal strike" have the meanings respectively assigned to them in the Trade Disputes Act, 1929 (VII of 1929), and "irregular strike" means an illegal strike or a strike declared by a Trade Union in contravention of its rules referred to in clause (d) of sub-section (1) of section 28D,'"

Now in this Trade Disputes Act, 1929 we find there is no provision for notice for going on strike. Does this mean that if the employee wants to go on strike, the employer will not give notice? In all progressive legislation, this provision for giving notice will be found.

The Trade Disputes Act, 1929 does not provide for any notice. I would therefore suggest that just as in the case of the latest Bombay Industrial Relations Bill there should be a notice and consultation clause, and then employees can go on strike or employers can declare a lock out.

I wish this Bill be considered so that there may not be any trouble and any loss of production so far as the country is concerned. So far as the industry is concerned, whatever industry is established, Government will have to protect it in one way or another, but the loss will not be only of the industry, but it will be of the consumers and also of labour indirectly.

I would further desire that in sub-clause 28D we have the following

(1) That its rules provide for membership of union being purely voluntary and

(2) That its rules provide for the maintenance of proper records of subscriptions collected and of negotiations with employers.

Sir, speaking about representative unions nothing is mentioned here as to which should be considered as representative unions. As my friend Mr Joshi has said the clause should clearly specify as to which shall be considered as representative unions. In this matter at least a certain percentage of membership ought to be specified. You can register a union with even one or ten members. Are you to consider that union as a representative union? I am sure that this should be clarified.

Regarding industrial courts I would not like to dilate upon as sufficient has been said on it. There will be eminent judges on the board and their decision ought to be final. When the Industrial Courts considers the application of a union for recognition there is no provision that the employers should also be consulted. I want the employers to be consulted, not because the employers would want to intervene in the recognition but there may be certain information in their possession which would be useful or which would help the Industrial Court to decide whether all the facts put before it are correct and can be relied upon. Many unions when they ask for recognition do not give up all the facts. As suggested in clause 28G, sub-clauses a, b, c, even for these reasons alone

[Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai] employers should be consulted so that they may be able to give any information that may be in their possession

Now coming to the most important part of the Bill about unfair practices, I would refer you to clause 28J. It is said

"The following shall be deemed to be unfair practices on the part of a recognised Trade union, namely —

- (a) For a majority of the members of the union to take part in an irregular strike"

Mark the words "majority of the members". The result of this wording would be that the employees can shatter or ruin an industry by going on factorywise strikes. The industry may consist of several factories. If there are 50 factories in an industry the union in every one of the factories will go on strike one after the other and bring them down to their point of view by sheer coercion. I feel that these words have been put in inadvertently, because if a majority of the members of a union have to strike, they will be striking in all the factories. It is a very dangerous proposition. Why talk of only an industry. Take any occupation. The men can go on strike. The occupation may only contain 50, 100 or 200 men and if those men are taken away the whole industry will have to close down and still it will not be an unfair practice.

Sub-clause (b) says it will be an unfair practice "for the executive of the Union to advise or actively to support or to instigate an irregular strike". Suppose the executive of a union does not pass a resolution calling for a strike but informally leaves every member of the Executive free to instigate a strike, will it not be an unfair practice according to this Bill? Is it the intention of the Bill that every individual member of the executive will be free to instigate a strike? I do not think that that would be the purpose of the Bill. Therefore I submit that there is defect in the language of the bill.

Coming to clause 28K, it is said

"The following shall be deemed to be unfair practices on the part of an employer, namely —

- (c) to encourage or discourage membership of any Trade Union by discrimination in regard to hire or tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment"

What does this mean? How are we going to prove discrimination? Whom are we to hire or engage. Suppose there are only half a dozen posts vacant and there are 12 members of different unions wanting those posts. Whom shall we engage, either of one union or the other? Will it not be discrimination against one union or the other? It is a very dangerous provision and I wish it is deleted. Otherwise it would create such an amount of complication that you will not be able to decide as to what discrimination means.

Sir, it is often said that law is an ass.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: But not the lawyer!

Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai: Lawyers also misunderstand things. One court will say one thing and another court another thing. If there is going to be this difficulty about discrimination what penalty will you impose? The employer may think that he is fair in employing.

Syed Ghulam Bhik Nairang (East Punjab Muhammadan). Sir, is the Honourable Member in order in discussing the clauses at such great detail at this stage?

Mr. President: His object seems to be to point to certain lacunae to which he thinks the attention of the Select Committee requires to be invited. That is what he is mentioning. His main argument seems to be that the various clauses in the Bill are so vaguely worded that they will produce dangerous results, if they are allowed to stand as they are.

Syed Ghulam Bhik Nairang: That can be considered by the members of the Select Committee.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member will put his arguments shortly

Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai: In connection with this clause I was also talking about penalty. The employer does not know or does not understand what will be an unfair practice according to him. The courts may have such a vague understanding about discrimination and if the employer is to be fined, I think the interests of both employer and the employee will not be served. There will be a lot of indiscipline, because while employing people in emergencies the unions may have to be consulted and one union may say one thing and another another thing and there will be trouble. Again, I find that penalty has been laid on the head of the employer only. I do not understand why it should not be bothways, if there is to be penalty at all. The Swedish law is considered most progressive so far as labour legislation is concerned. Once the conciliation machinery arrives at a decision, the law provides that whoever breaks the law will be penalised. I would therefore wish that if there is to be penalty it should apply to both or rather I wish that there is no penalty clause at all. Because the relationship between employers and employees should not be spoiled in any way. They have both to work together day in and day out and if there is anything in the Bill that would harm this relationship I would say that that Bill is not worth having. There are a few such clauses in this Bill and I hope we may be able to remove some of them and put better clauses in their place.

Regarding the vagueness in the Bill generally, I say that many things have been left to the appropriate government. That is not correct. I P. M. After all, rule-making powers are for fulfilling the objects of any Bill. They should not lay down any particular provisions which can go against the Bill and as far as possible the powers of the appropriate government should be as few as possible. With these few words I conclude my remarks.

Mr. S. Guruswami (Nominated Non-official). Sir, I rise to support the motion for reference to the Select Committee. After seeing the empty benches opposite and having heard the lengthy speeches of the previous speakers on the subject, I have very little enthusiasm to dilate on this Bill, except to draw the attention of members of this House to certain salient points.

We have heard eloquent speeches about the defects of the Bill in so far as it seeks to confer certain rights on certain unions. But in the beginning I should like to say that the Trade Union Act itself is defective in not allowing many workers to form themselves into trade unions for registration. I know of certain trade union registrars who have refused registration of unions on the ground that the workers therein are not employed in any trade or industry. If the definition of industry had been of the description which was rightly pointed out by my honourable friend Mr. Gadgil, then this difficulty would not have arisen, but bona fide cases of trade unions where applications have been made for registration and refused, have occurred, and this is the occasion for the member in charge of the Bill to rectify that difficulty by amplifying the definition of workmen, and the trade unions as defined in this Act.

Secondly, the Act says "A trade union includes also a federation of trade unions." The rights of a recognised federation of trade unions should be of a different order than the one specified in this Bill. That is a matter to which I would like to draw the attention of the Honourable Member in charge of this Bill.

Thirdly, certain members, especially my friend Mr. Nauman, wanted that the clause relating to communal unions should be eliminated. If that clause is eliminated, let me make it perfectly clear, all the good that is contemplated under this Bill will go. We would rather have no unions than have communalism in trade unions. That is the attitude which the working classes have.

What are the privileges conferred by this Bill? The rights that are conferred relate to four types of unions—unions which are recognised by the [Mr S. Guruswami] employers, government recognised unions through the industrial courts, unregistered unions, and lastly registered but non-recognised unions. These four types of unions are covered within the clauses of this Bill, and what this Bill proposes to do is to make the unions recognised by the employers—whatever be the reasons for that—and unions which are approved by the government to be on an equal footing, and to confer on the members of unrecognised unions certain rights in so far as union practices on the part of the employers are concerned, by protecting them against such union practices. That clause relating to union practices is copied from a legislation in a country in America. It is a perfect copy—even the punctuation mistake is there!—and I do not think that any employer should complain about it.

But what I am worried about is this: this Bill ostensibly provides for very big privileges, but in fact it only confers this right, the right of getting negative replies. The right of getting negative replies is not recognition. That is not what the workers want. What the workers want is this: if there is a bona fide union—no matter whether the employer recognises it or not—it should be recognised by the government as such.

Why should there be a clause about representative trade unions? Every trade union is representative of its members, and who is that gentleman here or anywhere outside who dares to question the representative character of any such trade union, in so far as its own members are concerned?

Then, unless you make the recognition worth getting by the union, the stage has come when unions do not care for recognition. Let me make that perfectly clear. I take it that this Bill is a recognition of the fact that it is more for the good of the employer himself to recognise unions than for the workers. If you lay down the policy that no union should go on strike without conducting negotiations, if it is an approved policy that the trade union concerned should be given the opportunity to represent, then what are the privileges which this Bill gives? It gives the right of getting a negative reply. That is all. I say a recognised union must be entitled to get not only a reply. Even a cat may look at a king and may get a reply from him. That is not what the recognised trade union should get. It must get reasoned replies. It must get the employer's version of the cases referred to him. All the data that is available to him must be made available to a recognised union, so that proper conclusions may be formed and avoidable disputes may be avoided. But if you only say that under the provisions of this Bill a reply can be vouchsafed for that recognised union, unions will not care to get that recognition at all. We want that there should be the right of concluding collective agreements. There is no reference to that word at all in any of these measures that are now before this House. A trade union is not worth its name unless it is given the right to conclude collective agreements. It must have the right to be consulted before any conditions of service are altered, otherwise what is the use of its recognition? And yet we have opposition on the part of vested interests—and left-handed support on the part of some—saying "We are in favour of the Bill, but please circulate it." That is not the proper way of dealing with this question.

Any disruptive tendency in the trade union movement must be resisted. The Trade Union Act not only confers the right for any seven fools to form a trade union; it does not prevent any such seven men to form an infinite number of unions. The same seven members can form an infinite number of unions and get them registered under the Trade Union Act. There is no protection against such weakening of unions in so far as the workers are concerned. Therefore I submit that we must resist tendencies to form sectional unions, tendencies to form communal unions and denominational unions. We should resist that tendency and a registrar should not simply proceed to register a union because within the four corners of the Trade Union Act a particular organisation claims to have fulfilled all the qualifications that are required under it.

Therefore this is the occasion for Honourable Members to prevent the formation, registration and recognition of bogus unions. Otherwise all this legislation about the recognition or registration is of no good. Let me make that perfectly clear once again.

Then I have another thing to say. I do not want to accept the suggestion made by my honourable friend Mr. Lallubhai that a provision should be made for voluntary membership of a union. On the other hand I go to the other extreme. I do not know whether my friends here who represent labour share my view but I have been of this view for a long time that membership in a trade union must be compulsory and not voluntary. Non-members of the unions are exploiters and parasites who live on the gains of the labour of those who are members of the unions. They take all the benefits given to the members. If the employers only give the members of the unions the benefits secured by the unions concerned it is all right but the benefits which are secured by a union go to non-members as well and the employers have a two-fold policy in dealing with unions. First resist the recognition as far as possible and if that is inevitable create bogus unions and give too much of recognition to bogus organisations. These two tendencies must be combated. Unless those things are prevented in this Bill with proper safeguards, the benefits sought to be conferred by this Bill will be nugatory in effect and I therefore appeal to Honourable Members to see that trade union membership is made compulsory, that bogus unions are not encouraged, that multiplicity of unions is discouraged, that sectional unions are not recognised, that all workers who are members of bona fide trade unions are permitted to be registered and also to be recognised under the provisions of this Act and to confer on the recognised unions real benefits, not the paper benefit of the right to get negative replies which are sought to be given by this Bill. These are the suggestions I have got to make. I do not propose to make a long speech on this subject now. In the course of about 10 minutes, I have stated 10 points and I hope they would receive the consideration of the members of the Select Committee.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras Ceded Districts and Chittoor Non-Muhammadan Rural) Labour has spoken. Capitalists have spoken. It is the turn of the layman to speak. I am the person who suffers, along with the rest of the people of this country, if labour and capital go on engaging in eternal warfare. Unfortunately during the past few years, at any rate during the last two or three years, we have been seeing strikes after strikes from end to end and the strikes have gone so far that even the non-gazetted officers in Madras went on strike against the Ministry that came into office recently. I feel that in the interests of the community organised and contented labour is absolutely necessary. It is an asset both to the industry and to the nation. Therefore this half hearted measure to encourage labour unions and when they are organised, to recognise them is not sufficient. I would like labour should be organised both horizontally and vertically all over this country. I will make my point clear. If there are 20 labourers in a factory, then it comes under the Factories Act. Wherever there are groups of 20 persons, the Labour Department must go there and recognise it and ask it to form a union. There shall be no factory without a labour union. Every industry, as soon as it is formed, will automatically come under the Factories Act and there shall be a labour union attached to it. It shall consist of all members who are employed in that particular factory. Wholesome provisions should be made both in this Act and future Acts to safeguard against sabotage by individual workmen to safeguard the interests of the industry. There may be individual workmen who may be entrusted with an important piece of machinery and they may not care for the industry. Collectively they will be interested in the industry. It is to the interest of the employer himself to see that organised labour is there to take care of the industry, in order to see that sabotage at the sweet will and pleasure of an individual is prevented. There must be for each industry a labour union in a particular place. All labour unions must join together in a federation, to whatever denomination they may belong. There must be branches in the villages, taluqs, districts and there must be a central organisation for the country as a whole for each industry at the centre. There will be an organisation of all labour unions, embracing as widely as possible all persons who are employed in labour.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member may continue his speech after lunch.

The Assembly then adjourned for lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. President (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: My request at the outset is that the Clock in the Library should be set right. It is going five minutes slow as compared to our time. I have been looking at that clock and that is the reason why I am late.

Sir, I was submitting to the House that labour must be organised horizontally and vertically and I explained also how it ought to be done. There may be a large element of compulsion but I do not agree with my Honourable friend the Baronet from Bombay who sits on my right. He says 'labour must lend itself to organise. It has been left to organise for itself. How is he afraid of compulsion?' Are we not used to compulsion in various departments in our social activities? Today there is a cry that there should be free and compulsory education. Are we not, most of us, uneducated? Unless our children are educated, they cannot be civilised. In spite of all this, everybody knows how many of us are putting our children into the schools. There is an element of compulsion in the Health Department where we are compulsorily vaccinated. I do believe it is necessary that so far as labour is concerned, it must be compulsorily organised. Have they failed to organise themselves in the right lines? In some cases they have organised themselves, but in some other cases they have failed to organise themselves. Let us not be terribly afraid of compulsion. I agree with my friend Mr. Gujarauni that it ought not be left to any individual labourer to keep out of the organisation. Any man who is out of it will be a danger to the rest of the organisation. It is by splitting these organisations that the employers have been able to have their own way till now in dealing with them. Therefore, every member, every worker shall be compulsorily a member of that organisation. I would also urge that so far as their disputes are concerned, the provision in the Bill is a good one and I welcome it.

Sir, there are two provisions in the Bill which ought to make this Bill quite acceptable to the House. One is with regard to the Industrial Court and the other relates to victimisation by the employers. If for nothing else, for these two provisions alone this Bill ought to be immediately accepted. We need not wait till January or some other time. This Bill can be passed through the Select Committee and then made into an Act. There are various other matters which can be brought in as and when circumstances permit and this piece of legislation might be pushed through the Legislature. And when all the necessary legislation on this subject is passed, there may be a Code. Till then, individual matters must be taken and they ought not to stand in the way of this piece of legislation.

I also want one or two matters to be put into this Bill. I am anxious, having regard to the manner in which strikes have been organised by persons who are not real workmen but persons who are interested in various other matters and who have taken hold of these labour unions. To avoid that, there must be a wholesome provision. I do not want these strikes unless it is impossible for the workmen or the 'abcurers' to get what they want at the hands of the employers.

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated non-official) Who is to decide that?

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I do want this Industrial Court to decide or let there be compulsory arbitration for that matter. It ought not be optional either to the workman or to the employer to jointly agree to arbitration. At the instance of either party, the dispute ought to be referred to arbitration and before any strike is organised, all means of settling the matter ought to be exhausted. There is a provision in the Bill stating the manner in which a strike is organised and the manner in which the notice of a strike is given. All that has got to be provided for. There is a provision here that every trade union shall make provision for the manner in which the strike is organised. Therefore, it is quite appropriate to suggest that all methods of amicable settlement or even of reference to arbitration should be exhausted before a strike is organised. It must be open to the court or to the arbitrator to say that the employer has failed to satisfy the labour and therefore they are at liberty to strike. Till then, there should be no strike. I urge this in the interests of the community as a whole. Take the case of the railways. There are about three or four lakhs of workmen there. They might have grown in size now on account of the war. If they go on strike, the rest of the community have to suffer merely because on the one side the Government does not fulfil their demands and on the other the workmen push them too high. Let there be no impression that these two parties have to quarrel eternally like cats and dogs. We have got our civilisation and we can chalk out a new path and show that these people can live harmoniously and they can settle their differences amicably. Therefore, the Industrial Court must be empowered to decide not only individual cases of grievance but also major issues between the workmen on the one side and the employer on the other as to whether the wages have got to be increased or not. In default of the employers agreeing to this provision which is made in the interests of the industry as a whole, a strike can be started.

I find that there is a lacuna in the Bill which can be set right in the Select Committee. What the Bill says is that the Industrial Court shall have jurisdiction over those matters only which are enumerated in Chapter IIIA. It says

"For the purposes of this Chapter, the appropriate Government shall appoint such number of Industrial Courts as it considers necessary."

That Chapter refers only to recognition of trade unions. Chapter IIIB relates to unfair practices and clause 7 refers to penalty for unfair practices. Therefore, whenever an employer is guilty of an unfair practice, he is to be punished to the extent of a thousand rupees by way of penalty. The Industrial Court does seem to have jurisdiction over that because it is in a different Chapter. Why should the jurisdiction of the Industrial Court be restricted to mere recognition of trade unions and not extend to disputes regarding unfair practices? In case the Court comes to the conclusion that the employer is guilty of any unfair practice, why should he not be punished? Why should not the Court have a jurisdiction in that matter? Therefore, in the interests of the trade itself labour must be organised.

Now, I come to the motion for circulation to elicit public opinion. Sir, my Honourable friend who is now sitting on the other side himself recognised, and so must all other persons who are interested in this country, that religion has played out its part in the world. All honour to the old prophets who came at a time when there were warring elements in the country and they brought all the warring elements under one banner. Religions, as they originally started, were merely to remove differences between man and man and to inculcate the doctrine of brotherhood in many and to elevate man into a divine being. But today, those very religions unfortunately symbolise the outer crust, the inner spirit has disappeared, and those very religions are disturbing factors in society. We have now therefore to find new points of everlasting and enduring benefit to humanity. Students of religion should not talk today of nationalism, internationalism etc., but should talk of humanity.

[Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar]

and the common good of the entire humanity should take the place of individual and a warring religions. I wish that all persons who are really interested in their own religion, in Islam, in Christianity or in Hinduism will really try to imbibe this spirit of real Islam, real Christianity and real Hinduism. Even these prophets of religion have advised their respective followers and all humanity as a whole to bring all people together and enjoined on their followers that they should bring about peace and happiness on earth and not create cause for discord which does not serve the tenets of God or his dictates. Therefore I would urge upon my Honourable friend that under this common platform of labour union, all communities may join. If some unions have been started on communal lines, well, let us own that a mistake has been made. It is time that these mistakes are rectified. Today each community may be proud of its own religion, but it does not see the danger ahead. There is communism rearing its head, communism does not talk of any religion. The communists are out to divide one community from another, they are out to destroy all religions. There will be communism from one end to another. There will be absolutely no faith in God left in the land. Let us try to prevent this catastrophe. I call upon all people who are believers in God, by whatever name the one God is called. I urge upon my Honourable friend Mr. Abdus Sattar Haji Ishaq Seth to withdraw his motion for circulation or at any rate not to press it. What are we to gain by this circulation among the industrialists or employers, who have not moved in this matter at all or among organised labour unions. The industrialists will simply say there shall be no element of compulsion. We have already in this House the mouthpieces of industrialists of this country, the one to my right, Sir Cowasjee Jehangir, and the other to my left Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai. They are the exponents of the theory of no compulsion, no freedom so far as trade unionism is concerned. As regards labour, we have got the exponents of labour problems here of both sexes, including my honourable friend Miss Maniben Kara who believes in class war and class hatred. I therefore submit that if this Bill goes to circulation for eliciting public opinion, we know what pattern of opinion we are going to get. The industrialists will say, no compulsion, labour will say, let us have as many amenities as possible. In these circumstances we are not going to gain anything by this circulation. I urge that this motion may be dropped and this Bill may be sent to the Select Committee and more beneficent measures may be adopted in the Select Committee and I hope that after this Bill emerges from this Select Committee, it will be a first class measure for the purpose of orderly maintenance of industry in this country.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram (Labour Member) Mr. President, Sir, I do not want to enter into a lengthy debate at this hour in the House. Different speakers from different parts of this Honourable House have expressed their opinion on the different aspects of the measure before the House and the objections raised by certain sections have been met by other sections of the House and my task has been rendered less difficult to a very great extent. As regards the salient features of the Bill I shall never take credit for the same, because the Bill was introduced by my predecessor. I shall readily agree that there is sufficient scope for the improvement in the Bill and I shall try my best to meet all reasonable points, that have been raised now, in the Select Committee. But there are certain points on which I think, if Government were to yield, it will be detrimental not only to labour but to the industry as well. On those points, I am afraid I am not going to yield. The purpose of the Bill as I conceive it, is not only to give some benefit to labour alone but to industry as well. Labour and industry are inseparable factors, the one depends upon the other. One cannot work without the other, and therefore each has got to look to the interest of both. If industry looks to the interest of labour, it is in the interest of industry itself. Similarly if labour looks to the interest of industry, I may say, it is not merely in the interest of industry but it is in the interest of labour as well Sir, the very idea of collective bargaining, if I may be permitted to say so, is not only in the interest of labour but it is also in the interest of capital it is also in the interest of industry

My Honorable friend Mr Griffiths, when he was very analytically criticising the various points in the Bill made a remark that I may feel distressed by his remarks I may assure my Honourable friend that I did not feel distressed in the least But I may very well urge upon him that the industrialists should mark the signs of the time, they should realise that the time has come when they cannot afford to ignore the demands of labour The time has come when they cannot afford not to recognise the organisation of workers unless they are forced to do so If I may say so, Sir, many of the disputes that arise between labour and industry between employers and employees are on this issue of recognition of unions If one were to analyse and study the large number of strikes that have become a common feature of the day, one will admit the fact unhesitatingly that in the majority of cases, the dispute arose on this question Where the workers are organised sufficiently, the management is forced to recognise them, but after the relation between them has deteriorated to a very great extent that ultimately results not only in strike, but it leads to great suffering to labour and also entails great loss to capital and over and above that great inconvenience to the consumers at large So, Sir the Government of today cannot afford to be silent spectators of the disputes between employers and employees because it is not only these two parties who suffer but it is the public at large, the nation at large and the consumers at large who also suffer Sir, the Government have got to interfere in these matters I am afraid, Sir, this measure ought to have been on the statute book long before If some objections are raised today by one party or the other I have to say that they are not realising the signs of the times

With regard to the motion for circulation moved by my Honourable friend Mr Ismaiq Sethi I submit that the Bill has been before the country for the last six years,—though not in this identical form,—and its principles have been discussed more than once They have been discussed by the various Provincial Governments, by employers' organisations and workers' organisations, and other bodies On certain points, of course, opinions are divergent as they are here, but on a measure like this we cannot—at least I cannot—conceive of complete unanimity And the fact that from this measure neither the workers nor the employers are fully satisfied shows that the measure is not partial to one side or the other The measure is one which seeks to give certain rights to labour but at the same time it also states that industry should not be placed at a handicap

While initiating the debate my Honourable friend Dr Zia Uddin introduced certain fundamental things I,—and, as he reminded me, the class I come from,—feel that it will be a happy day indeed when these principles would be adopted in this country and the economic set-up of the country started on these lines He talked of nationalisation, failing which, national socialism I do not want to express any opinion on these two principles But I may say that if any change in the economic set-up were to be effected, the class I come from and the community I represent will not lose anything It is the community which stands to gain by any such economic reconstruction But we have not got to look at these things and wait for such times as the differences between employers and workers, between capital and labour and between the exploiters and the exploited are removed We cannot afford to wait till then and let things take their own course And therefore we have to devise some measures in the existing circumstances in the four corners of the economic structure of our present society to safeguard the interests of labour and also to see that the industries prosper with a view to catering to the needs of the country And this is a measure which seeks to improve the relation between the employers and the workers I believe many of the differences which arise between the employers and their workers can be resolved if chances were taken for mutual negotiation, discussion and conciliation between them And for that we have got to devise some machinery. The employers employing hundreds and thousands of workers cannot afford to discuss questions with each and every one of them, and it will not be expedient on the part of labour to allow negotiations between each worker and the management. Therefore it is to the interest of the employers as well the workers to have an organisation and an agency which may in case of differences carry on negotiations and settle these differences. After all, that is the object which this Bill seeks to achieve. It wants that recognition should be given to organisations of workers, so that in the long run they may have an opportunity of negotiating and settling any differences that may arise, and there should not be any difficulty on that score. As I have urged, it is in the interest of both employers and the workers.

A point has been made that there is a germ of compulsion in it. Of course that is one of the salient features of this Bill and it has got to be there because industrialists and employers by taking advantage of their strength and influence have tried not to recognise organisations and unions of workers serving under them. There have been occasions when employers would like to negotiate with persons at the helm of affairs in the unions unofficially rather than deal with them officially. They are afraid that if they negotiate with them as presidents or secretaries of labour organisations they will be recognising these labour unions, they therefore negotiate with the office-bearers, if they happen to be public men of influence, in their unofficial capacity because they are afraid that if they do not negotiate with them they will have to suffer badly. And ultimately when the workers are compelled to take recourse to certain steps, most of the employers are forced to recognise the unions. And this Bill intends that this mutual friction between the employer and the workers may be obviated. Therefore, Sir, I feel that there should be no ground for any objection on the part of employers to this measure.

Some complaint has been made here by the representatives of the workers that the terms and conditions which have been laid down for the recognition of unions are unnecessary. I hold the contrary view because I feel that these terms and conditions are necessary in the interest of the workers' organisations themselves. I want the workers' organisations—their trade union—to be efficient and above board. And for this purpose these terms and conditions are necessary. I have some personal experience of the working of trade unions, not so big of course as my Honourable friend Mr. Joshi and other friends have worked, and I know the drawbacks and defects of those unions. If these terms and conditions are carried out faithfully it will make the unions stronger and more efficient and therefore I hold Sir that these conditions are necessary.

One point that has been made here with some force is that the Bill has not given any definition of a 'representative union'. That has been purposely done. In a Bill like this to which several Provincial Governments have to give effect, some elasticity is necessary. The conditions of labour movement in different provinces are not similar. Some provinces are much more industrially advanced than other provinces and in those provinces the organisation of labour, the organisation of working classes, as well as the Government machinery which deals with them, are elaborate. In other provinces the machinery of the Provincial Governments is just in the initial stages. The organisation of workers in many provinces and in many industries has not started as yet. I am afraid we cannot lay down any universal condition for the unions of workers to be representative in different parts of the country. They have to be different in different parts of the country and even in different industries. If I were to make this point or to develop this point a bit further I may submit that the same percentage of workers in a union for the union to be really representative can not be insisted upon in the case of the workers working in the TATAS and in the case of the workers working in the coal fields. The percentage has to be fixed differently in these two cases. And similarly many examples may be given in which that percentage has to be different in different industries, and that is why no percentage has been fixed in this case. I still hold that we should not lay down any hard and fast rule here. We should give some option to the Provincial Governments to prescribe these things in the rules which may suit the conditions obtaining in their respective areas.

One thing which has been said and which I frankly admit has got to be provided in the Bill is that the Bill has not given any definition of 'industry'. That will I think be rectified in the Select Committee.

There are other minor points with regard to some defects in drafting or some changes in wording here and there which may very well be rectified in the Select Committee, and I do not think there is any reason for me to raise any objection on that score.

Then, Sir, there is another point which generated some heat yesterday,—I do not want to enter into greater details on that point—and that is about the non-recognition of unions formed on communal lines. Personally, Sir, I hold very strong views on this point. Unfortunately we cannot afford to stretch this point too much. I shall request my Honourable friends who hold this view that communal unions should be given recognition or communal unions should be formed to conceive the consequences which this step will ultimately lead to. Today we may think of two or three communities, but what will be the ultimate result in future is simply staggering. I will give some examples from the Hindus themselves. There have been cries that in the Hindu Society there are the upper caste Hindus, the backward communities and the scheduled castes. So far as the broad two divisions—the caste Hindus and the scheduled castes are concerned, I do not want to touch them. I am taking the caste Hindus. Some cries were raised by the backward communities which communities are not educationally, economically and socially well-advanced as a few selected castes at the helm of the Hindu society. So the cry was that something should be given to them, some reservation should be made for them. Well, reservations were not made but in giving representation in certain local bodies, or in setting up candidates from different communities it was kept in view that some representation should be given to those castes which are called the backward communities. But the matter did not end there. Among the backward communities there are so many castes and all those castes are not equally developed or equally backward. Now the cry arose that a certain caste has got more and a certain caste had got less. So ultimately you have to face a cry where every caste will come forward and will say some provision has got to be made for this caste and I do not know where this will lead to. Similarly, if I were to give an example from the Muslim community I may say that there is a cry from the Momins today, there is a cry from the Rayones, from a number of functional castes that they are backward educationally, socially, and economically and they require protection. If we were to allow such considerations

Maulana Zafar Ali Khan (East Central Punjab, Muhammadan). You will have to reconsider your views as regards Muslims.

Mr. President: Order, order. Let the Honourable Member proceed.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: I am afraid, Sir, I do not know where these things will lead us to. You may take any religion, any caste, any community. I may give an example of Christians. They have no untouchability among them. But what is there in actual practice? I know a large number of untouchable Christians. Though among Sikhs such things are not permitted. I know a large number of untouchable Sikhs. Everywhere this division is present. If we are to stretch it there will be no end to it. We may have communal unions today. We may have Hindu, Muslim, Christian and Sikh unions. We may be thinking of these four particular divisions today, but to-morrow, I am afraid, there might be a thousand divisions in each of these four divisions. Therefore, I do not feel inclined to think that in such matters, which are purely economic we should introduce communal considerations. I need not dilate upon those points which have been advanced by some friends or other in this House that trade unionism conceives a class organisation and [Shri Jagjivan Ram] repeat the same arguments. There, there is neither Hindu nor Muslim, neither a Christian nor a Sikh in Trade Unions. There are only two classes—the class of the employers and the employed, the workers and the employers, and the workers be they Hindu or Muslim, Christian or Sikh, or of any other denomination they have then common interests. Well, Sir, I do not want to dilate upon this point to any great extent. But this is my personal view. I hold it very strongly. In these matters where workers have got their common interests we cannot introduce communal considerations.

Then, Sir regarding the motion of my friend for circulation. As I have already submitted the Bill has been before the country for a long time. Public opinion has been expressed upon it more than enough and there is no reason for referring it again to the public for giving their opinion upon it. I do not feel inclined to accept that motion and I rather oppose it.

I have to say nothing more than what I have said. The measure is one which is in the interests of the labourers as well as in the interests of the employers, and it has been before the country for a long time and it does not require to be circulated for eliciting public opinion thereon. Therefore, I commend that my motion be accepted. I may very well appeal to my friend, the mover of the amendment to be kind enough to withdraw his motion because no useful purpose will be served by sending the Bill into circulation for eliciting public opinion.

I am, however, proposing one slight change in the personnel of the Select Committee. Instead of Seth Yusuf Abdooli Haroon, the name of Syed Ghulam Bhik Nairang be substituted.

With these words, Sir, I appeal to my friend to withdraw his motion and I appeal to the Honourable Members of the House to accept my motion.

Mr. President: I believe in order to have that change of name.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: One word, Sir, if you will permit me. I am given to understand that my friend, Haji Abdus Sattar Haji Ishaq Seth is agreeable not to press his motion. In that case I may assure my friend and my friends in the House that I will departmentally circulate this Bill for eliciting opinion thereon and shall call a meeting of the Select Committee in January next and place those opinions before the Select Committee.

Haji Abdus Sattar Haji Ishaq Seth (West Coast and Nilgiris, Muhammadan): On that statement, I am willing to withdraw my amendment but I want to make it clear that my party's objection to that particular clause remains.

Sir, I beg leave to withdraw my amendment.

The amendment was, by leave of the Assembly, withdrawn.

Mr. President: As regards the other small amendment, I think it may be necessary to move a specific motion to that effect.

Mr. S. C. Joshi (Government of India, Nominated Official): Sir, I move—

"That in the names of the Members of the Select Committee, the name of Syed Ghulam Bhik Nairang be substituted for the name of Seth Yusuf Abdooli Haroon."

Mr. President: So now there is a motion for reference to the Select Committee and there is an amendment to it for a change in the personnel. I do not think I need read the original motion now before the House. I would first place the amendment.

The question is—

"That in the names of the Members of the Select Committee, the name of Syed Ghulam Bhik Nairang be substituted for the name of Seth Yusuf Abdooli Haroon."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: I now put to the House the motion as amended for acceptance.

The question is

That the Bill further to amend the Indian Trade Unions Act, 1926, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Mr. N. M. Joshi, Prof. N. G. Ranga, Pandit Balkrishna Sharma, Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai, Sir T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar, Sreejath Kohni Kumar Chaudhuri, Mr. P. J. Griffiths, Mr. A. C. Inskip, Sardar Sampuran Singh, Mr. S. C. Joshi, Miss Maniben Karia, Mr. S. Guruswami, Mr. Muhammad Nauman, Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer, N. C. Ghulam Bhik Nairang, and the Mover, and that the number of Members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five.

The motion was adopted.

REPORT OF THE PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE ON THE ACCOUNTS OF 1943-44

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan (Finance Member) Sir, I beg to move

"That the Report of the Public Accounts Committee on the Accounts of 1943-44 be taken into consideration."

Mr. President: Motion moved.

"That the Report of the Public Accounts Committee on the Accounts of 1943-44 be taken into consideration."

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Guntur cum Nellore Non-Muhammadian Rural) Is not the Honourable Member going to say anything in support of it?

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan: I am trying to maintain the past traditions of this House. In the past the Finance Member did not make any speech when he made such motion, and as I believe in even greater economy than at my predecessors in office, I do not propose to depart from past practice.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Mr. President Sir I wish to congratulate my honourable friend, Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan, for being fortunate enough to come to occupy this very exalted position in our National Government. As this is the second time that an Indian comes to occupy this position naturally it is a matter for national congratulation also.

Shri Sri Prakasa (Benares and Gorakhpur Divisions Non-Muhammadian Rural) The first was Todarmull.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Long before Todarmull was born, there used to be our own great Kautilya even of historic time!

Shri Sri Prakasa: He was Home Member!

Prof. N. G. Ranga: He was Home Member and also Finance Member and he has left a great treatise also on finance which it would do us a great good to study with care. It would have pleased me very much and I am sure it would have pleased the House also very much if the Honourable the Finance Member, Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan, had cared to make a few observations on this report that is before us. But as is usual with him he is extremely discreet and therefore he has contented himself with merely making the motion and asking the House to form its own opinion in regard to the report that is placed before us.

This is the first occasion when a responsible and I hope responsive Indian Finance Member comes before us with a report like this and therefore it is necessary that we should not only congratulate him but also warn him that great responsibilities today rest upon his shoulders. It is not going to be a very easy thing for an Indian Finance Minister not only to manage the affairs of his own department but also to control the financial aspect of the various departments that he has got to keep a watch on throughout the year and all the time. Sir, the Finance Department is supposed to be the watchdog of the finances at the whole of the Government and to that extent it must play its role as a watchdog over the activities of all the departments of the Government. I dare say it might have been one of the reasons why my Honourable friend was so very particular about coming into this particular position. I do not grudge him that privilege. I am glad anyway that there is an Indian in that place and I am glad also that this particular department has at last come under the control of a responsible member of this House. He may, for the time being, happen technically to be a nominated member in this House but let us hope that very soon when we come to have our own constitution we shall have an elected Finance Minister to be at the head of our Finance Department

Sgt. N. V. Gadgil: What is under discussion—the Finance Member of the Public Accounts Committee Report?

Prof. N. G. Ranga: The Finance Member has to deal not only with the report of the Public Accounts Committee but also with public finances. It is most essential, if one goes through this particular report, that the Finance Member as well as the Finance Department have got to learn to exercise much greater control over these various departments than they have done in the past.

Again and again it has been stated in this report that the Defence Department and the various officers in that department have been ignoring the instructions, specific instructions, given to them, not only by their own financial officers but also by the Finance Department. In the past the Finance Member found himself almost helpless to control the defence services and to control their expenditure also and it would be a very bad thing indeed for the interests of our country and for the finances of our country if the present Finance Member did not try to improve that state of things and did not succeed in making the various officers and the whole of the Defence Department more responsible than they have been till now.

Secondly, there is a case here of how the Bengal Government had mismanaged the funds placed at its disposal by the Central Government. I do not wish to read all the unsavoury paragraphs contained in this report about the way in which the Bengal Government had behaved shabbily with Central finances but I do wish to draw the attention of the Finance Department as well as that of the Finance Minister to two or three sentences in it.

On page 6 it is said

We cannot conceive of any set of conditions in which there could possibly be any justification for the disregard of such elementary common sense precautions as the taking of receipts for money paid or of maintaining records of payment."

What a provincial Government it is, that it should not have taken receipts for the money that it has paid or kept accounts of the moneys that have been disbursed by them. I do not want similar things to be repeated in future either by the Bengal Government or any other provincial government and it is the duty of the Finance Department to see that in future at least provincial governments are not placed in possession of central funds of such magnitude that they play ducks and drakes with our money and afterwards we find ourselves completely helpless.

It so happened while we were on this committee, now for a period of two years that every legitimate and peaceful effort was made in order to invite the Bengal Government to send its representative to face the Public Accounts Committee and explain its own conduct and the Bengal Government failed to come and face us. I know we had no opportunity of taking them to task in any other way, for the simple reason that the Bengal Government happens to be enjoying not only provincial autonomy but something in addition to that, because of its special political position in this country. Whether any particular provincial Government enjoys any extra-constitutional or extra-political status or not, it is absolutely necessary for the Finance Department of the Government of India to see that no provincial government is allowed to enjoy the kind of privilege that the Bengal Government had come to be allowed, such as not taking receipts for the moneys disbursed and not even keeping accounts for the moneys that they were spending. It might do so, if it so wishes with its own money but even that is objectionable but no provincial government can be allowed, not even the Bengal Government to repeat this very bad example.

Very soon the time is coming when the Government of India would have to budget not for the short period of one year but for a longer period may be of two, five or even ten years and then come down to preparing its budget for the shorter period of one year only in that bigger perspective of a five year or ten year plan.

hitherto it has not been the practice but in future the Government of India has got to do it, it really is to take effective steps to advance the economic progress of our country. In the past even though it was trying to prepare a budget for only one year, it used to make so many mistakes or blunders and therefore unless the Honourable the Finance Minister takes only steps to rehabilitate his own Finance Department and prepares it to face the new tasks that are going to be placed on its shoulders, he would very soon find that his department would be incapable of helping him in the manner in which the nation expects him to plan for this country. There is the question of budgetary control over first, the estimates, and then of expenditure. Complaints are made in this report and are being made even in the latest report that is being signed, that the budgetary control of the Finance Department is not strong enough, that during the last 6 or 7 years of the so-called war period or war crisis, this budgetary control has become very lax indeed, and this committee has recommended that it should be tightened again. I need only underline these remarks of this committee in this regard.

Coming to the other question of supplementary grants, it has become almost a habit of the Finance Department to sanction a number of unnecessary supplementary demands and bring them before this House and let the money be sanctioned and afterwards find that the money was not needed at all and therefore could not be spent and it had to be surrendered later on. This sort of practice is not conducive to proper budgetary control over our own finances, and it is also likely, as we have mentioned in this particular report, to queer the pitch for the next budget to be prepared, because after all every new budget is being prepared in the light of the earlier budget, and long before it is known that any supplementary grants are needed or not the new budget has got to be prepared, and therefore to that extent plans for the new budget are being vitiated. So every care has to be taken to see that no unnecessary supplementary demands are made or brought forward before this House.

Thirdly, there is the case of the Supply Department being brought into existence without the knowledge of this House. It was kept in being for well over ten months and then alone the grant for its maintenance was brought forward before this House. That is a highly reprehensible method of financial control or laxity of control. We have had very strong things to say about this, and in future we know very well that the Government of India would have to start a number of new departments and new activities and therefore provide for their financing also. I hope that the Finance Minister would take care to see that whenever any new department is sought to be created, he would, as we have recommended here, come to this House at the time of the budget for a token grant, or after it is created at the earliest possible opportunity to this House with a demand for a token grant, and thus give an opportunity to this House to discuss the advisability or otherwise of the establishment of that new department.

There is also another point which is not mentioned here but which is germane to this discussion. Recently, we have heard that the Planning Department was abolished, but at the same time some sort of new panel of planning has been brought into existence with one of my own honoured colleagues as its chairman. Is it open to the government to abolish at any time it likes any department that it likes without giving some sort of notice to the concerned standing committee of that department, not to speak of waiting until this House itself is able to be in session and consulting it? I speak subject to correction—but I think that the standing committee for this department was not consulted before the Planning Department was abolished. This is a very important matter and I would like the Finance Minister to look into this. I would like him also on a later occasion if necessary, to enlighten this House as to the proper procedure to be followed by the Finance Department as well as the government in regard to the abolition of any one of the governmental departments and if he does so what is it that he proposes to do and how does he propose to deal with the funds that had already been allotted for the maintenance and continuance of that department until the next budget came in.

Then there are these smaller details ^{from} regarding the surrenders of surplus funds that could not be spent. We have taken a very strong line in this report that surrenders should be placed at the disposal of the Finance Department at the earliest possible moment and as soon as it becomes clear that there are going to be savings. The past practice has not been very happy.

Then there is a very peculiar thing, that the remarks sent by the Audit Department to the various spending departments are not replied to in proper time. For months, the Audit Department is obliged to wait for the remarks of those various departments before it is able to come to any sort of definite view about any one of the financial improprieties that have come to notice, and even then it is not able to come to the Public Accounts Committee and give them its final view. We had to say in this report that the Finance Department should fix the maximum period of three months within which every spending department should be prepared to send a reasoned reply to every relevant remark that the Audit Department makes and sends for its reply.

That brings me to the other point, that it is most necessary, now that this department is coming under the control of a responsible minister, that the Audit should be strengthened. During the war the audit had on many an occasion to complain that it was understaffed that it was not properly and adequately strengthened by the Finance Department. I hope at least from now on, no occasion will be given to audit to make any such complaints. The role that audit plays in regard to the public accounts of our country is of first-rate importance. I hesitate to say that it is second only to the Finance Department—I would like to place it even above the Finance Department. Anyhow they should be treated as equals and they should try and co-operate with each other. It is conventional of course for both of these great departments to say they are co-operating with each other. I have been on this Public Accounts Committee for nearly ten years—and I am here to say that I am not quite satisfied with the manner in which the Finance Department has lent its support to the Audit and I want Audit to be strengthened in future.

Lastly, I am not at all satisfied and I am sure the House also cannot be satisfied with seeing only the Finance Minister being an Indian and also a responsible gentleman. We want the whole of this department to be Indianised. Similarly we want the Audit Department also to be Indianised consistently with efficiency—but that need not be taken as a sort of proviso or condition, because there are plenty of Indians there as efficient as the English people, if not more efficient. It is wrong for any one to continue to think that only England is the repository of financial experts. Soviet Russia is a new and a young country and Soviet Russia has been able to give an excellent record of financial control and financial management. She did not send all her sons to England in order to be trained in the Bank of England or in Lombard Street or even Whitehall, and our people are supposed to have been trained in the last 150 years by these British financiers and I am sure we have got enough of financial experts in our own country who are competent enough to advise and assist and work as the colleagues of my honourable friend the Finance Minister. Similarly, Audit should be completely Indianised. With these remarks I commend this committee's report to this House and I hope that the Finance Minister will send relevant passages of the remarks of this committee's report to the various departments of the government and see that proper attention is paid to the suggestions that we have made in this report.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras Ceded Districts and Chittoor Non-Muhammadan Rural) I must pay a tribute to the persons, one of whom is Prof. Ranga, who drafted this report. He has gone through the various items carefully and has made suggestions in regard to budgeting, supplementary grants and various defects and irregularities which they have discovered in the matter of auditing. It is true we are now trying to discuss the report relating to the accounts of 1943-44 and my Honourable friend the Finance Member cannot be accused of everything that happened at that time either in the matter of accounting or in the matter of spending the finances to the detriment of the interests of this country. I expect him to improve upon what his predecessors have done. Otherwise we would only be continuing the same old bureaucratic methods of ruling over this country. I do expect a change now, since we have a responsible Indian Minister in charge of our finances. He must have come forward with a definite statement to this House as to how far the recommendations that have been made in this committee have been carried out, what steps have been taken to remedy the defects. Possibly my Honourable friend had not much time and he expects to hear the observations that may be made upon this report by Honourable Members of this House before he takes adequate steps regarding the irregularities that have been pointed out.

This report consists of two or three parts. First there is general budgeting. The second, the Railways, third the Military, and so on. It is not intended to beat a dead horse. Our observations are intended to put the new Finance Member and his department on their guard to see that in future at least these irregularities are not perpetuated.

Let us now take the manner in which budgeting has been done. The original budget amount has been far exceeded, practically out of all proportion to the original budget. On page 1, in Part I, the Posts and Telegraphs and Defence Services are dealt with. The Committee observe that there was a total excess of 53.93 lakhs, or 11.01 per cent over the final grant. This is abnormal. It is pointed out that 'this served somewhat to reduce the percentage of variation from the final grant, which percentage nevertheless is higher than it has ever been in recent years'. The excuse of the department is that this is all due to the war period. Now, that the war is over, they must be very careful. We fear that even after the war the same kind of latitude might continue to be taken. I am trying to give a warning that proper steps ought to be taken to make the budget figures approximate to the needs of the particular year and no more grants, except under unforeseen circumstances, should be allowed and grants should not normally be in excess of the original demand.

Now, I come to budgetary control. Let us see how many supplementary grants were brought up during the year and whether these supplementaries could have been avoided. This is referred to in paragraph 4 on page 3 of the report. I shall only read a few relevant sentences.

"We commented last year on the deterioration in budgeting and control which the results of the year then under review had disclosed when compared to those of a normal year in times of peace. There are this year, for example, only 15 uncovered excesses in the voted section of the accounts compared to 19 in the previous year."

Though the number has gone down, the number of supplementary grants and the amounts involved which had reached record figures last year have been surpassed this year. I do not know who the Finance Member then was. He had only to complain of his predecessor. Now, the Finance Member will have to complain about two predecessors of his. Whatever might be the outward appearance the steel frame continues to do its work and I trust that the Honourable the Finance Member with his muscle and strength will give the steel frame a good shake at least. The time has come to modify all this.

It is also pointed out that in the year under review there were no less than seven unnecessary supplementary grants, 'a figure which has not been equalled for a very long time'. During the war they have wasted lot of money. This is one more reason why we must have full independence at the earliest possible moment. We can ill afford to wait any longer.

I shall now take up the supplementary demands. I will not tire the House with figures at the far end of the day. The Committee say—

"We had occasion to comment last year on the very large number of supplementary demands which the Legislature was called upon to vote and of the magnitude of the total sum involved. The figures for 1942-43 (excluding the Posts and Telegraphs estimates) were 46 supplementary demands for a total sum of Rs. 13,23,95,000, which was 52 per cent of the original voted grant."

[Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar]

Now, let us see what happened in the year under review, 1948-49. 'The comparable figures for the year under review are 53 supplementary demands totalling Rs. 21,51,48,000 representing a percentage of no less than 62.29 of the original grant.' Supplementary grants were to the tune of 62 per cent where in the previous year it was 52 per cent. This is a scandal of the first magnitude. I am sorry that the persons who were responsible for this are not here. Otherwise they would have to answer for all this in detail.

I shall now take up the suspense balances. It is referred to in paragraph 9 of this report. The Committee say on page 5

"We sounded a note of warning last year against the danger of allowing suspense balances to grow unwieldy. We were informed then that there were considerable sums of money standing to the debit of Suspense because it had not been found possible satisfactorily to separate and allocate the individual items of which they were composed to the various Governments, and so on."

My fear is that in spite of the warning of the Committee that the defects ought to be remedied, this tendency was not properly checked. I am afraid proper attention was not paid to this aspect in spite of the warning of the Committee. That is the reason why I am trying to lay emphasis on the fact that proper control should be exercised. The Committee also say "We also desire the Finance Department to circularise other departments impressing upon them the urgency of clearing these debts. I would ask the Honourable Member to make a statement in his concluding speech what action has been taken and whether the other authorities have been circularised regarding the suspense balances in their hands, also whether they have been reduced, if so, to what extent? He would do well to give figures for the several years from 1942-43 right up to the present day if such figures are available."

Then, as regards the new services, I know of a convention. When a new service, which was not contemplated at the time of introducing the budget, is started, it has been the practice to place it before the Standing Finance Committee and obtain its approval. Then a token sum is placed before the Assembly. Thought that convention has been there, it was not followed. Therefore, the members of the Committee have rightly observed in paragraph 10 that such sanction was not obtained from the Assembly. There is also no reference there why a similar sanction was not obtained at least from the Standing Finance Committee. I would urge that the Standing Finance Committee ought not to be lightly thrown away in all matters in which the grant was not sanctioned at the time when the budget was presented to the Assembly. The previous Finance Members might have looked askance at this and might not have looked at it with affection and goodwill, but I do hope that the present Finance Member will find the advice of the Standing Finance Committee very valuable and call for its aid as often as possible when he is unable to place these matters for the acceptance of the House generally.

Now, Sir, I come to the Railway Department. I have been a member of the Standing Committee for Railways for some years. So far as the budget control is concerned, I have to congratulate the Railway Department for a better method of budgetary control which they have brought to bear in the initial stages of the expenditure. The Committee has rightly paid a tribute to that Department for taking greater care than the general Finance Department. But they have been equally bad if not worse than the general Finance Department in the matter of coming up to the Assembly for supplementary grants. They have no doubt not deteriorated but they have not improved either. So far as the Railways are concerned, one could not accuse them of such a bad behaviour so far as supplementary grants go but they must have shown better improvement than the others. Sir, I would like to have some elucidation on this point from the Honourable the Finance Member or his colleague the Financial Commissioner for Railways. It was suggested in this report that from one major head to another major head sums ought not to be shifted when it was found that the under one major head was insufficient for meeting the demands. Therefore, it was suggested that working expenses might as well be put under one head. I know and I do remember that the Honourable Financial Commissioner for Railways brought in before the Standing Finance Committee a proposal to re-align the heads and he brought various other heads under the working expenses. I believe it was in pursuance of this recommendation that he wanted to re-adjust the budget and tried to correct the budgetary provision in accordance with this recommendation. I would like to know from him in greater detail whether he has tried to carry out the proposal which we explained in the Standing Finance Committee and the recommendations that have been made in the report of the Public Accounts Committee. All the same, I was not satisfied then and I am much less satisfied now that they are dealing with funds that we voted on black properly. Though from one general head to another general head they may not transfer all the working expenses of all the railways, various Departments have been clubbed together under one "Working Expenses". Even now it is open to them to transfer from one sub-head to another sub-head of the same major head, which may be absolutely inconsistent. That is possible even under this re-alignment. Therefore, it is good that a Joint Committee should meet together to look into this matter and suggest ways and means to avoid the possibility of these people transferring from one sub-head to another sub-head that which is absolutely of an inconsistent and conflicting nature.

Then Sir, there is one other matter on which the Committee has reported and quite properly. That is the correlation of budgeting with regard to the various systems of the railway administration. For instance, one railway incurs an expenditure and then pays it to some other railway. This finds a place only in the accounts of the railway which pays but it does not find place in the accounts of the railway which receives it. I do not know how it has not attracted the attention of the persons concerned because we gave a note for the Public Accounts Committee to make this remark. They say on page 9

"We should like the Railway Department to investigate this matter and to adopt the procedure suggested if found feasible."

In the beginning of paragraph 20 they say

"We have come across in our examination of the Railway accounts several instances which lead us to the conclusion that there is insufficient correlation in budgeting between the different railway administrations. We understand that a system is already in force whereby one railway does not debit or credit itself till the other railway has accepted the corresponding credit or debit thus ensuring correlation in the accounts of the two railways. We see prima facie no reason why some similar arrangement should not be adopted at the stage of making budget estimates so that a railway would not make any entry in its estimates relating to payments to or receipts from any other railway till the other railway had agreed to make a corresponding reverse entry in its own estimates."

I would like to have an answer from the Honourable the Railway Commissioner whether steps have been taken to remedy such defects and correlation is ensured in the matter of budgeting.

Lastly, Sir, I come to para 22 of the report, where they make certain observations with regard to financial irregularities. They found certain gross financial irregularities in the matter of accounting and for which they recommended very serious punishment with respect to the officers. I would like to have a tabular statement of the serious financial irregularities that have been discovered and for which action has been taken. I would like to read one or two lines regarding their report on this matter.

"We should like the Railway Department to give very much more attention than they seem hitherto to have given to this aspect of the matter and we would welcome a report as to the action in this respect which they may find it possible to take."

It is open to the Honourable Members of this House to accept the report from the Department as to how far they have implemented this recommendation, what action they have taken in regard to the financial irregularities they have discovered, and also in regard to the financial irregularities that the Department itself may, in the light of the observations made by the members of the Standing Finance Committee, discover in addition to those irregularities already discovered.

[Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar]

The report has been written very well and gives a clear view of the various irregularities that they have discovered and we need not go away with the impression that the whole thing is very bad. However, there are a number of loopholes that have to be plucked and some report has to be laid before the Assembly as to how far action has been taken on the report of this Committee.

I will conclude with the observations that, irrespective of what might have been done this year, it is his duty not to save his time but to put more facts before the Assembly to enable the Honourable Members to know what action has been taken by the Government. He should not be laconic in an Assembly where he has got to open his mouth more often and we also want to listen to his beautiful voice.

Pandit Govind Malaviya (Allahabad and Jhansi Divisions, Non-Muhammadan Rural). Sir, I have no wish to prolong the debate. My task is rendered easier because of the new Government that is functioning in this House. The report which we have to take into consideration now points out a number of 4 PM things which deserve attention. But I have no doubt that the new Finance Member whom we have the good fortune to welcome, will himself look into all that and I need not therefore go into those details. It is lucky that we have the new Finance Member. I need not bother about the political tubthumping which many of us may have to do outside. I am not concerned with that now. That does not matter now. But those of us who have had the privilege of having known the Finance Member in another legislature, in the U.P., are well aware of the high ability and patriotism he possesses and with all that knowledge of him, I have no doubt that the entire administration of the Finance Department will hereafter change, not only because of the general change on account of the new government that has come in but also because of the personal ability and determination which he will bring to bear upon his work. I will not therefore go into details of the report. The purpose for which I have stood up is just one little suggestion which I want to make and that is that now that we have one of our own men sitting here at the head of the Finance department, which department my Honourable friend Prof. Ranga rightly characterised as the watch-dog of the whole government in a sense, I hope the Finance Member will make the watch-dog of his watch-dog department, namely the Public Accounts committee, more powerful and more effective than it has been hitherto. In England, Sir, if I am not mistaken, they have a non-official Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee. The only purpose why I am taking up the time of the House is to make the suggestion to the Finance Member for his consideration to see whether the time has not now come when we should introduce that practice here also and have a non-official chairman for the Public Accounts Committee. The Honourable Finance Member's hands will be full of important and urgent matters, he will have more to do than any human being can wish for. I have no doubt that he will find in a non-official chairman one who will co-operate with him, one who will compliment his work to such an extent as may be needed and as may be desired. He will find that a committee presided over by a non-official chairman will lend him greater strength and will lead to better efficiency of administration than before. There are other countries also where this practice prevails. I will not take up the time of the House in dilating upon this point, and I hope he will consider this useful suggestion and he will be able to adopt it at as early a date as he might find it possible. I support the consideration of the report.

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan (Finance Member). Sir, it is indeed very gratifying that the House felt so much satisfied with my silence and I am sure that it will be more satisfied with my speech. Sir, my Honourable friends Prof. Ranga and Pandit Govind Malaviya have been good enough to say very kind things about me. My endeavour would be to come up to their expectations. Now, Sir, Prof. Ranga wanted to know what action had been taken, and I think my Honourable friend Mr Ayyangar also desired to know what action had been taken on the report of the Public Accounts Committee. This is a document which is quite bulky and I would have been only too glad to read out all the items of action that the departments have taken on the report. This was placed before the Public Accounts Committee in September and it will come up before the House when the next report of the Public Accounts Committee comes up for discussion, because the action taken by the department on all outstanding points not covered by an earlier report will form part of the next report with regard to the accounts of 1944-45. My Honourable friend Prof Ranga said that he desired that instructions should be issued giving a maximum period of three months for replies to audit comments. We have done better than that. We have issued instructions giving them only six weeks. All the departments have been circalaised that if their remarks are not received within that time, then the comments which are sent to the departments will be taken to be correct.

Now, Sir, there is another point which was raised by Prof Ranga with regard to the creation of new departments and that the vote of the House should be taken before a new department is started. I am glad to inform him that it has been decided that the vote of the House should be taken at the earliest opportunity. I shall be coming up before the House in this connection with regard to the Works, Mines and Powers Department which is technically a new Department. With regard to his second suggestion that in case we decided to abolish certain departments, even then the vote of the House should be taken, I am not quite sure about that. But anyhow that is a matter that I shall examine, but I may say that it does not seem to me that there is such a strong case in favour of this proposition as there is in favour of the proposition that when a new department is started the vote of the House should be taken. Then, Sir, with regard to budgeting, unfortunately our budgeting has not been as close as we could wish. I think the House would realise that it is due entirely to conditions that have been prevailing on account of war during the last few years and I am hopeful that as conditions return to normal our budgeting also will be more real. With regard to budgetary control, I may tell Honourable Members that the deterioration is again a war time phenomena and I admit, that in spite of the fact that all departments had done their best, that best has not been quite adequate. I hope that in future we will be able to exercise greater control with regard to this matter. There is, I think, Sir, only one other point that has been raised by my friend Mr H. P. Prasad. He has suggested that as is the practice in England, the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee should be a non-official. I will certainly examine this proposal. It is my earnest desire that as long as I am in charge of this department of Government I should carry with me the non-officials of this House and it will always be my earnest effort to seek their advice and assistance on any matter which comes up before me. Even if I am not able for some reason or other to place any particular proposal before the House as a whole I shall always try to get, if not officially at least informally, the views of the representatives of the various parties in this House. As a matter of fact in this connection I may say that it was I think, Mr Ayyangar, who suggested that the Committee that was appointed with regard to the Bretton Woods proposals may be continued or some other committee may be appointed to be consulted from time to time. Two days ago I promised that I would consider this matter. I am glad to tell my Honourable friend and other Honourable Members, and specially the members of the Committee, that if they would be so good as to assist me from time to time I shall be happy to avail of their assistance.

Sir, I do not think there is really any other point on which I need say anything in particular. I recognise the importance of the Public Accounts Committee, it does play a very important and a very useful role in the management of the finances of Government, and I do hope that the Public Accounts Committee of this House will in future be even more vigilant than it has been in the past.

DEMAND No 58 —EMIGRATION—INTERNAL

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan: Sir, I beg to move

"That an excess grant of Rs 114 be voted by the Assembly to regularise the expenditure chargeable to revenue actually incurred in excess of the voted grant in the year 1943-44 in respect of 'Emigration—Internal' "

Mr. Deputy President: Motion moved

"That an excess grant of Rs 114 be voted by the Assembly to regularise the expenditure chargeable to revenue actually incurred in excess of the voted grant in the year 1943-44 in respect of 'Emigration—Internal' "

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Guntur cum Nellore Non-Muhammadian Rural) Sir, I protest against this. Any one of the Government officers in charge of this Department drawing thousands of rupees every month could have put this small sum of Rs 114 from his pocket and saved the House this waste of time.

Mr. Deputy President: Would the Honourable Member like to reply?

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan: That will be wasting more time of the House.

Mr. Deputy President: The question is

"That an excess grant of Rs 114 be voted by the Assembly to regularise the expenditure chargeable to revenue actually incurred in excess of the voted grant in the year 1943-44 in respect of 'Emigration—Internal' "

DEMAND No 10 —INDIAN POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS DEPARTMENT

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan: Sir, I beg to move

"That an excess grant of Rs 22,50,786 be voted by the Assembly to regularise the expenditure chargeable to revenue actually incurred in excess of the voted grant in the year 1943-44 in respect of 'Indian Posts and Telegraphs Department' "

Mr. Deputy President: Motion moved

"That an excess grant of Rs 22,50,786 be voted by the Assembly to regularise the expenditure chargeable to revenue actually incurred in excess of the voted grant in the year 1943-44 in respect of 'Indian Posts and Telegraphs Department' "

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras Ceded Districts and Chittoor Non-Muhammadian Rural) Sir, I oppose this. The Honourable Members will see in the Report under Indian Posts and Telegraphs Department that 22 lakhs have been spent from the revenue account in excess of the grant. Under the capital account item No 78 Indian Posts and Telegraphs—83 lakhs have been spent in the same year. In all 83 plus 22, it comes to 105 lakhs. More than one crore has been spent in excess of the original grant. We find in the Public Accounts Committee Report that this was spent on about 76 major works not one of which was placed before the Assembly even though some of them had already been executed or were in the course of construction at the time of the Budget Session. They were neither placed before the Standing Finance Committee. I want to oppose and throw this out and see what will happen. I am anxious to know what will happen to more than one crore of rupees which has already been spent. It is a farce. Out of this one crore and lakhs, at least a hundred or one thousand rupees must be collected as punishment by way of fines from those persons in charge of the department who were responsible for this excess.

I will only read one or two items from page 42 of the Public Accounts Committee's Report

"28 of these works had cost under Rs 1,000, while only eight had cost more than Rs 20,000 each. The Committee enquired why the modified appropriation for the workshop building at Jubbulpore was Rs 15,00,800 when the original appropriation was only 2,45,700. It was explained that the project had undergone a series of changes since it was first conceived. Budget provision had been made according to the original plan which was to acquire and construct buildings in order to house certain workshop machinery from Calcutta."

I see that many such irregularities have been done. I therefore oppose this motion for passing 22 lakhs whatever might be the consequences.

Mr. K. G. Ambegaonkar (Government of India Nominated Official) The consequences will be that the excess will remain unauthorized, and the Auditor General will go on raising objections.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Officers will be surcharged.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad (United Provinces Southern Divisions Muhammadan Rural) And what will be the legal position of those buildings?

Sgt. N. V. Gadgil (Bombay Central Division Non-Muhammadan Rural) Mr Deputy President This raises an important issue. That someone had bungled at some place either in under-estimating or spending without authority either of the House or of the Standing Committee or of both is clear. Even if we throw out this demand we cannot mend the matter. I only want to urge on the attention of the new Finance Member that this clearly establishes a case in which he ought to be a watchdog of the country's finances in the real sense of the word, and if he can assure us that such performances, although they cannot be avoided entirely, will be few hereafter, personally I shall be satisfied.

Sir Harold Shobert (Secretary, Communications Department) I am afraid that my Honourable friend, Mr Ayyangar, is under some slight misapprehension, and I hope very much that I shall be able to satisfy the House that the Indian Posts and Telegraphs Department in 1941-42 was not undertaking a lot of ill-conceived and unsanctioned expenditure. Actually he has referred to two excesses. The first is an excess of Rs 22,50,786. That excess is made up of a great number of small items and although it may not be entirely clear from the Public Accounts Committee Report, they have no particular relation to these 73 Major Works which were undertaken without specific provision. I must recall to Honourable Members that during the period of the war, the Indian Posts & Telegraphs Department went through a period of very heavy expansion. Traffic increased on all sides to an unprecedented degree. There were troops coming in from the United Kingdom, later on from America—and all sorts of capital goods were coming into India which increased the amount of work which our people had to do and we could not foresee at the budget time what that expansion was going to be. But above all, Honourable Members will remember that the Posts & Telegraphs Department undertook a Rs 16 crores Tele-Communication Development Scheme. As a matter of fact, when this scheme was conceived towards the end of 1942, it was only to have been a Rs 8 crores scheme. Gradually it increased to Rs 16 crores. But when this scheme was in the beginning, framed to increase tele-communications in this land, chiefly for the war department and for strategic purposes, it was most difficult to foresee how far it was going. The result of that was that, at the time with which this excess is concerned, we had gone ahead very much and the excesses spoken of resulted—I can give you a few details of their nature. One of them was an excess of Rs 30 lakhs for pay of establishment. Another was an excess of 8 lakhs on pay of officers. Another was an excess of Rs 6,28,000 on movement of stores. I may state that at this time we were sending stores to Iraq, later on to Burma, to the Middle East and all over the place, and that it meant that we had to move a great many stores, without very much warning, all over India. Actually this first excess [Sir Harold Shoober] which my friend, Mr Ayyangar, has criticized, the excess of Rs. 22,50,000, is made up of these and a few other items and not specifically concerned with those 73 major works. All of them were concerned with the war, and had to be taken up at short notice and it was not possible to get the previous approval of the Standing Committee. For the Rs 16 crores scheme, as the Honourable Members of this House are aware, we did at every stage get the necessary approval.

The Honourable the Finance Member has not yet come to the item of Rs 83,13,633.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: You must dispose of them together!

Sir Harold Shoober: I think, Sir, I may be allowed to speak on this item under expenditure charged to capital,—an excess of Rs 83,13,633. I must explain that that is really due to arrangements between the Supply Department and the Posts and Telegraphs Department. In the year with which these accounts deal the Supply Department adopted a procedure by which materials and supplies, which were 100 per cent approved and which had already been despatched, were paid for. Well, the result was that Rs 24 lakhs advance payment was made by the Supply Department in the financial year for supplies which the Posts & Telegraphs Department did not receive for their works until the next year. We had not wanted them in this particular year, but we had to pay for them. They came in for work in the following financial year.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Could it not be paid from the Suspense Account?

Sir Harold Shoober: I think this is a Suspense Account. Anyhow we were billed for them. I am afraid I cannot give my friend, Prof Ranga, a direct reply. But I can assure him that it was all above board. The other item, of which this is partially made up—in fact the totals are more than made up—is an unanticipated receipt of stores amounting to Rs 80 lakhs. Those stores were also wanted for works to be done in the following financial year, but they were received by the Posts & Telegraphs Department in the year under consideration. I may add, Sir, for the information of Honourable Members that with the few remarks recorded by the Public Accounts Committee in their report they recommended that these excesses should be sanctioned and we have.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know from the Honourable Member what they could do otherwise?

Sri Sri Prakasa (Benares and Gorakhpur Divisions Non-Muhammadan Rural): All excesses are condoned!

Sir Harold Shoober: One of the Honourable Members suggested that the officers of the Department might have met it from their very fat salaries. We might have had some sort of levy! With regard to the remarks of the Public Accounts Committee on these matters, I can assure the House that the Department is doing its best to satisfy the members. I hope that what I have said will satisfy our honourable friends that there has not been any prodigal or ill conceived spending in a department which during the war had to bear a very heavy burden indeed.

Seth Govind Das (Central Provinces Hindi Divisions Non-Muhammadan): The Honourable Member has spoken about other things but he did not give any reply to the objection raised by my honourable friend, Mr Ayyangar about the huge sum spent in constructing certain buildings in Jubbulpore. As far as I am aware, because I belong to Jubbulpore, these buildings were constructed for shifting certain Telegraph & Postal Departments which were actually situated in Calcutta, and from the findings—at least from what the Jubbulpore people say—there was no need for shifting those Departments to Jubbulpore. Though I belong to Jubbulpore, and this huge department has been brought there, yet I feel that the poor taxpayer's money should not be spent in this way and the Government should not shift one department from one place to another without adequate reasons. This has been a hobby of the Government which was in power up till now. Without any adequate reasons they used to shift one department from one place to another and spend huge sums on such projects. The same thing was done when the capital was shifted from Calcutta to Delhi. I shall give another example of Jubbulpore. That happened in 1908. There were three factories situated in Presidency towns for making gun carriages, one in Calcutta, one in Bombay and the third in Madras. Now these three factories were shifted from these three presidency towns to Jubbulpore without any reason.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: Good target there!

Seth Govind Das: and a good deal of criticism was made in this respect. My Honourable friend Mr. Ayyangar has rightly pointed out that this huge sum of 15 lakhs was spent in constructing these buildings in Jubbulpore. There was no necessity to shift those departments from Calcutta to Jubbulpore. These demands have come to us today and we do not want to oppose them. We want only to bring this fact to the notice of the Government that the previous government have always been in the habit of shifting departments from one place to another without any adequate reason and this new Government ought to see that the money of the poor taxpayers is not spent in the way it has been done so far.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: Was not there danger of bombing in Calcutta at that time?

Sir Harold Shoober: With your permission, Sir, as it has been stated that I have not dealt with this point which my friend has just now raised, I would like to give a reply to that.

Mr. Deputy President: As a special case I allow it.

The Honourable Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan: It is only on a point of explanation that the Honourable Member desires to speak.

Sir Harold Shoober: The Honourable Member has accused me of omitting to mention the Jubbulpore works. I must crave the indulgence of Honourable Members for not having specifically mentioned that but it really came within the scope of the 16 crores scheme. This workshop was established in Jubbulpore not for the purpose of inconveniencing men who were working in Calcutta nor for the purpose of transferring any general work which was already going on in Calcutta. The position was, as Honourable Members will recall, that about that time India was threatened with invasion from Japan. Calcutta was an exposed area. The Posts and Telegraphs workshops and the work required from them was expanding at an enormous rate and there was no room for what we had to do in Calcutta. There was no safety for what had to be done in Calcutta. The result was that part of the Calcutta workshops was transferred to Jubbulpore. As the Tele-Communication Development scheme went on it became necessary to expand not only Calcutta on its own site to such an extent that there was no room for any more work to be done there but also to expand Jubbulpore to an enormous extent and I may state for the information of Honourable Members that next week when our Standing Advisory Committee is to meet, the question as to the future of our 3 telegraph and telephone workshops at Calcutta, Jubbulpore and Bombay is being taken up for consideration. It was not in any idle way that the workshop was opened in Jubbulpore because the other workshop continued.

Mr. Deputy President: The Question is

"That an excess grant of Rs. 22,50,786 be voted by the Assembly to regularise the expenditure chargeable to revenue actually incurred in excess of the voted grant in the year 1943-44 in respect of 'Indian Posts and Telegraphs Department'."

The motion was adopted.

RailwaysDEMAND No 5—PAYMENTS TO INDIAN STATES AND COMPANIES

The Honourable Mr Liaquat Ali Khan: Sir, I beg to move

"That an excess grant of Rs 12,92,217 be voted by the Assembly to regularise the expenditure chargeable to Railway revenue actually incurred in excess of the voted grant in the year 1943-44 in respect of 'Payments to Indian States and Companies'."

Mr. Deputy President: Motion moved

"That an excess grant of Rs 12,92,217 be voted by the Assembly to regularise the expenditure chargeable to Railway revenue actually incurred in excess of the voted grant in the year 1943-44 in respect of 'Payments to Indian States and Companies'."

Prof. N. G. Ranga, Sn. I wish to draw your attention to a very technical matter. You will find that this is the first of a number of Excess Grants which my Honourable friend the Finance Minister has got to ask this House to give its vote to. Most of these excesses have arisen as a result of the policy of the Government in its Railway Department to come to a settlement in regard to two practices that obtain there. They are referred to on page 9, paragraph 19. There was a convention by which the Railway Board is allowed to authorise expenditure in excess of what is voted by the Legislature in one particular grant in the hope that it will be met by savings elsewhere within the same grant. There was another convention by which the Railways are authorised to exceed the budget allotments in one grant if they expected savings in another.

The Public Accounts Committee said

"This latter arrangement is however tantamount to reappropriation being allowed between eight different grants and we regard this as most unsatisfactory."

Therefore the Committee suggested that

"Instead of adopting this subterfuge which has been necessitated by the peculiar conditions of the Railways but which is quite contrary to all canons of budgeting and financial control, it might be better to revert to the system of having one grant for Working Expenses in a whole of which the excess grant could be subvented, between which reappropriations would be allowed in the normal course. We should like the Railway Department to re-examine this matter in detail in consultation with the Auditor General and present a report to the Committee. Till the matter is settled the present arrangements should continue."

I would like to know at what stage the whole matter rests. It seems necessary that some agreement should be reached in regard to this particular matter in order to avoid this very large number of excess expenditure that the railways are obliged to indulge in. Unfortunately it so happens that the Railways and the Posts and Telegraphs have had to resort to this method in order to meet several unforeseen expenditures under various items. That is why those two conventions were reached, one independent of the other, almost one overlapping the other and there is a certain amount of conflict in the way in which these two conventions could be worked. Therefore it has become necessary for the Public Accounts Committee to draw the attention of the Government to the necessity of harmonising these two conventions, so that the financial practices of the Railways as well as the Posts and Telegraphs Department could be placed on a sounder footing. I dare say that the Government have already paid attention to this particular recommendation of the Public Accounts Committee and I would like to know what they have done or propose to do.

Mr. I. S. Puri (Government of India Nominated Official) Sir, the second convention to which Professor Ranga has referred (and this was objected to by the Public Accounts Committee which examined the accounts of 1943-44) related to the setting off of excesses under one grant against savings under another. This practice is, strictly speaking, irregular; it is not permitted by the legislature rules. But when the present arrangement of grants was decided upon, it was agreed by the then Public Accounts Committee that in order not to place undue restrictions on the powers of General Managers, a convention might be adopted under which a General Manager, if he had savings under one grant, could set off that against excesses under another, but that this would not do away with the necessity of a vote by the Assembly. This procedure was objected to last year by the Public Accounts Committee, and they recommended that the whole position should be re-examined in consultation with the Auditor General. This has been done, and proposals for a rearrangement of demands for grants—which arrangement it is claimed is more logical and more scientific than the existing arrangement—and a memorandum was placed before the Standing Finance Committee after obtaining the concurrence of the Auditor General to the re-arrangement. The Standing Finance Committee approved of the revision of the arrangement of demands for grants, and last month the matter came up before the Public Accounts Committee and that committee approved of that arrangement. Now when the budget for 1947-48 will be placed before this House next February, the budget will be according to the new demands for grants. That is the position.

As regards the other points—the other convention to which Prof Ranga has referred, the position is this when, after the 1921 convention resolution, the Standing Finance Committee examined the question of the demands into which working expenses for railways should be divided, it was made clear at that time too that railway budgeting was on a somewhat different footing from other departments budgeting. Strictly speaking, reappropriation requires two orders: actual additional allotment to one authority, and a corresponding withdrawal from another spending department. But the question has been considered several times in the Public Accounts Committee and it has been accepted that it is not always possible for the Railway Board to locate a saving. While on a general consideration of the progress of expenditure they may say that a certain excess on a railway would be covered by a saving on some other railway, it is not always possible to say on which railway and under which detailed head of the grant the saving would occur, and therefore it was held that the Railway Board might be allowed in such cases to authorise a particular railway to incur expenditure in the hope that at the end of the year there would be savings somewhere from which to meet those excesses and that in the Public Accounts Committee the Railway Board representative would be prepared to defend their actions and that convention remains.

I would like to point out in this connection now about the other point which Prof Ranga raised, that it is these conventions that have led to these excesses over the final grants. I submit that those conventions have nothing to do with these excesses. These excesses would have taken place in any case. The reasons for these excesses are these. In the first place, after the revised budget had been prepared and the supplementary demand for 1943-44 had been voted by the Assembly, orders were issued which took effect from the 1st of March 1944 revising the dearness allowance rules and extending the dearness allowance concessions to a larger body of railway staff. This must inevitably cause an excess over the revised estimate because at the time that the revised estimate prepared these orders had not been issued and had not been allowed for in working out the sums which the Assembly was asked to vote on. That is one point.

The other thing is this. It has been recognised all along that the railway estimates are different in some respects from the estimates of other ordinary spending departments. Railway estimates of expenses are at best an indication of the expenditure that will be necessary in order to carry a certain amount of traffic. Nobody will, I dare say, suggest that if a General Manager has to carry more traffic than he estimated for in his estimates of revenue and working expenses, he should refuse to carry that traffic, because he has not got money either under coal or under operating staff or something else. Our estimate therefore is only an indication of how much money we shall spend in order to carry a certain amount of traffic. During the war years the traffic estimates have been exceedingly difficult and this is because of the unpredictability of the course of the war. Military traffic, for example, rose very steeply and we had to carry that traffic, with the result that expenditure actually exceeded the estimates that we had prepared in February. That is the real reason. The income was larger and therefore the expenditure also had to be larger, and one of the excesses—revenue appropriation to reserve—is only a consequential adjustment, because the earnings were more and the surplus was more and therefore there was a large reappropriation to reserve.

As regards the general question of control, this question was also raised by the Standing Finance Committee particularly by my friend, Mr. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar, when last June we had a meeting to consider the question of the second all India railway strike, and then the opinion was expressed by the committee that there was need for taking active steps to tighten up the machinery for financial control of railway expenditure, both at headquarters and on the railways. This recommendation was accepted by the Government, and now certain steps are under very active consideration as to how that machinery for financial control should be tightened. In due course the matter will come before the Railway Standing Finance Committee.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will the Public Accounts Committee also be consulted on it?

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: May I ask one or two questions? The Honourable Member spoke about the traffic of American troops. May I know whether this was under the lend-lease arrangement or whether the railway actually received the money for that traffic from somebody? Will he also say why no adjustment was made either from the Standing Finance Committee or in the Assembly during the last two years? At least the matter ought to have been brought to the notice of the Standing Finance Committee, if not of the legislature.

The next point is that these demands under these various items amount to some Rs. 80 lakhs odd. I want to know whether there has been a saving in some other departments in order to meet this additional demand.

Mr. I. S. Puri: Sir, I was talking of the military traffic, not of the American military traffic. In any case whatever the arrangements may have been between the War Department and the Government of India and the U. S. A. Government, so far as the Railway Department is concerned, they got their full freight, according to the rates and so, the question of bringing the loss to the notice of this House or the Standing Finance Committee did not arise.

As regards the third question of Dr. Zia Uddin, the point is that there was no question of corresponding savings. These are all working expenses, because the traffic exceeded our anticipations. Therefore the working expenses exceeded also. He will notice that these working expenses have gone up under most of the items under which the working expenses are shown and there is no corresponding saving in working expenses. There is more than a corresponding increase in revenue which covered these expenses.

Mr. Deputy President: The question is

"That an excess grant of Rs. 12,92,217 be voted by the Assembly to regularise the expenditure chargeable to Railway revenue actually incurred in excess of the voted grant in the year 1943-44 in respect of 'Payments to Indian States and Companies'."

The motion was adopted.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Friday the 1st November 1946.

QUOTA OF REPARATIONS ALLOTTED TO INDIA BY THE REPARATIONS AGENCY, BRUSSELS

†142. *Sardar Mangal Singh: Will the Secretary of the Commerce Department please state.

(a) whether the interim Government have considered the question that India should not accept the quota of reparations allotted to her by the Reparations Agency, Brussels, and

(b) whether any equipment described in the three lists placed on the table of the House on the 20th February 1946 in reply to Mr K C Neogy's Starred Question No 391 has actually been received by India as advance deliveries?

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: (a) No

(b) No The Inter-Alled Reparations Agency at Brussels who are responsible for allocation of German reparations to claimant countries have so far allocated eleven German Plants to some of those countries. One of these plants, viz, Wagner Plant at Dortmund—No 6 in the A C C List No 1 and No 1008 in I A R A List No 1 has been allocated to India subject to arbitration claimed by the United Kingdom in respect of five machines out of this plant, under Art 7 of Part II of the Paris Agreement on German reparations. The arbitrator's award has been given in favour of the United Kingdom. The question whether the plant despite the removal of five of its machines should be accepted by India is now under the consideration of Government

FURTHER QUOTA OF REPARATIONS RECEIVED FROM GERMAN

†143. *Sardar Mangal Singh With reference to the answer to Starred Question No 391, asked by Mr K C Neogy on the 20th February 1946 will the Secretary of the Commerce Department please state

(a) the further lists of equipment that have been received, and

(b) the details as to how the equipment described in the three lists of capital equipment laid on the table of the House on the 20th February, 1946, as also the equipment received thereafter has been disposed of?

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: (a) and (b) The three lists referred to were circulated by the Allied Control Council in Berlin but later the procedure regarding circulation of lists was changed. German plants declared available for reparations delivery are now placed at the disposal of the Inter-Alled Reparations Agency who circulate lists of available plants to claimant countries. Two lists have so far been received from the I A R A and most of the plants figuring in the original A C C lists have appeared in these two lists. As regards the present position in respect of allocation of plants to India, I would invite the Honourable Member's attention to the answer given to Part (b) of his Starred Question No 142

RE-EMPLOYMENT OF RELEASED ARMY PERSONNEL BY THE RESETTLEMENT DIRECTORATE

†144. *Sardar Mangal Singh (a) Will the Honourable the Labour Member please state what percentage of the Army personnel released from the Defence forces has been re-employed as a result of the efforts of the Resettlement Directorate?

(b) Do Government intend to intensify their efforts to re-employ personnel released from the Army?

(c) Is there any proposal to re-organise the Resettlement Directorate and transfer some sections to the Provincial Administrations?

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: (a) The total number of releases from the Indian Army up to the 30th September, 1946, was approximately 8,65,500. Not all the men released require employment assistance. So far 3,21,302 ex-servicemen have asked for employment assistance from the Employment Exchanges and of these 51,824 or 16 per cent are known to have been placed in employment as the direct result of the efforts of the Employment Exchanges under the Directorate-General of Resettlement and Employment

† Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent

(b) Yes, Sir Every effort is being made to intensify the drive for the re-employment of demobilised personnel Among the recent measures adopted in this connection is the setting up of the Directorate of Employment in the Directorate-General of Resettlement and Employment This Directorate is charged with the special responsibility of tapping all available sources of employment in the country and of stimulating the employment-creating activities of employers, both Government and private

(c) The work of the Resettlement and Employment Organisation in the Labour Department is under constant review and some reorganisation has been effected recently with a view to achieving the maximum results with the minimum cost to the taxpayer To quote one instance, the Directorates dealing with technical, vocational, disabled and women's training have been amalgamated into one common Directorate

The question of transferring some section of the Resettlement and Employment Organisation to the Provincial Administrations was recently discussed at a Conference of Provincial Labour Ministers and it was decided that for some time to come central co-ordination and control would be necessary before Employment Exchanges and training schemes are handed over to the Provincial Governments

CREATION OF A NEW PORTFOLIO TO LOOK AFTER THE INTERESTS OF SCHEDULED CASTES

†145. *Sardar Mangal Singh Will the Honourable the Leader of the House please state

(a) whether there is any proposal to create a new portfolio specifically to look after the interests and betterment of the scheduled classes, and

(b) if the answer to part (a) above be in the negative what alternative measures Government propose to take for the betterment of the scheduled classes?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: (a) No

(b) The Honourable Member may rest assured that the interests and welfare of the scheduled classes will be fully safeguarded in all matters concerning the Central Government

FORWARD POLICY IN CONNECTION WITH THE FRONTIER TRIBES

146. *Pandit Sri Krishna Dutt Paliwal. Will the Honourable Member for External Affairs be pleased to state if Government intend to give up the forward policy in connection with the Frontier Tribes? If so, when?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru. There is an old argument between advocates of a "forward" policy and those of a "close-border" policy on the North-West Frontier The present policy has been a compromise between the two, it is now under close and careful consideration

ESTABLISHMENT OF FRIENDLY RELATIONS WITH THE FAKIR OF IPI

147. *Pandit Sri Krishna Dutt Paliwal: Will the Honourable Member for External Affairs be pleased to state if the Government intend to end the feud with the Fakir of Ipi and establish friendly relations with him?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: Government have no desire to carry on a feud with anybody and would welcome friendly relations with the Fakir of Ipi

Shri Sri Prakasa: Is it a fact that the Fakir of Ipi has written to the Honourable Member asking for an interview or expressing a desire to carry on negotiations?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: Well, Sir, I have received a number of letters, some purporting to come from the friends of the Fakir of Ipi and some possibly from the Fakir of Ipi himself It is a little difficult to be quite certain whether they have come from the Fakir himself or from others. In the course of these letters much has been said to the effect that they would like to have contacts and relations.

† Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Has the Honourable Member seen in today's Hindustan Times the news that the Fakir of Ipi has said to Khan Abdul Ghafoor Khan that he was prevented from seeing the Honourable Member himself during his recent visit in the tribal areas because of local political agents?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: I have not seen this particular item of news in the paper and so I cannot say anything about it.

Seth Govind Das: Did the Honourable Member have any political talks with the political servants of the Frontier when he was on tour with respect to the Fakir of Ipi?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: I had no opportunity, but the Fakir of Ipi's name came in the course of talks certainly.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: The Honourable Member has said that 'possibly' the letter came from the Fakir of Ipi. What are the presumptions by saying that? Why does the Honourable Member say that it was possibly from the Fakir of Ipi?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: There is no presumption. I said that a letter comes to me the signature on which it is rather difficult to decipher and I was not quite sure myself. That is why I said that it might be from him.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable Member take the House in his confidence and tell us the nature of the replies, if any, which he has sent to these letters?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: I have sent no reply to any recent communication. I have received some—one I think, reached me when I was in the Frontier and one subsequent to my return. To either of these I have sent no reply in writing. Orally, I mentioned to those people who said they were the friends of the Fakir of Ipi that we will be able to contact with him and to resume friendly relations.

EX-SERVICE W A C (I)S SEEKING EMPLOYMENT IN CIVIL LIFE

148 *Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable the Labour Member be pleased to state the number of W A C (I)s ex-service women seeking re-settlement and employment in civil life through Government?

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: The total number of ex-service women, who have asked for re-settlement and employment assistance and been registered at the Employment Exchanges upto 30th September 1946 is 802. The number of ex-service women who have so far applied for training is 160.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Is there any truth in the newspaper reports that the Honourable Member is intending to find suitable husbands for these W A C (I)s as an avenue of employment?

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: There is no truth in that report. Sir, The Labour Department does not function as a matrimonial agency but if my Honourable friend will approach the Government with such a proposal, the Government will consider it.

Shrimati Ammu Swaminadhan: May I ask the Honourable Member what kind of training is being given to these W A C (I) girls who later on have to take to civil life?

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: They are to be trained in a number of things, such as tailoring, embroidery, lace work, cookery, beauty culture, hair dressing and other things.

Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai: As a result of this training, will the Honourable Member state how many of these girls have got the employment?

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: The training has not yet started.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Has the Honourable Member's attention been drawn to a beautiful piece of poem published in a local paper at Benares in which the Honourable Member is described as a prospective mother-in-law of all these W A C (I)s?

Mr. President: Dr Chatterjee, next supplementary question

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee. Will the Honourable Member consider the desirability of transferring these training departments for the W A C (I)s to the Education Department who are much more qualified to give this training than the Labour Department?

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram. The schemes for their training were discussed in consultation with the Education Department and whenever new schemes are to be started, they will be started after consultation with that Department.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee Is there not a great deal of overlapping and waste of money and personnel between the Education Department and the Directorate of Re-settlement which, under this training scheme do not naturally belong to them?

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram. There is no overlapping at all. The whole question was discussed recently in a Conference of the Provincial Labour Ministers, some of whom were Education Ministers as well in their provinces. We are trying to co-ordinate our activities with the Provincial Governments and are trying to avoid any possible overlapping.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee Have the Education Departments of these Provincial Governments been consulted with regard to these schemes or any educational authorities not being Government servants, consulted on this most important work of training?

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram As a matter of fact, so far as the training is concerned, the Provincial Governments are certainly consulted. Not only that the Provincial Governments contribute towards the cost of this training. As regards consulting non official bodies I am not certain I will enquire into the matter.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee Have any women's organisations like the All-India Council of Women or the Provincial Councils of Women been consulted on this important matter which very largely concerns and interests them?

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram I presume they might have been consulted but I am not sure.

Lala Deshbandhu Gupta: Will the Honourable Member give an idea of the monthly expenditure that is being incurred on the training of these W A C (I)s?

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram As I said, the training has not yet started.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena May I ask what are the qualifications of the Deputy Director who was appointed to give training to these W A C (I)s?

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: She is a very highly qualified lady. She is a M A and holds other degrees as well. I have not got the file with me and I cannot give her exact qualifications but I am sure she possesses requisite qualifications.

SITUATION IN SOUTH AFRICA 77 SATYAGRAHA STRUGGLE

149 Shri Sri Prakasa Will the Honourable Member for Commonwealth Relations be pleased to state

(a) the situation in South Africa with regard to the Satyagraha struggle of our countrymen there,

(b) the nature of the assistance, if any, that the Government of India is giving to our countrymen in South Africa in their struggle, and

(c) if there has been any further correspondence between the Governments of India and South Africa with regard to the position of our countrymen there, and if so, its nature and result?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: (a) Government have nothing new to add to the information which is being published from time to time in the press. The passive resistance movement in South Africa is still continuing in the form in which it was started, namely peaceful occupation of land in non-exempted areas in civil disobedience of the provisions of the Asiatic Land Tenure and Indian Representation Act. Passive resisters continue to be arrested and charged under the Riotous Assemblies Act. Official figures show that up to the end of September 733 Indians were convicted and sentenced, and 450 had been released after serving their sentences. For the most part uniform sentences of a fine of £3 or 30 days imprisonment have been passed. Three months' imprisonment is awarded for the second sentence, and a few leaders have been sentenced to six months' imprisonment. A telegram received from the Passive Resistance Council on the 24th October says that the total number of convictions up to that date was 1,269. At a mass demonstration on the 23rd October, the opening date of the United Nations Organisation Assembly session, a batch of 323 passive resisters courted imprisonment. Recently a section of Indians in South Africa suggested a suspension of the passive resistance movement and a Round Table Conference to consider the whole position, but the bulk of the community appeared to be opposed to this approach. The movement still continues and has caught the imagination of the Indians. It is understood that it has also won the sympathy of the Africans, some of whom have actively joined the movement. Some Europeans have also supported and joined the movement.

(b) The Government of India are not sending any direct material help to the passive resisters but as my Honourable friend knows, we have taken up the whole case of our countrymen in South Africa in the United Nations Assembly.

(c) No, Sir.

Seth Govind Das: There are some people who are called coloured people in South Africa. Have they also joined the movement?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: I do not know what my Honourable friend means by 'coloured people'. I suppose both Indians and Africans might be referred to as 'coloured people' by Europeans there.

Seth Govind Das: There are about a million people in South Africa, who are technically called 'coloured people' and actually are a mixture of South Africans and Europeans there. Have they also joined the movement?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: I do not exactly know what they have done.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: The so-called bantus.

Shri Sri Prakasa: With reference to the answer to part (b) of the question, may I know if while not giving any material assistance the Government of India are prepared to say that the movement is such has their moral support?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: The whole activity of the Government of India ever since this movement started has been one of giving moral support for this movement.

Shrimati Ammu Swaminadhan: May I know how many women are imprisoned in this movement in South Africa?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: I could not give the exact numbers, but I understand that women are taking prominent part in the movement.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Are any steps being taken to publicise the progress of this movement through our various diplomatic representatives in different countries?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: I am afraid the answer to that question will have to be given by my Honourable Colleague the Member in charge of Information Department.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Has the Honourable Member any information about the nature of treatment given to our prisoners in jails there?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: Many complaints were made of the bad treatment given in prisons but subsequently it was stated that the treatment has improved.

Seth Govind Das: Is there any such class as political prisoners in South African jails?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru. I do not know, Sir.

DETENTION AND IMPRISONMENT OF AFGHAN PRINCES IN INDIA

150. *Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable Member for External Affairs be pleased to state

(a) the number of Afghan princes who are at present in detention and imprisonment in India

(b) the reasons for their being thus kept,

(c) the amount of money that is being paid to or spent for them and their families by Government for their maintenance, and

(d) if it is the intention of Government to release them and permit them to go back to their country, and, if so, when?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: (a) The total number of Afghan personages in India at present under restraint under Regulation III of 1818 is 26. Of these, one is under temporary detention which is likely to end shortly. The rest live in their own houses under surveillance in various parts of India.

(b) For reasons of State connected with India's international obligation to a neighbouring friendly Government.

(c) Approximately Rs. 80,000 per annum is paid by Government on account of the maintenance of these persons and the education of their children.

(d) In accordance with the principle of good neighbourliness and international practice the Government of India are under certain obligations to the Afghan Government in connection with whom the cases of these persons are in process of review. The Government of India hope that as a result some of them may be able to return if they so wish to their own country while the restrictions on the movements of others may be relaxed.

Mr Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: May I know whether he is aware of the fact that most of these Afghan detainees receive a scanty monthly allowance of not more than Rs. 60 a month? If so, will he consider the desirability of increasing their allowance in view of the fact that it is very difficult for them to maintain themselves in these difficult times?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: I have placed on the table today a whole list of all the Afghan detainees and others who are paid any allowances in answer to a previous question and the Honourable Member will be able to refer to them. It is true, I think that in many cases those allowances are very small; they have become smaller and smaller because of the fact that each allowance on the death of the person is divided up among his children and the result is that in most cases the allowance is too inadequate, but my Honourable friend must understand that this matter will be considered.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Am I to understand from the Honourable Member's reply to parts (b) and (c) of my question that these Afghan Princes are being kept in custody or in detention at the desire of the Afghan Government conveyed to the Government of India and that the Afghan Government pays Rs. 80,000 that are being spent on the Princes?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: So far as I know, the Afghan Government pays nothing at all. The cost is borne entirely by this Government. Any person who is under restraint in India is kept so, because as I have stated, of international obligations, not because of our wishes in the matter.

Khan Muhammad Yamin Khan: May I ask whether in the case of those Princes whose movements are restricted and who cannot earn their own living, it is not the obligation of the Government of India to pay them sufficient allowances so that they may live a reasonably decent living?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: Yes, Sir I think it is the obligation of the Government in case of people whose movements are restricted to pay them adequate allowance.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Is it not a fact that an application was submitted by them before the Honourable Member took over charge and his reply to them was that "while it was not possible for him to take any steps in regard to the detention or the maintenance allowance of the petitioners until the Government of India as then constituted was completely changed, he considered that the treatment accorded by that Government to the petitioners was unjust, and unworthy andiggardly" and in view of that fact, will the Honourable Member, now that he has taken over the portfolio of this Department, consider the desirability of giving them full justice?

Mr. President: The Honourable Member is referring to individual cases.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: No, Sir, all of them submitted a general petition to the Honourable Member before he took over charge and his opinion then was that the treatment given to them by the then Government of India was "unjust and unworthy andiggardly". My contention is that now that the Honourable Member has taken over charge of this Department will he very kindly see that full justice is done to them particularly increase their allowances in keeping with their old status?

Mr. President: That has already been answered.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Is it a fact that sometimes a husband is confined in Quetta and the wife in Dehra Dun and that at the desire of the husband, the wife's allowance is sent to him rather than to her?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: I should be very glad if the Honourable Member will supply me with details of this case to enable me to enquire into it.

Shri Sri Prakasa: If the Honourable Member would please look into the files of his department he will find a big correspondence from me on the subject.

ESTABLISHMENT OF INDIAN DIPLOMATIC SERVICE

151. *Sardar Mangal Singh: Will the Honourable Member for External Affairs please state whether it is contemplated to establish a separate Indian Diplomatic Service? If so, what are its rules regarding recruitment, etc.?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: It has been decided that a separate Indian Foreign Service should be established. Matters of detail such as the rules for recruitment, etc., are still under consideration.

Sardar Mangal Singh: May I know whether recruitment to these services will be done by open competition?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: With regard to this matter sometime back a fairly long press statement was issued. I should like to draw the attention of the Honourable Member to that statement. It is proposed to have recruitment for this service probably through the same channels as normal recruitment for what may be the future civil service of India, but probably also with some special courses attached to them.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: Is it the intention of the Government to combine this new service with the present Indian political service or amalgamate the two?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: No, Sir. The new service which is proposed would be entirely new, but a number of people from the existing political service will be taken into it, a number of people from other Government of India services will also be taken and a number of people outside the services will also be taken. Quite apart from the new recruitment which will be through competitive channels, we have to get a fairly large number to start with, fairly large number of persons of various degrees of seniority and these will have to be taken from the present political service from the I.C.S. and others who are not in service today.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: Then is it the intention of Government to continue a separate political service if it now exists?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: The present political service consists of those employed in the Indian States, those employed by the External Affairs Department, and some people serving abroad. All these services will have to be changed completely. The foreign service will deal with all representation abroad, it has nothing to do with the Indian States. Commercial representation, diplomatic and consular—all these will be in the foreign service. So while the present political service will cease to be, as to what is to happen to the Indian States is a difficult constitutional problem with which we are not concerned now.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Will Government give my special consideration or facilities for the inclusion in this service of those men who have rendered good service during the last five or six years and who are now being sent away but who have been reported well during their period of service? I refer specially to people in the Indian army, navy and air force.

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: Undoubtedly Sir.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Sir, before you go on to the next question I should like to be enlightened on a point of procedure. Is it within the rights of an Honourable Member to ask a sixth question as Sadur Mungul Singh has done today and intends to do every day? You already called his name five times before—he being absent at the time—and his motion had thus been finished.

Mr. President: In view of his absence no questions were asked before and so this was his first question.

NON-CO-OPERATION OF MINISTRY OF BENGAL WITH THE PRESENT (INTERIM) GOVERNMENT OF INDIA

†152. Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal Will the Leader of the House be pleased to state—

(a) whether it is a fact that the present Ministry of Bengal has taken up an attitude of non-co-operation with the present Government of India (known as the Interim Government),

(b) whether Government are aware of the utterances made by the Bengal Ministers to that effect;

(c) in how many meetings or conferences or committees (whether of a formal, informal or other nature) convened or assembled at the instance of the Central Government or of the members or Departments of the Central Government and attended by representatives of Provincial Governments in September and October, 1946 the Bengal Government did not represent themselves;

(d) whether Government or the Ministry or any of the Ministers of Bengal have explained their non-attendance or non-representation in such gatherings; if so, what, and

(e) how the Central Government propose to put into operation their plans and programmes of welfare in Bengal if the Ministry of the Province continues in this policy of isolation and non-co-operation?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: (a) and (b) There is no reason to think that the Bengal Government have taken up an attitude of non-co-operation with the Government of India though certain statements have been made which may have given that impression.

(c) So far as I know the Bengal Government has been represented at meetings or conferences convened at the instance of the Government of India or of Central Departments.

† Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner having not put up the question.

- (d) Yes
(e) Does not arise

SUPERFLUOUS OFFICERS IN KARACHI CUSTOMS HOUSE

†153. Beth Sukhdev (a) Will the Secretary of the Commerce Department be pleased to state whether Government are aware that a superfluous staff of officers is being maintained in the Karachi Customs House since 1943 in connection with the working of the import and export trade control which has necessitated incurring of huge expenditure?

(b) If the reply to part (a) above is in the affirmative, what steps have been taken or are being taken to reduce the number of officers?

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: (a) No superfluous staff of officers has ever been maintained in connection with the working of the import and export trade control at Karachi.

(b) Does not arise, but the Staff position is reviewed from time to time.

APPOINTMENT OF SIR PATRICK SPENS, CHIEF JUSTICE OF INDIA AS CHAIRMAN OF CALCUTTA DISTURBANCES COMMISSION

154. Mr. K. C. Neogy (a) With reference to the appointment of Sir Patrick Spens, Chief Justice of India, as Chairman of the Calcutta Disturbances Commission, has the attention of the Honourable the Leader of the House been drawn to the following Press statement of the Chief Minister of Bengal published in Calcutta on the 1st September, 1946:

"I am taking steps to set up such a tribunal and have already requested His Excellency the Viceroy to assist me in securing the personnel that will command the confidence of the public."

(b) Was the appointment of Sir Patrick Spens as Chairman of the Commission entirely a matter of negotiation between His Excellency the Viceroy and the Chief Minister of Bengal, or did the question come up for the consideration of the Government of India at the instance of the Government of Bengal at any stage or in any form? What was the actual procedure followed in this matter, from the initiation of the proposal, to the actual deputation or appointment of the Chairman?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: (a) Yes.

(b) I understand that the Bengal Government approached His Excellency the Viceroy through His Excellency the Governor to secure the services of the Chief Justice of India. The Viceroy's good offices were given in his personal capacity and there was no reference to the Government of India. I have no further information.

EXPANSION AND RE-ORGANISATION OF GEOLOGICAL SURVEY OF INDIA

155. Mr. K. C. Neogy (a) Will the Honourable Member for Works, Mines and Power be pleased to state the progress made in carrying out the detailed scheme of expansion of the Geological Survey of India referred to by Dr. Ambedkar in a debate in the Legislative Assembly on the 12th March, 1945, and specially indicating the action taken for the establishment of different branches of the Geological Survey to deal with Engineering Geology, Industrial utilisation of minerals, Central mineral development, geophysical work and oil development, respectively?

(b) Is any comprehensive re-organisation of the superior administrative machinery of the Mines Department contemplated? If so, will the Honourable Member indicate the approximate time when, and the lines on which, such re-organisation is likely to take place?

(c) What opinions have been expressed by the different Provincial Governments in the matter of undertaking Central legislation for the purpose of establishing necessary control over minerals, to which reference was made by Dr. Ambedkar on the occasion mentioned above, and what is the Government's programme in this behalf?

† Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent.

(d) Has any action been taken during recent months, or is proposed to be taken in the near future, specially in regard to control over the prospecting for oil and the granting of concessions thereon? If so, on what lines has such action been taken or is contemplated?

(e) With reference to the Advisory Board appointed by the Government in January, 1946, to advise them on problems connected with the mineral development of the country, will the Honourable Member please lay on the table of the House a statement showing the various topics on which the advice of the Board has been sought and the purport of the advice tendered by them?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: (a) A statement showing the various steps taken for the reorganisation and expansion of the Geological Survey of India is laid on the table.

(b) The Mines Inspectorate was recently strengthened by the addition of two more posts of Inspector of Mines and two posts of Junior District Inspector of Mines.

(c) The replies of the Provincial Governments who were addressed in July 1945 were generally favourable to the idea of Central co-ordination, provided the income from royalties etc. and the execution of policy was left in the hands of Provincial Governments. A fresh approach to the subject is, however, under contemplation, as the views previously expressed were in many cases those of the Section 93 administrations.

(d) The question of control over the prospecting for oil and the granting of concessions is still under consideration. It may, however, be pointed out that the responsibility rests primarily on the Provincial Governments concerned.

(e) The advice of the Board has not been sought so far on any point. The whole question of mineral policy including Central co-ordination and regulation and Central legislation is under consideration.

REORGANISATION AND EXPANSION OF THE GEOLOGICAL SURVEY OF INDIA

1. In order to enable the Geological Survey of India to undertake extensive exploration of the country's mineral and water resources and thus assist post-war plans for industrial and economic development, the following steps have been taken :-

(i) Fixation of the target for the staff of the Survey, the target to be reached as rapidly as possibilities of recruitment and training of new recruits admit. The first stage of expansion has already begun with the creation of some new posts and recruitment of staff. The following table shows the pre-war strength, the present sanction and the proposed target excluding the ministerial and other subordinate technical posts.

	Pre-war strength	*Present sanction	Target
Director	1	1	1
Superintending Geologists	3	10	10
Geologists	12	30	34
Assistant Geologists	10	35	80
Geophysicists		2	2
Petroleum Geologist		1	1
Mining Engineer		1	1
Deputy Mining Engineer		1	1
Chemist	1	1	1
Assistant Chemist	1	9	9

* Includes temporary posts

(ii) Creation of a temporary post of "States Liaison Officer" in the Survey with a view to securing a co-ordinated programme of geological investigations directed towards the orderly exploitation of mineral resources in the various Indian States

(iii) Expansion of the library organisation so as to ensure proper indexing of all material, and the formation of a properly designed information and publicity organisation. The steps taken in this direction are —

(a) resumption of Geological Survey of India publications

(b) opening of library and statistical sections in the Geological Survey of India Office

(c) formation of a Mineral Information Bureau to give information and advice to industries

(d) Publication of a quarterly journal called "Indian Minerals" containing articles written mainly in non-technical language on matters relating to the different aspects of mineral development in India, and short accounts of such developments in other parts of the world. The first issue of the journal will appear in January 1947

(e) Publicity in U K and other countries under consideration

(iv) Inclusion in the Geological Survey of branches to deal with mineral development, engineering and water supply problems, geophysical investigations and drilling as indicated below

(a) formation of mineral development section to carry out exploratory mining

(b) establishment of a Geophysical Section under an expert Italian Geophysicist with a staff of surveyors and an Italian Technician. Proposals for further strengthening this section are under consideration

(c) Creation of a separate drilling branch under a Drilling Expert. Proposals for, the necessary staff, purchase of the required number of drills, and the establishment of a base workshop, are under consideration

(d) Formation of a branch for Engineering Geology and Ground Water Section. The Superintending Geologist in-charge of this branch was recently placed on deputation in America to study engineering geological problems

(e) Expansion and modernisation of the laboratory. The number of chemists has been increased and a large quantity of new instruments have been ordered from abroad

(f) Placing of orders in U K, U S A, and Italy for a large quantity of equipment for the geophysical section and for the expanded activities of the Survey

The branches mentioned above will be available for two purposes—advice to the public in carrying forward their own investigation developments and mining and the actual pushing forward of field investigations to the stage at which commercial possibilities become apparent

2 Recruitment of Staff—Two factors militate against the immediate recruitment of personnel —

(i) paucity of suitable geologists and the difficulty of giving field training to a large number of recruits, and

(ii) the necessity of so arranging the expansion as to secure a balanced cadre

Although a number of posts in the different grade were sanctioned a year ago it has not been possible as yet to get the full complement, with the result that detailed surveys in certain Provinces, e.g., Orissa, Andaman Nicobar Islands, are being held up

A certain number of posts in the grade of Superintending geologist and geologist and specialist posts have yet to be filled up. Some of these have been advertised in U K and U S A and nominations from these countries are still awaited. Advertisements in India for geologists, geophysicist and petroleum geologist have produced no satisfactory results, it has been decided to re-advertise the required number of geologists during this winter

As regards Assistant Geologists, all the vacancies available for civilian candidates and a portion of the quota reserved for war service candidates have been filled up. The Federal Public Service Commission are taking steps to fill the remaining 21 vacancies reserved for war service candidates. A few temporary Assistant Geologists have also been recruited through the Commission to fill up the vacancies arising out of the promotion of permanent Assistant Geologists as Geologists

3 Training of junior officers—In accordance with the decision to send all new recruits in the Assistant Geologist grade for training abroad, it was agreed to send about 12 Assistant Geologists during each of the years 1945, 1947 and 1948 to the Melbourne University in Australia for practical training. 8 Assistant Geologists have been sent this year to Australia and they are expected to return to India after completion of training in November next. It is hoped that by 1948 geological training in the Indian Universities will have improved to the extent required

4 Geological Education—It is considered necessary to strengthen the geological faculty in the Indian Universities with a view to improve the standard of teaching in Geology so that recruits from the Universities may be fit for service in the Geological Survey of India. To examine this question a Committee with the following personnel has been appointed —

- | | |
|---|-----------|
| (1) Dr Paria—Vice Chancellor, Utkal University (Chairman) | } Members |
| (2) Dr West, Director, Geological Survey of India | |
| (3) Dr Wadia, Adviser on Mineral development | |

The Committee has just submitted its report to Government

5 Advisory Board to Assist the Survey—The reorganisation of the Survey has, as one of its objects, planning of mineral development. An Advisory Board has been formed of experts to advise on a short term and long term planned policy of mineral development

6 Neither the expansion plan chalked out nor the present target figure of geological staff can be considered as final. The steps so far taken for the expansion and reorganisation of the Survey on modern lines are intended to form the first stage in its progressive development and are designed to enable it to take its place, along with other scientific organisations in the planned economy of the country

Mr. K. C. Neogy: With reference to part (d) of the question, is it not a fact that control over concessions in such an important article as oil is exercised by the Provincial Governments, simply because of the failure of the Central Government to take necessary legislative authority to regulate such concessions?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: Under the Government of India Act mineral development comes under the provincial field except to the extent to which regulation and development under federal control is authorised by an Act of the federal Legislature. So far there has been no such Act, and therefore the Honourable Member is quite right in saying that the responsibility is still with the provincial Governments

Mr. K. C. Neogy: With reference to the reply to part (c) where the Honourable Member said that the provinces had agreed to a measure of central co-ordination, will he refer to the question itself and see that I asked for information regarding central legislation and not central co-ordination? I should like to know whether that aspect of the matter has been brought to the notice of the provincial Governments, namely, the desirability of having central legislation, in terms of the constitution to which the Honourable Member has just referred, enabling the Central Government to assume control in regard to certain matters relating to mineral concessions and developments

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: The Provincial Governments were generally consulted on all the questions involved, firstly, the question of co-ordination as between different provinces, secondly, the question of regulation of mineral development on an all-India basis, then there were other questions like export and import policy, the possibility of specialised training and research, and finally the question of executive machinery to give effect to the new policy and the legislation required to give effect to the policy as a whole. Provincial Governments were consulted on all these points and a variety of opinions was expressed, some favourable and some unfavourable. But generally what Government felt was that a fresh approach should be made to this question and that approach is now in contemplation. The Honourable Member in charge proposes to have a meeting of provincial Ministers where the whole matter will be placed before them, and the policy including the execution of policy and legislation necessary for the same will be considered

Mr. Manu Subedar: I understand that Government have also approached the Indian States with a view to central co-ordination. I do not wish to embarrass the Honourable Member but is he in a position to tell the House now to what extent response has come from that quarter for an all-India co-ordination or all-India legislation?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: It is also proposed to invite to this conference representatives of Indian States. I am not in a position to say what the response is likely to be

Mr. K. C. Neogy: With reference to the reply to part (e), is the Honourable Member aware of the dissatisfaction that has been expressed from time to time at the non-representative and the unsatisfactory character of the composition of the Advisory Board?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: That was partly the reason why no meeting of the Board has been held

EXISTENCE OF MINERAL SOURCES OF ATOMIC ENERGY IN INDIA AND ITS CONTROL AND DEVELOPMENT

156. * Mr. K. C. Neogy (a) Will the Honourable Member for Works, Mines and Power be pleased to state whether existence of mineral sources of atomic energy has been proved in any part of India, and whether necessary investigation and research in the matter is proceeding at the instance of the Geological Survey of India or any other agency?

(b) Has any enquiry on this subject been received from the British Government?

(c) What is the policy of Government in regard to the control and development of such mineral sources?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: (a) Uranium and, to a certain extent, thorium are the principal sources of atomic energy according to present information

Uranium has not been found in India in appreciable quantities. The mineral monazite (one of the thorium-bearing minerals) occurs in notable quantities as beach-sands on the Travancore coast

At the instance of the Board of Scientific and Industrial Research, an Atomic Research Committee has been established under the Chairmanship of Professor H. J. Bhabha. It is also proposed to establish a special unit for such investigations under the Geological Survey of India

(b) The Atomic Research Committee as well as the Geological Survey of India hope to work in collaboration with the Department of Atomic Energy, Ministry of Supply of His Majesty's Government

(c) The policy of Government is to control and develop such resources in the best interests of India

Mr. Manu Subedar: Have Government been in negotiation with His Majesty's Government and have they sent any men from India in order that they may be taken into confidence with regard to the progress of research as far as it has been made already in the West? My question is need we start right from the beginning? Has Government made any endeavour to get the results of the research so far made so that we can take that as a starting point in India?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: Two of our officers who had recently been to the United Kingdom have been in touch with His Majesty's Government and, as a result of discussions which they had in England, we are now proposing to have a separate unit under the Geological Survey of India under an eminent Geologist and it is proposed to send him to the United Kingdom for about six weeks and then to organize the unit in the light of whatever advice and information he may receive Seth Govind Das: Will the Government see that this energy is utilized in constructive work and not for destructive purposes?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: That Sir is the intention

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: With reference to part (b) of the reply given by the Honourable Member, is it the intention of the Government to manufacture atomic bombs in India?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: That question might be addressed to the Defence Department

Mr. Manu Subedar: Have His Majesty's Government accepted the position that they will share with India the atomic research knowledge as far as it has reached there or have they made any bones about it?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: That I am afraid is really a question for the Defence Department.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know from the Honourable Member if he is aware that one Mr Parthasanthi was sent from here—from Dr Bhatnagar's Institute—to study the effects of atomic bombing in Japan, and if his knowledge has been made use of or he constitutes one of the members of the Research Committee?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: I must ask for notice. I have heard something about it, but I am not quite sure.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know who are the members of the Atomic Research Committee?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: I said an Atomic Research Committee has been established under the Chairmanship of Prof H J Bhabha. But I must ask for notice, because this does not pertain to my Department. We will have a special unit for Uranium research under the Geological Survey of India. It is proposed that this should be under Dr Krishnan who is a Superintending Geologist in the Geological Survey, but no other staff will be appointed until Dr Krishnan goes to England and decides what he is going to do about it.

NUMBER OF CONTROLS UNDER COMMERCE DEPARTMENT

157. *Mr. Vadialal Lalubhai: Will the Secretary of the Commerce Department be pleased to state

(a) the number of Controls under the Commerce Department which have ceased to be in force after the end of the War,

(b) the number of Controls which still remain in force?

(c) Whether Government propose to reduce the existing control to a minimum in the immediate future?

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: (a) The Jute (Price Control) Orders, 1945 and 1946, the Jute Export Control Order 1944 and the provision relating to Oil Cakes in the Vegetable Oils and Oil Cakes (Forward Contract Prohibition) Order 1944, have been withdrawn by the Commerce Department since the cessation of hostilities.

(b) Control over exports and imports over the prices of cloth and yarn for export, over enemy trading and controls prohibiting forward trading operations in Vegetable Oils and oil seeds which are edible oils also in spices are still in force.

(c) The operation of the controls mentioned in my answer to part (b) is under constant review so as to ensure that they are not retained a day longer than necessary.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Is it a fact that some of the Provincial Governments by issuing Ordinances have undone the good work of the Commerce Department in withdrawing those controls?

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: I want notice of that question.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: May I ask whether the Government of India consulted the Legislature before withdrawing the controls and as there are now some controls still left whether they will at least now consult the Legislature before removing the controls?

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: There are so many articles under Control that each case has got to be examined on merits and the passing of very early orders is necessary. I think it is very difficult, if not impossible, to consult this House before issuing orders about any specific article.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: May I ask whether the Government of India will appoint a committee of this House which will be consulted before controls on various articles are removed?

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: It is very difficult, as I have already pointed out in answer to the previous supplementary question, to wait until the report of a committee of the House is obtained. The case of every article is examined and it is necessary to pass early orders on the question and so it will be very difficult to consult any committee of the House.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: May I ask whether the Government of India is aware that the removal of these controls has a very serious effect on the economic condition of the people in this country, and if they are aware of that fact will they not find some method by which the Legislature will be consulted or at least a committee of the House will be consulted before these controls are removed?

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: It has come to the notice of Government that the removal of some controls has resulted in increase of prices. Therefore the Government is very anxious to examine each case very minutely and very carefully before orders lifting controls are passed.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Is the Government aware that due to these controls there has been a lot of corruption and is the Government taking any steps to check this corruption which is on wholesale scale?

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: So far as the question of meeting corruption is concerned I understand that a Bill is shortly to be introduced in the House by the Honourable the Home Member and Government is certainly alive to the need of keeping a very vigil eye, and they are keeping a vigil eye, to stop corruption as far as possible.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: Is Government aware of the fact that after the abolition of control on certain articles the prices have gone up four hundred times and the index prices of decontrolled articles have also gone up hundred times? Has Government looked into that matter?

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: I cannot say about the percentages mentioned by the Honourable Member. Government is aware that prices of certain articles have gone up after the lifting of control and Government is also of opinion that in some cases prices were unduly depressed because of the control. Where the benefit has gone to the merchant, Government has no intention to intervene in the matter but in cases where the consumer is being hit and Government finds that prices have gone up as they have in case of some luxury articles the case will be examined again for re-imposing control.

Shri Mohan Lal Saxena: Is the Honourable Member aware that there is a Standing Committee for the Commerce Department and will the Honourable Member give it an opportunity to express its opinion regarding decontrolling of articles?

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: On important questions which can stand over for some time, Government will consult the Committee.

Sri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar: Is the Government aware that the imposition of control has increased the prices in several cases. I will give one very important example handloom cloth. The price of handloom cloth has increased by 15 to 20 per cent on account of the control that has been imposed very recently.

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: The increase in the prices of handloom products has not taken place merely because of the imposition of control. There are several factors governing price movements and it cannot be attributed to control measures at all.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: I would like to ask the Leader of the House whether this Legislature is going to have some opportunity of discussing this most important question which affects the economic life of the country during this Session?

Mr. President: The Honourable Member means the question of Government's general policy with regard to controls?

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Yes, Sir.

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: I can assure the Honourable Member that this question is engaging the attention of Government and we are very much agitated about the vicious circle into which we have been caught. On the one hand we have high prices. If we raise some other prices it leads to higher prices all round and further inflation, and that again leads to higher prices. Therefore, we have considered them very carefully. I cannot say just now if we can give a particular date for discussion of the subject but we shall certainly try to accommodate the wishes of the House in this matter.

Seth Govind Das: In cases where prices have gone up considerably, will Government think it desirable to re-impose control on such articles?

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: Yes, specific cases of that type will be considered for reimposing control

POLICY re CONTROL ON AFRICAN AND SUDANESE COTTON

158. *Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai: Will the Secretary of the Commerce Department be pleased to state

(a) if it is a fact that controls on African and Sudanese cottons are more rigidly maintained than as visualised in the policy declared by the Commerce Member in reply to starred question No 1747, dated the 12th April, 1946,

(b) if it is still the desire of Government to be the sole buyers of African and Sudanese cotton,

(c) if so, are Government aware that this is in contradiction of its policy to licence freely foreign cotton declared by the then Commerce Member in reply to starred question No 1747, dated the 12th April, 1946, on the floor of this House,

(d) if Government have received any representations protesting against this contradiction of their declared policy, and

(e) if so, what action have they taken in this respect?

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: (a) (b) and (c) As the Honourable Member is no doubt aware, the Government of India have entered into an agreement with the East African and Sudan Governments for the purchase at agreed prices of such quantities of their exportable surplus of cotton as are available for Indian Import licences can, as the result of this agreement, only be granted against export licences issued by the exporting country, and the question of the private procurement and the free licensing of those cottons does not at present arise. The policy followed with regard to East African and Sudan cottons is not, therefore, in contradiction to the statement made by my predecessor in April last.

As regards the future, the question of the continuance of a similar agreement is under consideration in consultation with the interests concerned. Government, I may assure the Honourable Member, are only anxious to ensure that the country's requirements of those cottons are made available to the consumer on the most advantageous terms.

(d) No representation protesting against the alleged contradiction in policy has been received in respect of East African and Sudan cottons.

(e) Does not arise.

Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai: Have the Ahmedabad Millowners not sent any representation?

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: No representation containing the allegation in clause (d) of this question viz., the so called contradictory policy of Government is received from them. The representation made by the Ahmedabad Millowners Association is regarding the removal of import restrictions on East African and Sudan cottons, and that is being attended to.

Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai: Will the Honourable Member consider placing East African and Sudan cottons on the same footing as the Egyptian cotton?

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: Different considerations apply, because so far as the East African and Sudan cottons are concerned, it is considered advisable to buy on a Government to Government basis and the reports, even from the trade channels, are that it would be to the advantage of India to procure supplies of East African and Sudan cotton on a Government to Government basis, and if that is not done, it is possible that India may have to pay a higher price for this cotton.

Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai: Is it a fact that due to cotton being a world commodity, the prices adjust themselves?

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: The report is that if Government had not made the purchases of East African and Sudan cottons on a Government to Government basis, India would have been compelled to pay a much higher price, and even now I may mention that the Cotton Import Advisory Committee has suggested that it would be to the interests of India to enter into a similar agreement for the year 1946-47 and that is under consideration by Government.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Is it a fact that the distribution of these cottons has been arranged in such a way that some of those mills who are using foreign cotton have been hard hit and that they are not able to stand in competition with other mills who get these cottons?

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: No complaint of that character has been received.

SAGO FLOUR AND THE IMPORT LICENCES ON STARCH

159 Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Will the Secretary of the Commerce Department be pleased to advise—

(a) if it is a fact that import licences are being freely granted to importers of starch,

(b) if it is a fact that Sago Flour which is purely a sizing material and is not a food material is placed on free list of imports as a result of which great quantities of Sago flour are being dumped in the Indian market,

(c) if so, have Government considered the adverse effect on the nascent industry at home, and

(d) pending the report of the Interim Tariff Board, what do Government propose to do to protect the Indian Starch Industry from the new decontrolled imports of Sago flour which are thus dumping the Indian market?

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: (a) I invite the Honourable Member's attention to the reply given to part (a) of his question No. 728 on the 6th of March last. I may reiterate for his information that imports of only limited quantities of starch are being permitted in the interests of the Textile Manufacturing Industry.

(b) Government's information is that Sago flour is not purely a sizing material, but is also used as an article of food, and this item was included in the Open General Licence in order to combat the food shortage. Exact figures as to the quantity of Sago flour imported after the inclusion of this item in the Open General Licences are not immediately available. It is not, therefore, possible to judge whether large quantities of this commodity are actually being dumped into this country. Figures of imports are, however, being collected and the point mentioned by the Honourable Member would be examined as soon as these are received.

(c) No Sir, as the question of dumping was not raised so far, the matter is, however, being investigated.

(d) The Tariff Board have been requested to suggest an interim measure of assistance that may be necessary without prejudicing their final recommendations. The Board's reply is awaited.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Is the Honourable Member aware that sago pearl is food and not sago flour and that none of the sago flour has gone for food purposes?

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: I have already mentioned that the figures are being collected and the matter is being examined.

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: I would state for the information of the Honourable Member that sago flour is only a sizing article and not a food article.

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: I have mentioned that we were advised, in consultation with the Food Department, that it may be treated as an article of food.

Mr. Vadlal Lallubhai: Will the Honourable Member enquire as to how many tons of sago flour went for siring purposes and now many for food purposes?

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: I have already given the reply that the matter will be investigated.

LOSS TO GOVERNMENT DUE TO UNDERHAND PRACTICES IN THE EXPORT TRADE OF CLOTH

160 *Mr. Vadlal Lallubhai: Will the Secretary of the Commerce Department be pleased to state

(a) if Government are aware of the many under-hand practices carried on in the export trade of cloth which has resulted in a loss to the country,

(b) if Government have seen the anomaly arising out of the uncontrolled prices of cloth in free ports and at the same time the margin of profits for middlemen being stipulated by the Government at 10 per cent which has resulted in the middleman taking 100 per cent more or even higher prices in free ports and showing only 10 per cent as the margin of profit, due to the said Government regulations,

(c) if Government are aware that similar situation regarding high profits exists in many other countries also to which India exports cloth,

(d) if Government are aware that due to this anomaly the country's Exchequer is being put to considerable loss, and

(e) if so, will Government see to it that this anomaly of prices is put a stop to?

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: (a) Government have no definite information on the subject

(b) By free ports the Honourable Member presumably refers to importing countries in which there is no price control on imported cloth. It is true that export price control on exports from India to such countries has been withdrawn and Government have not prescribed any definite profit margins for the middleman in respect of exports to these destinations. However, invoices continue to be checked with a view to ensuring that the export prices are not excessive. The question as to what further measures should be adopted is under the consideration of the department.

(c) No, Sir, Government have no definite information on the subject

(d) and (e). Do not arise.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Will Government consider the advisability of negotiating barter transactions with a few countries in order that India may get essential articles like food against cloth and also the advisability of taking up the export of cloth from this country as a State monopoly so that the profits may remain with Government instead of going into private pockets?

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: The question of barter is being considered in individual cases where Government find that it will be in the interests of India to procure food from some countries. The other question raised by the Honourable Member is a very important question of policy and it will be examined.

Mr. Vadlal Lallubhai: In view of the fact that there are high prices running in other countries, will the Government consider to export this cloth themselves so that Government gets the benefit of this disparity in price?

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: Government are already considering the question of reducing the price at which cloth is exported to these countries and Government have taken up the question as to the manner in which that control should be imposed.

Seth Govind Das: Is it a fact that most of the countries to which our cloth is exported do not send us any food material?

The Honourable Mr. I. I. Chundrigar: The question cannot be looked at merely from the point of view of food procurements to India. When we are in a position to manufacture cloth it is the moral duty of India to supply something to the neighbouring countries who are not able to procure their supplies from elsewhere.

Seth Govind Das: Should we take it that inspite of the fact that we have so much scarcity of cloth, it is our moral duty to send cloth outside?

Mr. President: That is an argument. Order, order.

Next question. Mr. Sanyal.

MANUFACTURE OF BY-PRODUCTS OF COAL

161 *Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable Member for Works Mines and Power be pleased to state

(a) the by-products of coal that have been undertaken in India (i) before the last Great War, (ii) during the last Great War, and (iii) after the last Great War,

(b) what other important and valuable by-products can and should be undertaken forthwith,

(c) what steps are being taken by the present Government so that the existing opportunities for the manufacture of by-product, are not wasted and that the collieries are obliged and helped in undertaking industrially and commercially useful by-products immediately, and

(d) whether Government are consulting scientists and experts in such matter and whether they are taking the assistance of the Indian Science Congress?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: The question should have been addressed to the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies. It has accordingly been transferred to the list of questions for the 6th November, 1946 when it will be answered by the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies.

EXTENSION OF ELECTRICITY TO RURAL AND SEMI-URBAN AREAS AND NATIONALIZATION OF POWER

162 Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable Member for Works Mines and Power be pleased to state

(a) what steps are being taken for the immediate extension and popularisation of electricity in rural and semi-urban areas and for the ultimate nationalisation of power,

(b) whether it is not possible as a step towards the above, to terminate by legislation or otherwise the leases of the existing licences and to hand over the running concerns to the municipalities or other existing local bodies, as the case may be, and

(c) whether it is also not possible to reduce power rates to a maximum of three annas per unit for non-productive consumption and two annas per unit for industrial and manufacturing consumption?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: (a) This is primarily a matter for Provincial Governments. New rural and semi-urban electrification schemes are being undertaken by most of the Provinces, notably by Madras and Bengal. The Central Technical Power Board which is under the control of the Government of India has completed a plan for semi-urban electrification covering an area of 2,500 sq. miles in Bengal to the north of Calcutta, and has a somewhat similar plan under preparation for that Government covering the area to the east of Calcutta. The Board has also been preparing a rural development project for a tract in the Central Provinces.

(b) This is not possible except by legislation of expropriatory nature.

Provincial Governments have, however, been advised to secure the termination of the existing licences by negotiation, wherever possible.

(c) It is not possible under present circumstances, to reduce rates to three annas per K. W. hour for lighting purposes except perhaps in large urban areas. On the other hand, it is understood that two annas per K. W. hour for industrial manufacturing supplies is an extremely high rate and far above the average prevailing at the present time.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Is it not the policy of the Government of India to investigate the question of power supply as a proposition of all-India planning?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: The Central Technical Power Board has been set up expressly for that purpose. But unless and until legislation is undertaken to carry out any policy of electrification, the Government of India have no hand in it. At present there is no such legislation.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Is it not a fact that in many cases projects of electric installation in one province have to be helped by supply of power from another province?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: In that case is it left to the two provinces to contact each other the Government of India coming in for the purpose of co-ordination between the two Provinces?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: The Central Technical Power Board can and does help in every possible way to co-ordinate the requirements of electrical energy throughout India. Then there is also the Electricity (Supply) Bill which was introduced in this House in March last, under which it is proposed to set up Regional Electricity Boards and that Bill will certainly help in achieving the object which the Honourable Member has in view.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Is it not a fact that even today the matter of electricity is covered all over the country by central legislation?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: I believe it is in the Concurrent List.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Is it not a fact that the Indian Electricity Act governs the whole of the country?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: Yes, Sir, but the Indian Electricity Act is purely a safety measure. It does not cover the question of planning, co-ordination and development. That is the object of the Electricity (Supply) Bill, 1946, which was introduced in this House in March last.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable Member please state whether in the matter of the proposed legislation which is coming up, the opinions of the provinces have already reached the Government of India?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: The motion for circulation was unfortunately crowded out in the Budget Session and Government thereupon circulated the Bill by executive order. Certain provinces have sent in their opinions but the most important provinces like Bengal, Bombay, Madras and the Punjab have not yet sent in their opinions and they have asked for more time to express their views.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable the Member please state whether any province has expressed the opinion that they were competent to go on with their electricity projects without the aid, assistance or initiative from the Central Government?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: Yes, Sir. Some of the Provinces are anxious to be allowed to look after their electricity projects themselves without any intervention from the Centre.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: May I know whether these opinions have been circulated to all the other provinces?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: I have already explained that some of the Provinces have expressed their opinions and these opinions are being tabulated. The question of their circulation has not yet been considered.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: I want to know whether those opinions which have been received from some of the provinces, which have a bearing upon some other provinces, have been forwarded to all other provinces?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: No, Sir. The opinions that have already been received are being tabulated. That is all that has been done so far. We do not go on sending the opinions to other provinces as they are received.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: What are the provinces that have so far given their opinions?

Mr. President: I am afraid these questions on legislation do not arise out of the present question. The Honourable Member is going into too many details.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: I am asking which of the provinces have expressed their opinions

Mr. President: That does not arise out of this question

NATIONALIZATION OF PETROLEUM INDUSTRY

163 *Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable Member for works Mines and Power be please to state

(a) the places in India where petroleum is at present available and how much of such area is under actual operation,

(b) whether the capital and the companies operating the area are Indian or otherwise,

(c) whether these companies have been asked to arrange for Indians getting facilities for training in operating processes,

(d) the policy of the present Government with regard to the nationalisation of petroleum, and

(e) if immediate nationalisation is not possible, what steps are being taken as aids to future nationalisation?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: (a) A statement is laid on the table based on information collected from Provincial Governments about three months ago. According to our information petroleum is at present produced on a commercial scale in the Lakhimpur District in Assam and the Attock and Jhelum Districts in the Punjab where the areas under actual operation are said to be about 21 sq miles and 26 sq miles respectively

(b) Government understand that they are largely British-owned

(c) The Government of India have no information, as the Provinces are directly concerned with the companies

(d) and (e) The regulation of mines and oilfields and mineral development comes under entry 23 of the Provincial Legislative List except to the extent to which such regulation and development under Federal control is declared by Federal Law to be expedient in the public interest. No such law has yet been passed. The regulation and development of oilfields has therefore been generally at the discretion of Provincial Governments. The question of formulating a general mineral policy for India including the policy for development of oilfields, is at present under the consideration of the Government of India.

Statement showing the area of oil concessions granted in Provinces and States

	Exploratory permits in square miles	Prospecting licences in square miles	Mining leases in square miles
1 Assam (Assam Oil Co and B O C)	6,290 00	116 872	21 35
2 Punjab (B O C and Attock Oil Co)	57,464 70	386 17	26 94
3 N W F P (I B F Co and B O C)		1,586 38
4 Sind (B O C)	26,154 00
5 Tripura State (B O C)		250 00
Total	89,908 70	2,339 422	48 29

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal. Will the Honourable Member state whether any such legislation is contemplated?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: I have said that the whole question of policy is at present under consideration. That includes questions bearing on central co-ordination, regulation and control to the extent to which Provincial Governments may be willing to part with such control. The question of executive machinery to carry out the central co-ordination, regulation and control and the legislation necessary for the same—all these questions are under consideration and the Honourable Member in Charge shortly hopes to have a conference of provincial ministers, at which these questions will be discussed.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Can Government tell this House whether all those people who hold concessions in oil are actually working their concessions or whether some of them are merely holding those concessions without any effort at production and if it is so, will Government take some action?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: Oil concessions are of three different kinds. There are several companies which have got exploratory permits and these cover a total area of 89,908 square miles in Assam, Punjab, Sind and other Provinces. Then there is another kind of permit which is called the prospecting license. An area of about 2,339 square miles is under prospecting license in all these different provinces. Mining leases which cover actual mining operations are only limited to Assam (21 35 square miles) and the Punjab (26 94 square miles) or a total of 48 29 square miles. Actual mining is going on only in these 48 29 square miles, whereas in other areas prospecting or exploration work is going on.

Mr. Manu Subedar: May I know whether full capacity of production from these areas which are under mining leases has been developed and if not will Government take steps to stimulate production?

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: The truly oil bearing areas, if my Honourable friend wishes to know, are firstly a belt of rocks in North East Assam passing through Eastern Bengal to the Arakan Coast, a tract of about 800 square miles. Then there is a belt of oil bearing rocks.

Mr. Manu Subedar: What I said was this. In the areas where mining leases have been actually given—in these 48 29 square miles which my Honourable friend mentioned—I want to know whether the full capacity to produce oil has been developed. Let us say that the maximum capacity is 'X'. I want to know whether the 'X' capacity has been reached or is it only a quarter 'X' which is being produced. And if it is less than the natural capacity of production will Government try to stimulate the production of oil? That is a Central subject.

Mr. B. K. Gokhale: In 1942 Government found it necessary to restrict exploration and prospecting in the interests of increased production from existing oil fields. That was a sort of moratorium established under the advice of the Central Government. Actually the Central Government have no powers in this respect, but this advice was given to the provinces and the provinces generally took that advice and established a kind of moratorium by which areas which were not actually being exploited could not be exploited. That moratorium, I understand will expire some time in February 1947. The question of policy which should be followed from February 1947 onwards is at present under the consideration of the Government of India.

UNSTARRED QUESTION AND ANSWER

CONTACT WITH FOREIGN STATES IN MATTER OF SPORTS AND ATHLETICS

29. Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable Member for External Affairs be pleased to state

(a) whether Government of India have formulated any policy for bringing this country in contact with foreign states in the matter of sports and athletics; and

(b) whether any fund has been created for encouraging individuals and clubs for the growth and development of sports and athletics?

The Honourable Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru: (a) and (b) No Most countries leave such matters to be dealt with on a purely voluntary and non-official basis. Government however are prepared to give facilities for international contacts in the matter of sports and athletics. Primarily the Provincial Governments, and especially the Education Departments, are responsible for encouraging sports and athletics. Government are prepared to help in this wherever possible.

SHORT NOTICE QUESTION AND ANSWER

PARTITION OF REFUGEES FROM CHANDPUR STATION BY RAILWAY AUTHORITIES

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state

(a) whether his attention has been drawn to the report which appeared at page one of the late city edition of the Hindustan Standard (Calcutta) of the 29th October 1946 stating that 20,000 evacuees—victims of lawlessness in Eastern Bengal—who have been stranded at the Chandpur Station of the B. A. Railway for want of transport facilities were forced to leave the station with 24 hours' notice,

(b) whether it is a fact that these included expectant mothers and mothers who had just given birth to children,

(c) the reasons for such action on the part of the authorities, and

(d) what steps have been taken by the Railway authorities for efficient transport and for safe shelter and accommodation and for other essential amenities of such evacuees?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) From a report received from the B. A. Railway, it appears that the number of evacuees at Chandpur, even during the peak period was never more than 15,000. Difficulties in arranging transport were not confined to the railway but were also experienced by the steamer companies, and it was impossible to clear all passengers offering at the same time.

No evacuees were given notice to leave railway premises.

(b) and (c) The Red Cross Society are taking care of expectant mothers and women who have given birth to children and accommodating them in hospitals.

(d) Strenuous efforts have been made by the B. A. Railway authorities to provide transport for evacuees from Chandpur and arrange for their comfort in consultation with the various relief organisations and with the Red Cross Society.

For the evacuation of refugees arriving by steamers at Goalundo from Chandpur special trains were run to Calcutta in addition to the normal train services, on the 16th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd and 24th October, 1946, and on two occasions No. 28 Down train which normally terminates at Ranaghat was extended to Calcutta.

The running of further special trains was not considered necessary as the steamers arriving at Goalundo did not carry sufficient passengers to warrant special trains being run.

As regards relief measures for evacuees, the B. A. Railway authorities have made arrangements to accommodate them in waiting sheds, in all available rooms in the railway colony and in Government camps and have formed a Committee to co-ordinate the work of the various relief committees. These committees are attending to the needs of the refugees by meeting them and conveying them in lorries to relief centres where arrangements are made to supply them with food.

The Public Relations Officer of the B. A. Railway is in close contact with private organisers of relief who have expressed their satisfaction with railway arrangements.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable Member be pleased to state, in view of his answer that the railway authorities did not give notice to leave the premises, which is the authority which gave that notice?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I am afraid I cannot answer that question, because I have no information on the subject at all. I was asked to answer the question which was put to me as far as the railway was concerned.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable Member be pleased to state whether it is possible for the Government of India to set up direct and independent machinery for giving relief in the matter of food, shelter and medicine to these refugees?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: That again is not a question which can be answered by me.

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT

WITHHOLDING OF TELEGRAMS IN BIHAR ON COMMUNAL RIOTS

Mr. President: There is an adjournment motion, notice of which was received by me from the Honourable Member, Mr. Nauman, and, I believe, from Mr. Seth. The motion is to discuss a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely "Withholding telegrams in the province of Bihar on the subject of communal riots in Bihar area."

Who has given this order for withholding telegrams? Is it the Central Government that has passed those orders?

Mr. Muhammad Nauman (Patna and Chota Nagpur cum Orissa Muhammadan) Yes—the Central Government which is responsible for such orders in that area, because telegrams and telephones are central subjects.

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel (Home Member) So far as the Home Department is concerned, no such order has been passed.

Sir Harold Shoober (Secretary, Communications Department) Sir, I can assure this Honourable House that no orders have been passed by the Government in the Communications Department or by the Director General of Posts and Telegraphs.

Khan Muhammad Yamin Khan (Agra Division Muhammadan Rural) Is it in the power of the District Magistrate to order the Posts and Telegraphs Department not to communicate any telegram which he thinks might create some trouble?

The Honourable Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel: That would be a provincial subject. Under the provincial powers, the district magistrate has got such powers.

Mr. President: If the district magistrate has got power, as I think he has—that is why I put the question—the question does not concern the Government of India.

Mr. Muhammad Nauman: May I say one word? Last night I booked a call from Western Court to my own house and Patna told me that they could not get through even a trunk call to my house as there was no instruction of the department itself—he did not say the magistrate or the Bihar Provincial Government.

Mr. President: That is not inconsistent with what is stated in the House. His departmental head might have instructed him under orders from the district magistrate. We need not go into speculations about that. It seems clear that there have been no orders of the Government of India and there is nothing, therefore, for which an adjournment motion can be admitted in this House.

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES BILL

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram (Labour Member) Sir, I move

"That the Bill to make provision for the investigation and settlement of industrial disputes and for certain other purposes be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Mr N M Joshi, Mr S Guruswami, Mr R C Morris, Sir Cowasjee Jehangir Prof N G Ranga, Sri T V Satakopchar, Shri D P Karmarkar, Mr Vadhval Lalubhai, Sree Satyanriya Banerjee, Sreejot B S Hiray, Mr Abdur Rahman Siddiqi, Mr Abdul Hamid Shih, Mr Muhammad Rahmatullah, Mr S C Joshi, and the Mover, with instructions to report by the 7th November, 1946, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five "

Sir, this Bill is only an amendment Bill introducing certain changes in the Trade Disputes Act, 1929 and I shall therefore confine myself to tendering a brief explanation of the basic principles underlying the more substantial changes introduced in the Act. The provisions of the Trade Disputes Act, 1929, have in the main been reproduced in the Bill. But as the arrangement of the Act would become disjointed if amendments are introduced ad hoc, we have considered it would be appropriate to re-enact the Act, as in this Bill, setting out the various provisions in their proper context.

The institutional changes introduced in the Bill relate firstly to the constitution of Works Committees consisting of representatives of employers and workmen, and secondly to the constitution of Industrial Tribunals consisting of independent persons who possess qualifications ordinarily required for appointment as Judges of a High Court. The functions of the Works Committees will be to remove causes of friction between the employers and workmen in the day to day working of the establishment and to promote measures for securing amity and good relations between the employer and workmen. The function of the tribunals will be to adjudicate on disputes referred to them. These two institutions I may point out, will supplement the machinery already provided for in the Act of 1929 for the settlement of trade disputes, namely, Conciliation Officers, Boards of Conciliation and Courts of Inquiry.

The two new modes of settlement of industrial disputes which will be effected by these two new institutions of Works Committees and Industrial Tribunals will be unaided voluntary negotiation and adjudication. Reference to an Industrial Tribunal will lie not only where both parties to a dispute apply for such reference but also where the appropriate Government considers it expedient, in public interest, to make such reference. Voluntary negotiation is not only by far the most satisfactory method for settling the differences between employers and workmen but, I am sure, you will agree should also be the normal method of settlement. As regards the other new mode of settlement of disputes, namely, adjudication I venture to imagine that none in this House will raise a controversy in so far as it is to be optional. But as regards compulsory adjudication as a method of settlement of disputes, I apprehend that opinion in this House may well be divided. The issue involved is fundamental and that is whether and if so to what extent, Government should intervene in industrial disputes. This, in turn, will raise the further question whether industrial disputes are purely a matter of private law of contract between the employer and his workmen. My answer, Sir, is that inasmuch as the parties to industrial disputes are no longer limited to the aggrieved workmen and the aggrieved employer, and inasmuch as the causes of the industrial dispute are not limited to breaches of the express or implied terms of the contracts of service, industrial disputes cannot be treated as matters purely within the confines of the private law of contract. Trade disputes, Sir, I submit, are in reality a recrudescence of the economic warfare between capital and labour, and in this warfare the community at large is no less affected than the employer and workmen engaged in the industry. Though trade disputes are ostensibly bipartite engagements between capital and labour the public at large is a necessary party to them especially where they affect supplies and services essential to the well-being of the community. To put it concretely, Sir, a strike in a public utility service will involve not only loss of production and profit to the employer and loss of employment and wages to workmen but will involve also loss of services and supplies to the community. Government being responsible for the maintenance of services and supplies essential to the health, safety and welfare of the community and the maintenance of national economy, it becomes imperative for Government to intervene in industrial disputes, especially where in consequence any severe hardship is entailed on the community. The case for Government's intervention in industrial disputes with a view to promoting public interest is, I submit, incontrovertible.

The question, then, arises within what limits should Government's intervention be circumscribed? Should Government content itself merely with providing machinery for the settlement of industrial disputes as in the Act of 1929 and leaving it to employers and workmen to make such use of it as they may wish to, or should Government go a step further and attempt to authoritatively regulate the relations between the employer and workmen where they have themselves failed to settle their differences? The Act of 1929 does not provide for the enforcement of the findings of any authority that may be appointed for the settlement of trade disputes but leaves it to public opinion as the ultimate forum to express itself on the merits of the dispute. Pronouncements of public opinion on the merits of industrial disputes, valuable as they may be for promoting industrial peace, will not often prove effective in regulating the relations between employers and workmen.

Whenever industrial relations are disturbed, the solution lies not in the imposition of artificial peace by prohibition of strikes and lockouts, but in effecting a speedy readjustment of the relations between the employers and the workmen either by agreement between them or, where no agreement could be reached, by compulsory adjudication. If, as I have submitted, Government must have power to intervene in industrial disputes, it will hardly be contested that that power must extend to enabling the Government to authoritatively regulate industrial relations where the employers and workmen concerned are unable to settle the disputes themselves. The principle underlying compulsory arbitration, is, thus, I submit, clear and unimpeachable. I may mention that more than anything else, the provisions of Rule 81A of the Defence of India Rules, empowering the Central Government to refer disputes to adjudicators and to enforce their awards, have enabled Government to deal effectively with industrial disputes during the war. And what is more, the results of the adjudication proceedings have in most cases proved satisfactory both to the workers and employers. The present Bill embodies the principles of Rule 81A, but in a more liberalised form. My submission, Sir, is that neither the employers nor workmen have an unrestricted right to wage trade disputes if in consequence public interests are jeopardised. And where public interests are jeopardised, I maintain that it is incumbent on Government to intervene with a view to securing readjustment of the relations between the employer and workmen, if possible, by private negotiation and conciliation and, if necessary, by compulsory adjudication.

In this connection I must explain why the enforcement of the awards of the Industrial Tribunals has been left to the discretion of the appropriate Governments. Adjudication proceedings are essentially judicial proceedings involving determination of the relative merits of the matters in dispute. Being judicial proceedings, the decisions of the Tribunals are entitled to the fullest consideration. But it is necessary to ensure that the enforcement of the decisions of the Tribunals do not involve any disturbing effects on national economy, otherwise adjudication, instead of allaying, may result in accentuating industrial strife. It would, therefore, be salutary that Government who are in a better position than Industrial Tribunals, to assess the possible effects of the enforcement of the awards of Tribunals on national economy should have discretion to decline to enforce such awards as are opposed to public interest or will have upsetting effect on national economy. I must warn that it would be wrong to assume that because the Government have the power to reject the awards, they would not give the fullest consideration to the decisions of the industrial Tribunals.

I must make it clear that in providing for compulsory adjudication our intention is not to oust or in any way minimise the importance of the methods of voluntary negotiation and conciliation in the settlement of disputes. Industrial disputes being disputes on interests rather on rights, I need hardly stress that voluntary negotiation will offer more effective and lasting solution than conciliation or arbitration. Of all the institutions for the settlement of disputes provided for in the Bill, I would myself attach the greatest importance to the Works Committees. But some others might urge that in Works Committees is the possible danger of exploitation to the betterment of workmen by association with such Committees of persons not true representatives of the workers but who are under the influence of the employer. It is for this reason that I have not made a mandatory provision for setting up Works Committees but only an enabling provision by which the appropriate Government could set up such Committees and this will doubtless be done only where the appropriate Government is satisfied that conditions exist for proper functioning of the Committees. Next to Works Committees, I would place reliance on the conciliation machinery for promoting industrial peace. It is only where conciliation has no reasonable chance of success, that disputes will be referred to adjudication as being a necessary expedient for securing readjustment of industrial relations in establishments where disputes have broken out.

The importance we attach to conciliation as a mode of settlement of disputes is reflected in the provision that it will be compulsory in the case of all public utility services. Least advantage be taken of the reference of disputes to conciliation machinery to procrastinate with a view to wearing out the opponent or to maintaining unjustly the state of affairs as existed before the dispute broke out, time limits have been fixed for the conclusion of conciliation proceedings—fifteen days in the case of Conciliation Officer and two months in the case of Boards of Conciliation.

The principle has been well established, to quote from the statement of objects and reasons of the Trade Disputes Act, 1929, that 'persons whose work is vital to the welfare of the community generally, should not be entitled to enter into a strike before sufficient time is given to examine the merits of their grievances, and to explore the possibilities of arriving at a peaceful settlement'. It would I submit, be both logical and legitimate to extend this principle so as to prohibit strikes and lockouts during the pendency of conciliation and adjudication proceedings. This Bill prohibits strikes and lockouts during the pendency of conciliation proceedings and 14 days thereafter, as also during the pendency of adjudication proceedings and two months thereafter. Power has also been given to the appropriate Government to prohibit continuance of strikes and lockouts as soon as a reference is made to a Board of Conciliation or an Industrial Tribunal. No elaborate explanation for these provisions seems necessary. It would suffice to say that the justification for these provisions lies in that the chances of settlement of dispute by conciliation or by speedy determination by adjudication will be gravely imperilled, if during the pendency of conciliation and adjudication proceedings the normal state of affairs as existed at the commencement of the dispute was not restored. Least these provisions may prove detrimental to the workers, a safeguarding provision has been made prohibiting alteration during the pendency of conciliation and adjudication proceedings of the conditions of service to the prejudice of the workmen.

I feel, I must pointedly invite the attention of the House to the enlargement of the definition of public utility service attempted in the Bill by empowering the appropriate Government to declare for a specified period any industry to be a public utility service provided that public interest or emergency so requires. The definition of public utility service as contained in the Act of 1929 being enumerative in its character is necessarily inelastic. The definition of a public utility service will to an extent depend on the state of national economy at any given time. For example, at present, when there is an acute shortage of cloth in the country, it would I submit, be legitimate to treat the textile industry as a public utility service, but when conditions return to normal and cloth is no longer in short supply, it would probably be difficult to justify inclusion of textile industry within the category of public utility services.

The industrial unrest through which the country is now passing is of unprecedented magnitude. Before we could embark on any large scale industrialisation, we must establish conditions that will ensure industrial peace. The urgency of the proposed legislation is, I submit, therefore unquestionable. I am aware of criticism often expressed that the remedy for restoring industrial peace is the amelioration of working living conditions of industrial labourers rather than any attempt to restrict the rights of the worker to go on strike. I am fully conscious of the great importance one should attach to improving of working and living conditions of labour and the Central as well as Provincial Governments are actively engaged in examining and enforcing all possible measures in this direction. We have already effected by legislation reduction in working hours in factories to bring this to the level enforced in countries much more advanced industrially. Other measures relating to welfare and wages of industrial and other classes of workers are also under active consideration. It will be appreciated that such measures cannot be hurried through in a day but every effort is being made towards rapid progress.

It is my belief, Sir, that the machinery provided for in the Bill will, while protecting the public at large from the ill effects of industrial disputes, facilitate speedy redress of the legitimate grievances of the workmen and employers and thereby promote the progressive adjustment of industrial relations between the employers and workmen.

This Bill has been the result of considerable discussions between the representatives of employers, workmen and of Governments, Central and Provincial. The subject was discussed by our Tripartite Standing Labour Committee at its eighth meeting held in March 1946. A small sub-committee of the Standing Labour committee was appointed to examine the proposals in a greater detail and this sub-committee examined the proposals in June 1946. The Honourable Mr. N. M. Joshi, our veteran Trade Union leader participated in the discussions of both the Standing Labour committee and its sub-committee and I must acknowledge that we had the benefit of his views in finalising our proposals. Recently I convened a Provincial Labour Ministers' conference for finally vetting the proposals. The Bill as it is presented to you represents a reasonable synthesis of the various view points expressed on the subject by the various interests concerned. I commend to the House that my Motion be accepted.

Mr. President: Motion moved.

"That the Bill to make provision for the investigation and settlement of industrial disputes, and for certain other purposes, be referred to a Select Committee consisting of Mr. N. M. Joshi, Mr. S. Guruswami, Mr. B. C. Morris, Sir Cowasjee Jehangir, Prof. N. G. Ranga, Sri T. V. Satakopachari, Shri D. P. Karmarkar, Mr. Vadialal Lubhai, Sree Satyapriya Banerjee, Sreejyot B. S. Hurey, Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi, Mr. Abdul Hamid Shah, Mr. Muhammad Rahmatullah, Mr. S. C. Joshi, and the Mover, with instructions to report by the 7th November, 1946, and that the number of members whose presence shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the Committee shall be five."

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer (Bombay Southern Division Muhammadan Rural)
Sir, I move

"That the Bill be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion thereon by the 28th March, 1947."

Sir, I have listened with great interest and attention to the speech just delivered by the Honourable Member for Labour. He has conveniently omitted to point out the urgency for this measure and why he is so anxious that this measure should be pushed through so soon, particularly because he has got at his disposal section 89-A of the Defence of India Rules which has been extended till the end of March 1947. I do not wish at this stage to go into the merits of this Bill. I only want to point out that there is no necessity why this Bill should be rushed through in such a hurry as has been done at present. It was only four days ago that Honourable Members of this House received copies of this Bill. We have had no sufficient time to go through the Bill. I am sure neither the Employers organisations nor the workers organisations have had an opportunity to go through the provisions of this Bill and to see what these are. As a matter of fact, I am surprised that he brought forward the motion for Select Committee the report of which must be submitted by 7th November. In Bombay, a similar measure like this was brought forward and rushed through in spite of the opposition of the Labour members of the House. Mr. Dange and Mr. Mirza Akhtar. I am sure that a similar performance is going to be repeated here. From the list of amendments that I see on the agenda paper following mine, I find that labour members in this House also have tabled similar amendments which clearly show that this measure is not going to be a popular one.

They are as keen as we are that this Bill should be circulated and opinions invited not only from employers' and workers' associations but from all public bodies, particularly the consumers. I am surprised to find that the consumer has no voice when decisions are reached in the industry as a result of the adjudicator's award. Even in England in the Wages Board representations are given to consumers in addition to workers and employers. The Trade Unions Bill which was yesterday referred to Select Committee took three or four years before it was so referred, and now a Bill like this which contains 40 clauses is being rushed through in such a great hurry that I fail to understand why it should be so rushed through. I am sure the Honourable Member will agree that nothing will be lost if the Bill is circulated and opinions invited. I may also point out to the Labour Member that in spite of statutory prohibition by law, strikes have taken place. It is the duty of Government to go into the root causes of strikes and not simply to prohibit them under the law. The Trade Disputes Act gives ample machinery to investigate trade disputes and conciliate the parties in dispute. This Act has not been fully exhausted and I see no reason for bringing in this new measure.

Sr, I do not wish to go into the merits of the Bill, but I should like to refer to clause 3 which refers to the Works Committee. No details are mentioned at all, their formation may be good or may be bad. But this matter requires very careful consideration and no hasty legislation is necessary. I am sure the Honourable Member will agree with the feelings of this House that the Bill be circulated and public opinion invited before giving it effect. The Bill should be carefully considered as it is a very important measure.

Mr President: Amendment moved

"That the Bill be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion thereon by the 28th March, 1947."

Mr. N. M. Joshi (Nominated Non-Official) Sir, although the previous speaker has moved his motion for circulation I propose to move my motion also for circulation. The difference between his motion and mine is that he expects that the Muslim community will have sufficient time to consider this important measure and send their opinions by the 28th March 1947. But I myself feel that the principles of this Bill are so fundamental and will affect the life of the working classes of this country, specially their trade union organisations, to such an extent that a hasty consideration of this measure will be harmful. I therefore move

"That the Bill be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion thereon by the 31st October 1947."

Mr. President: The Honourable Member may stop here and resume after Lunch

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till a Quarter Past Two of the Clock

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Quarter Past Two of the Clock, Mr President (The Honourable Mr G V Mavalankar) in the Chair

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Mr President When we adjourned for lunch I was saying that I had asked for a longer period for consultation with the Trade Unions in this country as regards the provisions of this Bill. Sir, this Bill contains two fundamental principles which are new to the peacetime labour legislation in this country. These two principles the illegalization of strikes and compulsory arbitration vitally affect the interests of the working classes and also the trade union movement in this country. They are of life and death importance to the movement. I myself being of cautious nature and being slow in my thinking capacity, I take time to come to a decision on matters of this kind. Moreover, I am very anxious that the labour movement in this country and the working classes of our country should not come to a hasty decision on this question. If we once take a wrong decision on these most important questions, it will be very difficult for us to undo the harm

[Mr N M Joshi] which may be done I am very anxious that the Bill should not be hastily passed Sir, the Honourable Member said that he had consulted the employers and the workers through the Tripartite organisation It is true that I attended those meetings and had an opportunity of discussing some of these questions in those meetings But, Sir, in those meetings the proposals of the Government of India had not taken a definite shape These meetings discussed some vague proposals, and it is for the first time I saw them in their definite shape when the Honourable Member introduced this measure only three or four days ago Sir, it is for that reason that I do not want this legislation to be hustled I am hoping that the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill will see the reasonableness of what I have stated, and will agree to the motion of circulation which I have made In the interest of the Government it is better that people should come to a conclusion on this subject after mature thought If unfortunately he does not agree to my proposal, it will be my painful duty, and a very unpleasant duty it would be, to oppose the motion which he has made this morning, namely the motion for the appointment of a Select Committee I assure you, Sir, this is a very painful duty to me For the first time in the history of our country we have a Government which, with some justification, we call 'National Government'. It is also in some way a representative Government because they have representatives of the National Congress, representatives of the Muslim League and, we are having two representatives of the Scheduled Castes We are therefore very glad that such a Government has been established at the Centre and we welcome this Government with all our heart Therefore I consider it to be very unfortunate if it falls to my lot to oppose an important measure brought forward by this Government But, Sir, the Honourable Member himself has admitted that this is the measure on which there can be difference of opinion, and there can be very honest difference of opinion on it He holds his views very strongly, I hold my views very strongly, and if it becomes necessary for me to oppose his motion it will be an unfortunate thing, but if I am to be true to my conscience and if I have to act upon my own judgment, Sir, I shall have to do that unpleasant and painful duty

Sir, I stated that these two principles which are incorporated in this legislation are new to the peacetime labour legislation of our country It is true that both these principles in some form were incorporated in the war time Defence of India legislation, but, Sir, that legislation was introduced in this country against our wishes We were not a willing party to that legislation When the legislation comes before this House we have to consider the whole subject fully and, if possible, approve it, otherwise if we consider that it is not in the interest of the working classes, we have to oppose it

Now, Sir, what happens is this Illegalization of strikes and compulsory arbitration gives power to Governments to prevent strikes and to get conclusive decisions as the Statement of Objects and Reasons has stated and the Governments feel that their work is made easy on account of the great power which they possess over the lives of the working classes Sir, the Governments in this country enjoyed that power over the lives of the workers for the last six years And you know the nature of Governments, whether it is a Congress Government or a National Government Their nature is that if they once taste power, they are unwilling to give it up

Mr. P. J. Griffiths (Assam European) All Governments

Mr. N. M. Joshi: All Governments have tasted power They have the power to prohibit strikes They have the power to impose decisions on the working class and now they are unwilling to part with that power In my judgment, the need for such a legislation has not been made out It is not that in this country there is no legislation at all to provide for conciliation, to provide for some kind of enquiry into these disputes The Honourable member said that the community has a right to intervene I saw that the community has a right and duty to intervene and that right has been given to the community by the Act of 1929. Unfortunately, Sir, that Act of 1929 was not even tried sufficiently in this country. I would like the Honourable Member to give some figures regarding the use made by the Governments in this country—the Government of India or the Provincial Governments—of the Act of 1929 during the last 17 years. During the last 17 years I am quite sure there might have been hundreds, perhaps thousands of strikes. I want the Honourable Member to tell me during how many strikes the 1929 Act was used by any of these Governments. Sir, I do not possess exact figures, but I am quite sure that not even during these 17 years was that Act used 170 times.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil (Bombay Central Division Non-Muhammadan Rural) : Now they are prepared to use it with a vengeance!

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Sir, that is my complaint against the Government. They possessed legislation. They did not make use of that legislation and they complain that the legislation has failed and is not effective. How could it be effective if you do not make use of it? Sir, the Act of 1929 has not failed in that sense. Our Act of 1929 has been based upon British legislation mainly as regards the conciliation machinery. Now, in Great Britain, industrialisation has gone on on a much larger scale and for a much longer period, and if Great Britain could do it with the powers which the British Government possessed during the last 50 years, and if they could deal with industrial unrest in Great Britain, I think a newly industrialized country like India could have easily done with that legislation. We should not have needed any more legislation, but that legislation was not used. Secondly, Sir, if that legislation has failed, it has failed for some other reason. The Governments in this country did not, not only not apply that legislation, but did not make proper use of that legislation. That legislation provided for conciliation machinery and conciliation officers. Now, Sir, the Provincial Governments appointed Conciliation Officers—young men of 25, paying Rs 150. Do you expect a Conciliation Officer getting Rs 150 and of 25 years of age to succeed in bring about a settlement between such powerful men as my honourable friend, Sir Cowasjee Jehangir and some others?

Pandit Balkrishna Sharma (Cities of the United Provinces Non-Muhammadan Urban). Like yourself!

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Sir, the machinery was wrongly used. The Government did not like to appoint conciliation officers who had experience and who could succeed in their work. Secondly, under the Act of 1929 they could have appointed a permanent Court of Enquiry so that the machinery could have been used as often as the Government of India wanted. Is there any province where a permanent Court of Enquiry has been appointed? There would have been no difficulty in your appointing such a Court of Enquiry. But you did not do it and now you complain that the Act of 1929 did not succeed. Sir it is not the fault of that Act. I know that there are defects in that Act. That Act also under certain circumstances make certain strikes illegal. I did not like those provisions. But for the purpose of conciliation that machinery is quite suitable. That machinery has been found useful for its purpose in a country like Great Britain and I have no doubt that if we had made proper use of that machinery it would also have proved useful in our country.

The Honourable Member in pointing out the necessity for this legislation, stated at present our country is going through unprecedented unrest. I am aware Sir that at present there is industrial unrest in our country but it is not due to the lack of machinery to settle disputes. That unrest is due to this fact that during the war the working classes in this country suffered terribly. After the war the suffering continues. Even in countries like England where there was actual war prevailing, the real wages of the working class during the war period went up. In our country, during the war, real wages went down. Nominal wages increased no doubt, but the real wages went down. The real wages are down even now, more than a year after the war had ended.

Sir Cooasjee Jehangir (Nominated Non-Official). Not in all industries?

Mr. N. M. Joshi: In all industries, I say Sir, leave aside wages. What is the position of housing in our country? Have you any idea how many people are lying during nights on the streets of Bombay for want of housing accommodation? What has been done since the end of the war to provide housing for those people who have no room to live in? Not only that, I will go further. The war ended and some of the factories which could be kept going if they had been adapted for peace-time production, have now been hastily closed down, with the result that hundreds, I would say, thousands of workmen are being thrown on the street. Sir, the working class in this country may be ignorant, may be illiterate. But they have a loyalty to each other and it is this loyalty to each other that keeps them going. And the unrest that we see in our country is due to these causes. Besides that, Sir, the success which the Allied Governments obtained in the war have created hopes in the hearts of people all over the world, especially when working classes in India see that in Great Britain, even during the war, the Government took steps to provide greater social security, and where measures of social security had existed to strengthen those measures of security. They did that even during the war. The Beveridge Report was prepared during the war and even before the war ended they had taken steps to see that these proposals for social security, for providing houses, etc. were considered and began to be carried into practice even during the war. Does the Honourable Member in charge of this department know that today the British people are receiving increased benefits out of the social security measures? What have we done in our country? We have made speeches. The members of the old Government have made speeches suggesting that the Indian workers should have greater social security.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: But the birds have flown away!

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Some of the members of the present National Government may have also made speeches but people do not live on speeches. They want action.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: Measures are coming very soon.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Those measures may be coming but today before those measures come you take power into your hands to take away from the working classes the only weapon which they possess by which they can secure their objective.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: Only regulating its use.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: I consider that if there is unrest in this country, that unrest is a healthy one that will lead to the improvement of the condition of the working classes. Moreover I feel that the extent of that unrest is exaggerated if you consider the size of the whole country. I want the Honourable Member to give me figures to enlighten us. How many people will come under the purview of this legislation in all? In my judgment this Bill will affect the lives of not less than one crore of working class people in this country, perhaps more. I am sure the number will be larger. There are no doubt strikes in this country but I want to know what is the average number of people who are on strike daily in this country. The number will be extremely small.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena (Lucknow Division Non-Muhammadan Rural): Wherefrom does the Honourable Member get his figure of one crore?

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: Out of a population of 40 crores!

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Out of 40 crores I gave a modest figure.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: But this is not according to the Census Report?

Mr. N. M. Joshi: No. But I gave a modest figure, being a modest man.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: The figure is not modest but on the other side

Mr. N. M. Joshi: The unrest is exaggerated. We have not got such an unrest as we try to make out. A few thousand people are sometimes on strike. To take the U S A there is greater unrest there than we have in our country and therefore that there is unrest in this country is no justification for hustling this kind of legislation.

I stated that there are two fundamental principles underlying this legislation. The first is prohibition of strikes and the second is compulsory arbitration. I shall take strikes first.

There are people in this country who have a wrong notion of the character of a strike. They consider that a strike is something horrible, heinous or abnormal. I do not consider that a strike is an unnecessary or abnormal activity. A strike is a cessation of activities in common with our friends and that is being done by all kinds of people, not alone the working classes. (Interruption by Mr P J Griffiths) As my friend Mr Griffiths says, even shops close and barristers have their holidays. Cessation of activity is a normal human activity, not an abnormal one, when we find that the conditions of life and work are not satisfactory to us. A man goes to a shop and he finds that an article is more costly than he is prepared to pay for. He returns from the shop and nobody calls it a strike.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: If everybody does it it will be a strike.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Therefore a strike is not an abnormal activity. It is the normal activity of human beings who are dissatisfied with their conditions. So we need not be horrified when we see a strike. Let me assure all my friends in this legislature that although the working classes resort to strike as other classes of people do, whatever the other classes of people may do, the working classes do not go on strike without thinking of the consequences. They go on strike when they find that other means of obtaining redress have failed. You may think whatever you like of the working classes in this country but they are not such great fools that they do not realise that if they go on strike they are the first people to suffer. Their wages stop and there are not many occasions on which strike pay has been given in this country. The working classes realise that if they go on strike they will suffer more than others. If they go on strike, it is because they find that the employers are not susceptible to ordinary arguments. They also go sometimes on strike because the Government will not help them in negotiations or in coming to a settlement unless and until they go on strike. I have seen employers willing to negotiate when the workers go on strike. I have seen governments willing to intervene when the workers go on strike. But I have found in my experience of many years that Governments refuse to intervene when the workers make an ordinary request. I have seen employers refusing to negotiate when they find that the workers are not strong enough to go on strike. Therefore the workers go on strike, because, in the first place, they find that without going on strike they will not get a chance of negotiation and they resort to strike only as an ultimate weapon.

If any assurance is needed by anyone in this House I may assure him that I myself do not approve of the policy of going on strikes. I am a man of peace. I would like to have my grievances settled without going on strike, if possible. I shall avoid strike as much as I can but if strike becomes inevitable, what can anybody do? People complain that in this country especially, people go on lightning strikes, strikes without notice. Let me assure you again, as a matter of policy I do not support the working classes going on strike without notice. But you must remember that it is not always in the hands of the workers to give notice. At times they suffer from an injustice which they find it difficult to bear and go on strike without waiting for a notice. I do not approve of going on strike without notice, but we must remember that going on strike or cessation of activities without notice is [Mr N. M. Joshi] only a civil liability. When we pass legislation making strikes illegal on the ground that people go on strike without notice, we forget the fact that not giving notice is only a civil liability, and when we make strikes illegal on the ground that people go on strike without notice, we create a criminal offence out of a civil liability. There is no justification for this. If going on strike without notice is a civil wrong or a civil liability, the workers do not propose to evade that liability. They have never said they are not liable for the civil wrong which they have done. But you cannot be justified to turn that civil liability into a criminal offence. Now, we have a Bill in which not only strikes without notice are made illegal, but even strikes with notice are made illegal. If strikes take place during conciliation proceedings which may last for any length of time, even for a year or for two years.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: Two months

Mr. N. M. Joshi: The strike becomes illegal. My honourable friend Mr Gadgil for whom I have great esteem tells me that the strike will become legal after two months. Is that what he says?

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: I will say what I want to say after you finish.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: I can only say that, if he had stated two months, he should read the Bill again before he speaks. The Bill provides for a period of four months maximum for a conciliation in a public utility service. But if a worker happens to be employed in a non-public utility service, you can appoint a board of conciliation and make a strike illegal even if that board takes one year to complete its work, so that the poor man has no chance of going on strike on any day. This is the Bill which has been placed before us.

There is another point which I want to stress as regards making strikes illegal. What is our object in making a strike illegal? We want that a man who is not willing to go to work should go to work, and if he does not go to work, he will be threatened to be sent to jail. I want to ask Honourable Members of this legislature whether this is not a form of compulsory labour. That a man is asked to go to his work against his wishes by the threat of being sent to jail if he does not go to work, I consider, is a form of compulsory labour, and if you will bear with me, compulsory labour has an element of slavery in it, is a form of slavery. I should have thought

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: During the war it was there.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: I feel that to make strikes illegal is to introduce in some indirect way a form of compulsory labour, and if I may use that unpleasant word, some form of slavery. I would like therefore that this legislature should not agree to that principle. While justifying his Bill, the Honourable Member did not say much about converting ordinary strikes into criminal offences, but he said something about converting strikes being a criminal offence in public utility services. I recognise that there is some difference between an ordinary industry and a public utility service.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: There is no compulsory labour there?

Mr N. M. Joshi: I shall come to that. But I feel that in principle there is nothing wrong even if a man working in a public utility service says that he would go on strike if he finds that the conditions are not satisfactory. I am, however, prepared to make an exception in those cases where on account of a man's going on strike human life is endangered, human life is made unsafe. I am prepared to consider such work as of public utility. But if you read the Bill any industry can be considered or can be converted into a public utility by the fiat of the government. The government has to say that such an industry is necessary in the interests of the public and it becomes a public utility. This word 'public utility' has been abused by the Government of India. A wrong interpretation has been put upon it. Public utilities are necessary not only in India, they are necessary everywhere. In our definition of public utility we are including railways. In England, compared to our size, there is a larger railway system than in India. But in England the railways are not regarded as public utilities, while here every railway is a public utility.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras Ceded District and Chittoor Non-Muhammadian Rural) Are they not?

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Every steamship is a public utility and if we adopt the Bill which the Honourable Member is asking us to adopt, anything can become a public utility. I think that word has been wrongly used.

Secondly, if a service is a public utility it should be really public. But if you read the Bill of the Honourable Member, an electric work which is being conducted not in the interests of the public but for profiteering, if you will allow me to use that word, even that undertaking is to be considered as being a public utility. You may run an electric work and make huge profits by using that electric power not in the interest of the public but for some other industrial purposes (for producing exmuries for the rich). Even that will be included as a public utility according to the definition given by the Honourable Member. I can understand a public utility that is a real public utility, but if you say that any electric undertaking any steamship company or any railway is to be a public utility, I cannot understand it. Moreover a public utility must not only be for the public benefit but must be conducted by the public and owned by the public. I can understand your saying that a service is a public utility if it is controlled by, if it is owned by and if it is managed by the public and if it is run in the interests of the public. But that is not what you are providing for. I am not prepared to give the power to the Government to create any service a public utility.

Then, Sir, the Royal Commission on Labour had given some thought to this question of public utility. They found in the Act of 1920 some restrictions were placed upon the power of the working classes to go on strike, without a compensating advantage. The Royal Commission therefore recommended that if you restrict the right of the workers in public utility services to go on strike you should give them some compensating advantage. Is it the fault of the man that he takes work in a public utility service? We say that a man who works in a public utility service is a noble man, is doing essential work and therefore we restrict his freedom. I know when sweepers in municipalities go on strike many people say that the sweepers' work is a noble one. It keeps towns and cities pure and therefore we shall not allow them to go on strike. Therefore the Royal Commission recommended that if you restrict the freedom of workers in public utilities at least you should give them some compensating advantage. I know that the Honourable Member has not entirely forgotten that point of view. I am glad of that but the provision which he has made falls much short of what the Royal Commission would have expected him to do. What he is providing is that his conciliation officers shall consider the grievances of these classes. If he is taking power to appoint boards of conciliation, to appoint tribunals of arbitration, why should he not take upon himself the responsibility of telling the sweepers in the municipalities and workers in other public utilities that if they have a grievance the Government takes upon itself the obligation of having your grievances arbitrated upon or conciliated by boards of conciliation. Has he provided that? (Sjt N V Gadgil Is it barred?) I said it is not provided. The two things are not the same. A lawyer like my honourable friend should understand the difference. It is open to the Government to appoint a board of conciliation, to appoint even an arbitrator but that is not what the Royal Commission recommended. The Royal Commission recommended that if you take away a man's freedom if you restrict his freedom give him a compensating advantage, namely, let the Government take upon itself the obligation, not the discretion, to appoint a board of conciliation or a tribunal to investigate into the complaints. The Government of India does not seem to be prepared to do that.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: Make it obligatory

Mr. N. M. Joshi: I shall come to that. I have finished with strikes in ordinary industries and in public utility concerns. I shall now come to the idea of compulsory arbitration. Nobody can be against the principle of arbitration, that is settling our disputes by peaceful negotiation, by discussion. It is a right method of settling differences. Is there any class of people besides the working classes upon whom we place that obligation of resolving our differences by arbitration and not by any other method? Have the Governments in the world accepted that idea of arbitration? If they had, there would have been no war and we would not have needed large armies to be maintained. Is that principle made obligatory upon others? It is not. Why then throw the responsibility of maintaining peaceful atmosphere in the country upon the poor working classes? Why impose the principle of non-

3 P M violence upon the working classes, while the others are not prepared to accept it? I stand by the principle of non-violence but I refuse to stand by that principle while I have no means of redressing my grievances. It is all very well to talk of compulsory arbitration and peaceful negotiations but these require certain necessary conditions. Take our own case of industrial disputes. If you want to introduce compulsory arbitration there, the two pre-requisites are that there must be impartial arbitrators. There must be impartial arbitrators and impartial governments to appoint them. Without these, you have no right to impose compulsory arbitration on the working classes. I do not wish to speak ill or against any party or any Government but it will be admitted that under the present circumstances it is not very easy to get men who are free from class feeling. It is not easy to get even Governments which are free from class consciousness. The legislature was not elected by a working class electorate. It is for this reason that we do not like compulsory arbitration. In many countries where the workers understand their interest, they are against compulsory arbitration. It is for this very reason that the British working classes have been against compulsory arbitration for a very long time and they have not yet accepted the principle of compulsory arbitration although they have their own Government to appoint the arbitrators. You may have heard about Sydney Webb (Lord Passfield) who is a great authority on labour matters and he is not an extremist or a communist. He was a member of Government in England. He has stated very clearly that even in England it is extremely difficult to get an arbitrator who is free from this class feeling against the working classes. Professor Tawny, another very moderate writer, has stated very clearly that it is almost impossible to get people—my friend Mr. Griffiths suggested that word to me—to be impartial arbitrators. It is for that reason that the British labour movement has always stood against the principle of compulsory arbitration. This principle of compulsory arbitration was considered very carefully by the Royal Commission on Labour and they came to the conclusion that the Government of India should not introduce the principle of compulsory arbitration.

Prof. N. G. Ranga (Guntur cum Nellore Non-Muhammadan Rural) What about Australia and New Zealand?

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Sir, I am asked. What about Australia and New Zealand? I have admitted myself that these are controversial questions. There are two views on this question. Some people have adopted compulsory arbitration, but countries like England have not. Countries like England have developed industries to a much larger extent than Australia or New Zealand have done. England has larger and longer experience than both these countries have. If we are to have a safe guide in this matter, I would certainly make Great Britain as a safer guide than either Australia or New Zealand.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Australia had Labour Ministry before the last war.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: I am not therefore prepared to accept this principle of compulsory arbitration. Has the Government of India faith in compulsory arbitration? I have seen people proclaiming faith in prohibiting strikes and in the principle of compulsory arbitration. Whoever those people may be, it is not the Government of India which has faith in the principle of compulsory arbitration.

Mr. President, you are a lawyer and you know what arbitration is. If you have faith in the arbitration, that faith is to be indicated by your being willing to accept the award. That is faith in arbitration. If you are prepared to accept the award of the arbitrators, certainly you have faith in arbitration. Has the Government of India that faith in the principle of arbitration? If they have that faith in the principle of arbitration, it is not shown in this Bill. What does the Bill provide for? The Bill says that the Government of India will appoint Tribunals for arbitration. The Tribunals will report and then what? Then, the Government of India will decide either to reject the award.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: or to accept it

Mr. N. M. Joshi: or to accept it wholly or in part. Is that your faith in arbitration? Have you ever heard of an arbitrator's award being rejected? I can even understand that, but have you ever heard that the arbitrator's award can be mutilated by the Government? You are providing that not only you will reject the arbitrator's award but you will mutilate it. You will accept it either wholly or in part. Is that your faith in arbitration? It is easy for the Government of India to talk of the wholesome principle of compulsory arbitration. It is a peaceful method. I told you I believe in it, but it is not easy to accept it today. But the Government is fond of power and they are prepared to impose it upon the working classes and not upon themselves.

Sir Cowasji Jahangir: The same was the attitude of the previous Government.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Sir, I am not one of those people who make a difference between this Government and that Government. I welcome this Government because it is a national government. I welcome this Government because it is a representative government.

Shri Sri Prakesh (Benares and Gorakhpur Division Non-Muhammadian Rural) It is an absentee Government as you can see from the empty official benches.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: But, Sir, my confidence stops there. Where a Government makes a mistake in labour matters, it is my duty to point it out and tell them that they are wrong. This Government has no right to impose the principle of compulsory arbitration upon the working classes in this country. Consider what the Government is proposing. Suppose there is a strike on account of the fact that 20 men have been dismissed by the Manager of a factory and that matter goes to the arbitration. The arbitrator decides that all these 20 men were wrongly dismissed by the employer and then the report goes to the Government of India. What will the Government of India do? The Government of India may say that this arbitrator is a damned fool these men were rightly dismissed. But if they do not go so far, they may say that out of 20 men, one man was rightly dismissed, but 19 men were wrongly dismissed. Therefore, the Government of India will say that we impose this settlement on you. We decide that one man was wrongly dismissed and he should be re-instated, but the other 19 men, whom the arbitrator recommended as being wrongly dismissed, are not wrongly but rightly dismissed and therefore they must go out of work. Not only that, but if the workers want to go on strike, they cannot do so because the Government have accepted the arbitrator's award in part. They can say: "We have decided that out of 20 men dismissed, one man was rightly dismissed and therefore we have accepted in part the award of the arbitrator. Therefore, the settlement is binding on all the workers for one year and they cannot go on strike during that period." This is the sort of law which we are asked to pass.

Mr. President: Order, Order I do not wish to interfere with the line of argument which the Honourable Member is following, but looking to the details in which he is going at the present stage, I must invite the attention of the Honourable Members of the House to the limitations of this debate. There is a motion for reference to the Select Committee and there is another motion for circulation and there are two different dates given. The main point, to my mind, appears to be to make suggestions to the Select Committee as to the point on which it may give its consideration and the other point would be to point out such salient features in the Bill as require a longer time for giving consideration without going into the merits of each at any length on this or that particular view.

The whole question of labour policy is not under discussion. If we were to enter into details on the principle of arbitration or other principles in the Bill, then it will become a very lengthy debate, so far as the Motion with the amendments before the House is concerned. The Honourable Member will be perfectly in order in referring to various points of importance pointing out strongly and succinctly the points of difference, honest differences,—or differences whether honest or otherwise and he is entitled to point out that more time is therefore required for consideration or that more time is not required and that the matter may be referred to Select Committee. That would be the scope of discussion that can be permitted at this stage. Otherwise the debate will drag on indefinitely if we were to go into the various problems arising out of the principles in the Bill.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: I have always been an obedient Member of the Assembly prepared to take the hint from the Chair. I was not looking to the clock and that is my mistake. If my Motion for circulation is not accepted, I propose to oppose this Motion for referring the Bill to the Select Committee. I shall have to oppose this Motion, and therefore there is no point in my making suggestions to the members of the Select Committee. I shall not however argue with you on that point at all.

I shall now within a brief period of time point out one or two other defects of this measure. Sir, I have done with this principle of compulsory arbitration and also illegalisation of strikes. The next point that I want to state briefly is that the period during which the conciliation should proceed, the period during which the tribunal should proceed with its work is either too long or unlimited. If an industry is a public utility service, then the proceedings for conciliation may last for four months, but if the case goes to a tribunal there is no time limit for the tribunal to finish its work. After the tribunal finishes its work, then the Government may impose a settlement for one year. Now, Sir, that makes the period indefinite. The Government may make the strike illegal for an indefinite period, in any case not a reasonable period. The Government proposes four months for conciliation, the tribunals period is unlimited. If conciliation has taken four months, let us assume that the tribunal may take eight months so that one year will be passed in conciliation and arbitration and then one more year will be added by Government for the period of imposing this settlement. Sir, this makes a strike practically impossible, but this is about a public utility service which the Government has treated with a light hand and perhaps generously. As regards ordinary industries, the Government has set no limit during which the conciliation proceedings must be ended. The Board of Conciliation may take even a year to finish its work. There is nothing in the Bill to prevent their doing that. The Board of Conciliation may take one year or two years. What is called a Tribunal of Arbitration or a Court of Arbitration may take one year or two years. After that the Government may reject, accept in part and if they accept any part, also they can impose that settlement for a year or more. Sir, the Government will themselves admit that this period is too long.

I do not wish to go into other similar details, but I wish to make one or two general remarks. The first remark which I want to make is this.

greatest defect of this legislation is that it is a discriminatory legislation. If a community is put to inconvenience by the cessation of work, then the community may want to punish the cessation of the activity, but what about the other classes? I can understand your passing legislation which makes it impossible for any class of people stopping their activities which is in the interest of the public without giving notice or without going through some sort of conciliation. But that is not what you are doing. I do not know, Sir, whether you read the daily papers. I read only this morning in the Hindustan Times that Mr Sarat Chandra Bose is calling a meeting to organise a general strike in Calcutta. If Mr Sarat Chandra Bose who was once a Member of the Interim Government only a few days ago could organise the citizens of Calcutta, the traders and merchants and all others for a general strike, I am quite sure the community in Calcutta will be inconvenienced. The words 'general strike' are not my words, they are used by the Hindustan Times. Will the closure of the shops in Calcutta not inconvenience the community? Are you making that illegal? If you are not making that illegal, why are you passing this legislation against the working classes? Is it because that you cannot very well pass legislation making the closure of shops, especially organised by Mr Sarat Chandra Bose illegal and you can easily make it illegal if the poor working classes go on strike, not even a general strike, but even an ordinary strike?

Sir, this legislation is discriminatory. My Honourable friend comes from a class in which 90 per cent of the people are wage earners. This legislation is going to apply to them. He may complain about discriminatory treatment to his people, but he should not become responsible for passing legislation which is discriminatory in its character. If you want to make strikes illegal, if you want to make cessation of activities of any class of people illegal, make it illegal for all people. It is wrong for people to say the sweepers work is essential for the community. The sweepers do a public utility service, very useful work to the community and therefore we pass this legislation restricting their activity. The shopkeepers are not so useful and therefore we leave them free to close their shops. The lawyers can organise a strike, but there is no legislation against them, because the lawyers profession is not noble whereas the sweepers profession is noble. That is the sort of argument of the Government. This is a discriminatory legislation and I submit the Honourable the Labour Minister should be the last person to promote a legislation making this discrimination. Sir, my last point is this. He defended this legislation on the ground of the community having a right to intervene in industrial disputes in the interest and the welfare of the community. I agree to that principle. But I would suggest to him that if the community has a right to intervene in the interest of the community itself, has not the community certain duties towards people who are engaged in the industry, specially engaged in public utility services? If you have duties towards them I suggest that you should fulfil those duties first. In most countries in the world the working classes today are given better conditions of life and work than in India. Our hours of work are longer, our housing is bad, our sanitation in the factories is bad and our sanitation in houses is worse. These have to be remedied first. Then again in other countries they have introduced measures of social security, they have got health insurance and unemployment insurance, old-age pensions and widow's pensions, and all kinds of accidents have been provided against. I suggest to the Honourable Member that if he claims that the community has a right to intervene in disputes between workmen and their masters the community should also remember its duties, and I suggest that the duties should be performed first. Let the Honourable Member introduce social security, let him improve the housing, let him improve the conditions of life and work for the working classes, and let him also place the power for securing improvement in the hands of the working classes. Let him see that the working classes in this country are given adult franchise; let him also see that the elections are made easier for them so that power will pass into the hands of the working classes. After social security is given to them and after they are given political power then it should be time for us to consider whether we should not restrict the activities of the working classes which may be anti-social I can understand that being done And therefore I feel that the Honourable Member in charge is putting the cart before the horse He should first give social security to the working classes and improve their conditions, give them political power and then if he likes introduce all these restrictions It has one advantage and that is this If you may impose restrictions on the working classes before they get political power the restriction will be imposed by an outside Government But if the working classes get political power in their hands and if they introduce these restrictions on their own activities they will be restrictions imposed by them upon themselves and they will willingly have them and tolerate them Therefore let him not do a thing which is equivalent to putting the cart before the horse Let him first take all these necessary steps which should come first and then introduce the legislation which we are considering this afternoon

Mr. President: Amendment moved

"That the Bill be circulated for the purpose of eliciting opinion thereon by the 31st October, 1947"

Mr. P. J. Griffiths: Sir, it was the original intention of this group to oppose the motion for reference to Select Committee and to support Mr Jaffer's motion for circulation That position was based not on what might or might not be our view as regards the merits of this measure—indeed it is not our intention even to discuss those merits today—but it arose rather from a strong disapproval on our part of the practice, to which we have grown accustomed in recent years, of rushing through important complicated pieces of legislation such as that which we are now considering The Bill now under discussion was first presented to this House on Monday and until three days ago no member of this House, except those privileged few who happen to be in the inner circle of Government, had the faintest idea as to the form that it would take or, except in the most vague and general sense, as to what its content would be The Bill itself consists of 40 clauses of an extremely complicated nature, and of such a nature that for their proper understanding and appreciation we require not merely to study the Bill itself, but to study the practice in other parts of the world, to study the recent Bombay Bill and to compare it with all useful precedents that we can gather from any other parallel part of the world. It is, I venture to say, without any exception the most important legislative measure affecting labour that has yet been introduced into this House We in this group feel very strongly that, faced with a measure of this kind we must not be asked after three days' study to express a final opinion regarding the principles contained in it, and then a brief few days after that be prepared to discuss it in the utmost detail in the Select Committee. We may perhaps be old-fashioned but in this group we take our duties seriously We feel that on every member of this House lies a very heavy obligation to scrutinise with the utmost care measures of this degree of importance; and it is fantastic to pretend that any member of this House, be his capacity and knowledge and experience what they may, can arrive at a considered view on a Bill of this nature within a comparatively few days We felt, therefore, that in seeking to send this Bill to Select Committee at once Government were not treating this House—I will not say with respect, but with consideration And we felt it so strongly that it was our intention to oppose the present reference to Select Committee Quite apart from our own position, even if we considered ourselves capable of arriving at considered views on the details of this Bill within a few days, there are others outside this House to be considered Under the system in which we live, it is true we are not mere delegates, we represent our constituents We are not bound by their views Nevertheless prudence suggests that when measures of a highly technical nature are introduced we should avail ourselves of what experience we can get from those of our constituents who are concerned with these practical industrial and labour matters It seems to us a farce to introduce a Bill of this kind and then three days afterwards expect us to come to this House, armed with the ripe experience of those whose experience ought to be available to us, and tell you what we think of this Bill

Mr. President: I should like to intervene here, and perhaps curtail some of the arguments. I have just received an intimation that Government are going to move an amendment to their main motion. One part of the amendment relates to some addition and substitution of names of members of the Select Committee, which is not very material so far as the present discussion is concerned. The other part of the amendment seeks to substitute the 1st February 1947 for the 7th November 1946. The amendment is coming and the Honourable Member may address his remarks in the light of that position.

Mr. P. J. Griffiths: Sir, I welcome that announcement with the most profound satisfaction, if only because it takes away any necessity for any further speech on my part. But I should like to take this opportunity of expressing to the Honourable Labour Member our deep appreciation of this new responsiveness to the wishes of this House. In the past that responsiveness has not always been forthcoming. It heartens us very considerably to feel that the Honourable Labour Member is anxious to take into consideration the wishes of this House and to meet our difficulties. I thank him on behalf of this group most sincerely and—best thanks of all—I avoid inflicting on him any further speech. I support the motion for reference to Select Committee.

Mr. S. C. Joshi (Government of India Nominated Official) Sir, I beg to move

"(a) That the name of Mr P J Griffiths be added to the names of members of the Select Committee and the name of Mr A C Inskip be substituted for the name of Mr R C Morris, and

(b) that for the words and figures '7th November 1946' the words and figures '1st February, 1947' be substituted."

Mr. President: Amendment moved

"(a) That the name of Mr P J Griffiths be added to the names of members of the Select Committee and the name of Mr A C Inskip be substituted for the name of Mr R C Morris, and

(b) that for the words and figures '7th November 1946' the words and figures '1st February 1947' be substituted."

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi (Calcutta and Suburbs Muhammadan Urban) Sir, I should like to move a very minor amendment, namely, that the name of Miss Maniben Kara be added to the names of members of the Select Committee. I hope the Honourable Member will accept my suggestion.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: Sir, I have no objection.

Mr. President: Will Mr Siddiqi move that as an amendment?

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: I beg to move

"That the name of Miss Maniben Kara be added to the names of members of the Select Committee."

Mr. President: The former I thought was a request to the Honourable Member to consider the proposal. Amendment moved.

"That the name of Miss Maniben Kara be added to the names of members of the Select Committee."

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir: May I make one small suggestion. Would the Honourable Member make it 15th of February instead of 1st of February? I think it will be convenient to him also and it will give the Select Committee a few days of the Budget Session in hand.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: No, Sir.

Sri T. A. Ramalingam Chettiar (Madras Indian Commerce) I welcome the attempt on the part of the Government to deal with the present state of affairs in India, but I do not think that the proposals they have brought forward are quite enough to bring that peace, contentment and happy working in industry which we all expect should follow. We have been following the practices in the West, especially England, with reference to these industrial matters. We have been thinking of the antagonism between capital and labour so much so that my friend, Prof Ranga and people of his view always consider 'capitalist' as the last word they can use as abuse with reference to any person. There are many thinking that we here can proceed in a different way from what is being followed in the West with reference to our industries, as we are doing in other matters. The idea never enters their mind that there need not be antagonism, that there may be co-operation between capital and labour and also the other most important element in industry, namely the entrepreneur, the person who initiates, who organizes and who manages and who is probably more important in industry than either labour or capital—all these people should co-operate and should find some means whereby there may not be in the working that antagonism which we are seeing and about which we are talking so loudly. Sir, the most important step I may say has been introduced in this present Bill by way of the appointment of a works committee within the industry itself. It is said that the management and the labour can come together and they can consider what are the reasons for any dispute that might have arisen. Sir, it is only a very minute beginning. That is not the sort of thing which will satisfy or which will bring about the amity which we want in industry. We are to face facts. We should be prepared to say that labour is as important as capital and, as I have said, the entrepreneur is as important as either labour or capital. There is to be the idea of co-operative working of all these elements and partnership in management and in profits. That is the only way in which we can deal with this question satisfactorily. Any other step which we may take in this House would be only a half-way or a quarter-way house which will not lead to that happy atmosphere of contentment which is necessary. The country is to benefit by its industry and by its labour. That is the matter which I hope every member here as well as all responsible people outside will seriously consider. Sir, after 30 years of rather active life at the bar I was unexpectedly drawn to undertake the supervision of the management of a mill. The first thing that struck me when I took over the supervision was the antagonism between labour and the so-called capitalist. Sir, I was working all my life in the co-operative field and I have been trying to bring into existence co-operative factories where all persons interested can work together without any feeling that they were being deprived of their just rights. When I undertook the management of the mill, the first idea that struck me was that I should make some proposal whereby this antagonism might be avoided. I made a proposal that a Works Committee may be appointed which will have the right to decide along with the representatives of the management, all matters relating to internal management, and it will also have the responsibility to see to proper production, to guarantee average production that is obtained in such industries outside. It ought to have both the right to manage as well as the responsibility for production. Then I said that when profits are obtained, first we give a certain fair wage to the worker including the entrepreneur, then a fair dividend to the capital that is invested, and then, Sir, any extra profits will be divided between capital, labour and the entrepreneur. This struck me as possibly the best solution that can be found for the state of affairs in our industries today. It was in the year 1937 that I actually made the proposal to my brother employers. Of course there was no unanimity, but some of them were prepared to consider the proposal. I immediately approached the Leader of the Communist Labour Party in my province, Mr Ramamurti, and he declined to sponsor this proposal or even to accept it. Then I approached the Honourable Mr Giri who was then in the Government of Madras. He appreciated the proposal, but he was not prepared to father it. That was the state of affairs before the war started. When the war started, we had to keep quiet. Things have changed very much since the war. We are finding unrest everywhere. My Honourable friend, Mr Joshi, just now said that among the people employed in industry those who are taking part in strikes or who are striking at a particular movement, are very few. I do not agree with him. Those who are after strike are a very large number. In season and out of season and for no reason they start strike or they threaten strike. What is the state of affairs in a place like Coimbatore? We have got textile mills there. On almost every question there is trouble. If a person is to be appointed, one union comes and says that a person recommended by that union ought to be appointed, then another union comes and says that a person recommended by that union should be appointed. If we appoint one of the two people, the other union at once strikes. There is any amount of trouble. Well, Sir, it is not always a question of strike. It is the threatening of a strike. It is the mentality that is produced by this idea of strike that stands in the way of production and in the way of anything being done. Unless some method is found for settling disputes, I do not think, Sir, this fever of unrest will stop. As I said, without any reason whatever people will lay down their tools. They will say that they will not work.

I will give you a small case. At about one o'clock one day in the Canteen, which was opened by the mill for the benefit of the labourers, a worm was found in the tiffin supplied to one of the persons. At once they downed tools. No amount of explanation nor appeasement made them resume work. That particular shift of people stopped work that day for two hours. It was only the next shift that came on and worked. That is the sort of thing that is going on. Is it proper to allow that?

All that this Bill is proposing to do is to provide for settlement of disputes. In the first place, the question will be whether there can be a strike without a dispute. I know there are strikes without disputes. In a case like that, it can not be dealt with unless there is some sort of legislation. My friend, Mr. Joshi for instance referred to a sort of demonstration which is often resorted to, e.g., general strike which is being organized in Calcutta. It is not a strike with reference to any industrial dispute. It is only a matter of demonstration. It cannot possibly come under the provisions of a Bill like this. Those who demonstrate know the liabilities they incur. They will lose their wages for the time they are out of work and they are prepared for it. But this Bill, I take it, refers only to those strikes which are the result of industrial disputes. It is only in that connection this compulsory settlement becomes necessary. As I said this is only a sort of halfway house and even so, Sir, it ought to be effective. It ought to be efficient to stop the present ferment and unrest and make things easy for the industries concerned.

My friend Mr. Joshi, was saying it is a discriminatory legislation. It was forced only on the labourers. But he forgets, Sir, that it is not only the labourer that is affected. It is also the employer, whether the employer is a private individual or a Government Department. Whoever it is, whoever is the other party to the dispute, the employer is as much bound by the procedure that is laid down in this Bill as the labourer is. So to say that it is discriminatory and it is good to affect only one of the parties, is not, I beg to submit, quite correct.

Then he has been saying that the Bill does not provide for the amenities that ought to be provided for the labourers like security, pensions, housing and things like that. Sir, those are matters which have to be decided by these conciliatory arrangements. It is for the union to ask for them and if the employer does not give them then there arises a dispute and that will have to be settled and it will have to be settled with reference to the possibilities of finding money in the industries themselves for these purposes. Whether it is to be made part of a kind of general security for the people will have also to be considered. It is not true that these amenities are not included in the Bill and no provision can be made through this Bill. These are all matters which can be raised by the unions and when the employers do not agree, those matters of industrial dispute can be referred to arbitration. There are two matters in which I agree with him. One is the prolongation of the proceedings. I am anxious that these disputes should not be allowed to continue for long. Already, Sir, we are losing very heavily on account of these strikes everywhere and I know cases where for practically no reason mills have been closed for months. For instance, I may say in one mill in Coimbatore, the Lakshmi Mills—you might have read about it in the papers—the only difference was that the Communists' union in the mill wanted persons of their choice to be appointed and the Congress Union on the other side wanted its nominees to be appointed. For this question of the appointment of either of the nominees the mills were closed for four months. They would not agree on the persons to be appointed. The Managing Agents were powerless. They were told by one party that if the other party-men were appointed, they would strike and vice versa. The result was that for several months a textile mill with 40,000 spindles was lying idle—for four months I believe. That is the sort of thing that is happening in the country. We want that such things should not be allowed to continue. We want that there should be a speedy decision with reference to matters in this Bill.

Sir, the provision that is made for the appointment of a Works Committee, then a Conciliation Officer, then a Conciliation Board, then a Court of Enquiry and then a Tribunal are all likely to prolong the whole enquiry. I know it is not necessary for every dispute to go through every one of these channels. It is open to the Government right at the beginning to appoint a tribunal and there end the matter. But ordinarily, we know how things will take their course. When you have a number of institutions like that, they will naturally pass through most of them with the result that there will be long delay in the matter of deciding these issues.

Well, Sir, I would ask the Honourable the Minister to simplify the procedure and allow the tribunal to act as early as possible after enquiry either by the Works Committee, or the Conciliation Officer or the Board of Conciliation. We do not think it should pass through all these bodies. One of them is quite enough. If one of them represents or makes a report to Government or the appropriate authority that it is not possible to come to a settlement, then I think the Government ought to be prepared to refer the matter to the tribunal. That will simplify matters.

The second objection by Mr Joshi was that the award of the tribunal is not binding. I agree with him. When once a Government appoints a tribunal—and naturally it appoints on it such men as it has confidence in and they are persons who will have the same qualifications as persons who will be appointed to the High Courts—they can be trusted to make a proper award. So if a matter is referred to a tribunal and the tribunal gives an award, I think that award should be binding on the Government as well as on the parties concerned, and in that way the disputes can be brought to an end. There may not be the same objection as regards prolongation of the proceedings or as regards the ineffectiveness of the award that is given, if these are amended. I think we will be taking a step forward to seeing the end of industrial disputes that may occur.

Sir, as I said at the beginning I welcome this Bill, and personally I would prefer that it went very much further and made the works committee, the arbiter of the internal management and partnership in profits, the natural course of dividing the fruits of labour. Short of that I would welcome a measure like this to end the industrial disputes that are the order of the day at the present time.

Miss Maniben Kara (Nominated Non-Official). Sir, I rise to support the amendment moved by my Honourable friend Mr Joshi. The amendment which was moved by the Honourable the Labour Member merely amounts to the postponement of the day of the Select Committee. The purpose for which the amendment for circulation was moved is not fulfilled by the amendment of the Honourable the Labour Member. I therefore rise to support Mr Joshi's amendment. The Trade Disputes Act which is of such grave importance, then will have sufficient time to be discussed by the public as well as by the workers, the peasants and their respective organisations. Mr Joshi with his very long experience of parliamentary life has very ably pointed out the implications of that Act. I would therefore try and shorten my speech and limit myself only to those aspects which have not been sufficiently stressed by my Honourable friend Mr Joshi.

I feel that a Bill like the present one, if at all it is passed, will mean in real terms a Black Act for the working classes of this country. The underlying principle of the Industrial Disputes Act is that it is an attempt to make a breach of civil contract a penal offence. Not only the working classes of this country but any person who stands for the democratic right of citizenship will support this contention of mine. I am not a lawyer. There are others sitting on the benches opposite who are competent enough to understand the serious implications of turning a breach of civil contract into a penal offence, which really amounts to restricting the civil liberties of the people of this country.

When in 1929 the Industrial Disputes Act was passed, let me remind the Honourable Members of this House that it was opposed tooth and nail by the entire working class of this country. There were demonstrations, protest meetings and even strikes against that Act of 1929. Only, at that time we did not have a popular government and we thought that a bureaucratic government was foisting something on the working classes in spite of their protestations and opposition. I will make bold to say that turning this breach of civil contract into a penal offence is a grave violation of the principles of natural justice. I would therefore appeal to the sense of democratic right of citizenship of every member of this House, regardless of their party affiliations or class interests, to try and judge the implications of this Bill on its own merits.

After all, what is a strike? It has been ably explained by my Honourable friend Mr. Joshi. When an employee goes to an employer for a job and he gets the job, the worker has entered into a civil contract with the employer. When the employer and the employee agree on certain terms of work they enter into a civil contract. If that contract is broken, then the employer is at liberty, even under existing conditions and the laws of this country, to prosecute that man and at the most get damages, because that man has broken a civil contract.

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir: Would you support that prosecution?

Miss Maniben Kara: I would.

Sir Cowasjee Jehangir: Do you think you could get a rupee?

Miss Maniben Kara: Sir, the existing law only provides for a breach of contract claim for damages from either party. My Honourable friend Sir Cowasjee Jehangir just now asked me whether the employers can get anything out of the workers. I may also ask him another question. When the Bombay Industrial Disputes Act was passed in spite of the opposition of the working classes by the popular ministry then, it was maintained that the law provided for so-called facilities to the workers, but I have seen from my own experience that when an employer wrongly dismisses an employee, what can the employee do? He goes to the Labour officer. He has to go to a court. I would ask, has the employee got the money? Assuming that he did and that he went through all these processes, what does he get? He may get the satisfaction that an employer has been fined about Rs. 100. But the employee does not get his job back. So the employee is always at a disadvantage. The important point involved in this present act is a matter of the principle of the right of democratic citizenship of this country. A civil contract cannot be turned into a criminal offence by a stroke of the pen by a popular government. We certainly welcome the disappearance of a bureaucratic government from this country but we are going to judge the new popular government by their own acts. I would therefore appeal to them not to come out with a Bill of this kind, which turns a breach of a civil contract into a penal offence. It means that if the workers choose not to work for any particular employer or if workers wish to have a change of master, they cannot have the freedom to do so. They could be put inside the jail for wanting to do so. They can be treated as criminals and thieves. At this stage I would remind my Honourable friends that the District Immigrant Act of 1860, when it was in existence, meant that the workers in plantations simply could not leave their jobs and run away. If they did not like the conditions of work and the exploitation of the planters and if they decided not to live any longer in those places to work, and if they decided to run away, then the entire state machinery—police and everything—could be at the disposal of the employer to bring the workers back to their work. This Act called the District Immigrant Act of 1860 was repealed. It was repealed under the pressure of changing world events. It was considered to be a slavery, and my friends on the opposite benches who are anxious to sponsor this Bill called this

[Miss Maniben Kara]

Act as a slavery because it meant forcing people to work when they did not desire to do so

Similarly, section 494 of the Indian Penal Code was meant for a breach of civil contract of service outside British India. It meant that those people who were taken outside this country, say to countries like Africa, after indulging into all the expenses of taking the workers outside British India, and if those workers did not want to work, then this section provided that it was a punishable offence. Even the bureaucratic government which existed at that time was compelled to repeal that section 494 in 1920. I want to appeal to my friends—and I hope my appeal will go home to them—let us not in these present days when world events are changing so fast, when the democratic forces in the country are going ahead and the working classes in particular are coming into their own in various countries—let not the first act of the popular government be such whereby not only the liberties of the working classes and their rights are taken away but the very right of citizenship and their democratic rights are taken away from them by turning a breach of civil contract into a penal offence.

An Act of such grave importance, not only for the working classes but for the entire population of this country why should it pass with such great haste? During war time we had to suffer Ordinances. Persons like us who always stood for the victory of the democratic forces accepted those Ordinances because we felt that the destruction of fascism was the ultimate victory of the working classes, and it is as a result of the destruction of fascism that we are glad to see that the bureaucratic government has gone and a popular government has come into power, but apart from that, during war time these measures—81A of the Ordinance was in force and it would have naturally expired by the first of October. Most of my friends sitting here know very well that the Ordinances for controls are fast disappearing. The controls only remain for food and other essential commodities. Ordinances are being withdrawn. Ordinances are withdrawn whereby the upper classes can have all the freedom, but so far as this particular section of the ordinance is concerned, I am surprised to find that it has got an extension of six months. It could not have got that extension for six months but for the consent of the majority party. The ordinance which in the natural course would have expired by the 1st of October—I mean section 91A—has been extended for a further six months, and if I can understand rightly, all this hurry for passing or getting this Bill through is simply to see that a restriction is placed on the workers before the expiry of this ordinance. I for one expect that, with the popular government coming into power, not only all these ordinances will go, but that the Act of 1920 which was imposed by a bureaucratic government will also go, and we will have in this country more civil liberties, more freedom and greater rights of citizenship.

There are in this Bill, as has been pointed out already by my friend Mr. Joshi, very serious implications, and the Bill is one-sided. Some clauses give an appearance of great advantages being granted to workers. What are the advantages that the workers are going to have? The advantages are in the form of workers' committees. On behalf of the workers and on behalf of the poorer strata of society, I would say that I would most certainly welcome a measure like this, but even then I would say that I stand for voluntary recognition and the employers accepting the principle of collective bargaining with the workers. Why should not this works committee,—if it gets the status that it deserves, not be able to bring between workers and employers an understanding? It will, but why should their right to strike be taken away from them? I am not one of those who would oppose a good measure like works committee simply because it has been sponsored by a particular party. I have no affiliations in this House—I stand alone here and my loyalty is only to the working classes and to nobody else. I therefore welcome the principle of works committee, but the underlying basic principle of this Bill, which is to deprive the workers of the only weapon of strike which is in their hands.

The Honourable Shri Jagjivan Ram: Question

Miss Maniben Kara: After all why have these restrictions against the workers if they want to strike? As a matter of fact, workers have no bank balances, they have no credits, nobody will give them—even the ration shops will not give them one week's rations unless they paid for it, and if the last Honourable speaker has made out a case that by seeing a rat somewhere the workers go on strike, well, I do not know whether he has any experience of workers. Perhaps he was just making out a case to strengthen his own position. We are not those who want to have strikes for agitational purposes, we cannot afford strikes, we stand for the right of collective bargaining, we believe in voluntary understanding between the employers and the employees.

I have made my position clear even when I spoke on the Trades Union Recognition Bill yesterday, that it is most unfortunate that even at this stage we require legislation for a very elementary right of the working classes, namely, recognition of trade unions.

The blame is not of the workers. It is of the employers and the Government which today have brought the necessity for such a Bill. I once again want to emphasize this fact that we are not people who want strikes. Does the Labour Member really think that by passing this kind of Act he is going to prevent strikes? If the Honourable Member and his friends were not afraid of going to jail, do you mean to say that the workers will be afraid of going to jail? It is no threat. If such a measure is going to be imposed on the working classes, I can tell you that it will be opposed tooth and nail in action and deeds.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: You swallowed it during the last six years.

Miss Maniben Kara: Let me remind my friend Prof. Ranga that even during war time the wages of the workers were not high compared to the cost of living but today nobody can deny that the worker is faced with unemployment, retrenchment, starvation, misery and diseases and add to these, the communal riots. The wanting or not wanting of strikes does not depend upon the whims of the agitators. It is only when the workers cannot get the very necessities of life and it is only when they cannot put up with the atrocities to which they are subjected that they go on strike.

As I said, the workers have no bank balances. The workers are interested in industrial peace and it should be the joint effort of industry and labour to see how we can secure industrial peace in this country. No such peace can come by means of repressive measures. If you want industrial peace, I would ask the Honourable the Labour Member to bring in measures which would relieve the workers of their miseries, the minimum wage Bill, the social securities Bill, the Old Age Pension Bill and so on. There are various other things which the workers want. Bring measures which really improve the economic condition of the working classes and I can assure you that there will be no strikes. Strikes only take place out of sheer necessity. They take place only when the employers get unreasonable and do not listen, in spite of letters, deputations and other things. Is there any machinery by which the worker can get his grievances redressed? No. This Bill provides that after giving notice, an officer will be appointed, a board will be appointed. As was rightly pointed out by Mr. Joshi, this big machinery of the Government will go on functioning and not functioning for two years and even then in the end the decisions of the Industrial Court cannot be enforced. It may be enforced partly. In other words the worker is never in a position to go on strike and we shall be depriving the working classes of this country of the only weapon which is in their hands. Why should this measure be restricted only to the workers? Why does it not apply to share bazaars, cotton bazaars and other similar places? Every time they are closed, it is not called a strike. It is called a demonstration. It may be a demonstration to them but it is not a demonstration to the public. The public is greatly inconvenienced. I say, this is not giving the worker a fair deal. It is all one-sided. It is directed against the poorer strata of society. I am not one of those who are asking for the imposition of such a ban. I believe in the democratic right of citizenship but the present Labour Member has thought it fit and necessary that it was the working classes alone who require this sort of protection in his own understanding

[At this Mr President vacated the chair which was then occupied by Mr Deputy President (Khan Mohammad Yamin Khan)]

I have said practically all I wanted to say but before I sit down I would once again press this most important point on the attention of the House—that the passage of this Bill will mean that we are turning the breach of a civil contract into a penal offence which effects the lives of the working classes alone. It is an encroachment on the rights of citizenship of this country. I therefore hope that the Bill may be circulated and eventually after getting the views of the representative organisations in this country, I hope the Labour Member will reconsider the thing and withdraw this Bill, because it is going to be opposed by the entire working class of this country.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: Mr Deputy President, I had not the least intention of entering into this war between capital and labour but being a Muslim and holding to the belief that society should not be divided on an economic basis, I should nevertheless like to draw the attention of the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill to conditions as they exist in the world to-day. I have heard the word 'democracy' mentioned many times. If it is democracy in Washington and London, will the Honourable Members tell me whether it is democracy in Moscow also? I would like the Honourable Member in charge to realise that these democratic notions and this division of society on an economic basis between workers and employers is leading to eternal damnation and constant wars. I see no distinction between conditions as they are in Moscow to-day and as they were in Berlin or Rome before the war or during the war. In this land of imitation and incongruities of ours we are repeating, parrot-like things which others have thought and others have put into practice. Everything which develops in Europe cannot succeed in this land of castes and many religions. I was hoping that the change that has come over this House would remove not only the political slavery of my countrymen but also the intellectual slavery to which we have been subjected since foreign domination. It is again worthy of consideration of the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill whether it is wise on his part and the part of his colleagues to take advantage of this interim period and rush through measures which will affect the whole condition and structure of Indian Society tomorrow. The words 'capitalist' and 'labour' have been used in this debate. There is a suspicion abroad in the country that the Government of India of to-day is capitalist-ridden, that influences from Bombay and other commercial centres have had something to do with the selection and nomination of Members in charge of various Departments. I would earnestly appeal to the Honourable Member in charge to see that this suspicion is removed particularly in view of his enthusiastic ecstasies yesterday over the Conference he had with Congress Ministers in charge of labour in the Congress-governed Provinces.

Some Honourable Members: There were Ministers of all provinces.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: I speak on my book and I do not allow being interrupted. The Congress Ministries and Ministers and the Honourable Member in charge of Labour have decided things. The suspicion is likely to spread that from the Centre the same capitalistic influences will go into the provinces and millions and crores of rupees will go to the undoing of the poorer sections of our people.

He has thought of strikes. I have had something to do with them and have suffered through them. I am neither a capitalist nor a worker, I earn my living by doing a clerical job. But what I should like the Honourable Member in charge and the veteran labour leader and our sister sitting behind me, is this. They take the name of the poor and suffering worker, they talk of the rights of labour, but do you know, Sir, that in my experience—and it is a very long one, perhaps as long as that of any Member in the House to day—it is not the labourer who conducts the affairs of labour. It is men who have nothing to do with the industry that make use of these strikes for political purposes. Sir, if labour leaders are going to utilise their brain-power and their intellect to undo the poor worker and to run away with his monthly contributions to push on their political mischief, I would rather say that the Bill be dropped altogether. During the postal strike, which made us all suffer, the Postal Union came to terms, but the Trade Union Congress with mighty big names of Presidents and Secretaries held the blunderbuss at our temples. I hope the Honourable Member in charge, who has not had enough time to go into these matters, will also consider the problem of what they have begun to call 'sympathetic strikes'.

I know the hour is getting late and I should not like to prolong my little contribution to the intellectuality, the outlook and vision of the Honourable Member in charge, but I take this Bill to be Chapter II of the Bill he introduced yesterday. Mr Deputy President, it did not come with a good grace from the lips of the representative of the Scheduled Castes in this House to run down the idea of communal unions. He knows and we know that in the terrible situation through which we are passing in India, Muslim employees are being kicked out by Hindu organisations and asked to go and find their bread in Pakistan. (Interruption) I am again speaking on my book and would challenge contradiction. Mr Joshi will perhaps bear me out that in Bombay the millowners have removed your communal brothers and mine, the Julahas, who were Muslims from Parsee and Hindu mills. I am again speaking on my book. They were removed one by one and thus they had to start a Muslim Girm. Kanjar Union. Saklatwala came from London in those days and when matters were brought to his notice and after he had investigated them, he had a good few words to tell to the general Girm Kanjar Union. Those conditions have spread wider to-day. I want peace, I want friendliness, I want mutual consideration and co-operation among our workers. But that will not be obtained by preaching to them "nationalism" and sitting here as a representative of the Scheduled Castes. Either he should not have been here or, if he was here, then he should have protected the rights of those who have been denied every right till now. I can speak with some knowledge that Muslim workers, whether in State organisations whether in public utility services and whether in private commercial organisation are being picked out and thrown away. The veteran labour leader will have to teach me all over again the meaning of "public utility services". We have also read that word and heard it and sometimes taken part in public utility organisations. To remove railways from public utilities because England has done it and to introduce others leads me to a feeling of hopelessness about our industries and relations between capital and labour in the future.

Public utilities to be owned by the public would indicate railways owned by the State which in the last analysis is but another name for the public. I would also request the Honourable Member in charge that now that they have secured those Benches, they will not and he will not allow labour unions to be considered as branches of the Indian National Congress and nothing more, that they will not and he will not allow these unions to make discrimination between capitalists, Hindu or Muslim. Let them treat all alike. If a Hindu capitalist is not kind to his workers, he should be punished and the same treatment should be accorded to a Muslim or a European capitalist or employer. But, Sir my experience tell me that discrimination is being used. My experience has brought cases to me where Muslim employers are alone put to trouble. I would like the Honourable Member in charge to call for lists of membership of all unions in India. If it takes him a year, I would extend to him the date. Let him find out how Muslims, particularly, and perhaps Scheduled Castes people are removed. How many hold any office? How many hold any key positions?

The Honourable Mr. Jagjivan Ram: Many.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: I know what is happening in the East Indian railway and the Bengal Assam Railway unions. He need not accept my statement. Let him enquire and find out and then let him, if he can judge things on merit make decisions justly and equitably. I also belong to India, my community is more labour-minded than a Jagatseeth community. His sermon yesterday led me to make these remarks. I have no intention of being in any way offensive. I am appealing to him to show mercy, to show justice, to show kindness for the poor Muslim worker, to whom the veterans of the labour movement have not given any encouragement, have not given any support and whom, wherever possible, they have kicked out. It is therefore that suspicion arises in my mind and I hope it will be removed. If I can induce the Honourable Member in charge of the Bill to accept the Islamic theory of society, nothing would please me better. But in the middle of this 20th century and in a country the people of which do not look at anything sensibly and in their own way but must go to Moscow and to London, must quote from German or French authors, until that habit of imitation, until that parrot-like habit of repetition of foreign theories which will not apply to conditions in our country persists, I can only appeal to the Honourable Member in charge for justice and not even for generosity.

Pandit Balkrishna Sharma: Mr Deputy President, Sir, after hearing so many speeches for and against the Motion, I feel I must begin by letting the cat out of the bag. The question which is before us today, though purely of a trade union nature, though purely of the nature regulating disputes between employers and employees, is not quite devoid of politics. I have heard with rapt attention the speech which was made by my Honourable friend Mr Joshi. I have heard the speech of Miss Maniben Kara, and I have also heard my Honourable friend Mr Abdur Rahman Siddiqi whose speeches are always like a breeze, violent though sometimes, and yet, quite provocative of thought. Well, Sir, the motion before the House from the side of the Muslim League party is that the Bill should be sent for circulation in order to elicit public opinion, and I hope this motion will not be pressed because the Honourable the Labour Member himself has conceded more or less to the demand for more time by accepting the amendment which was moved by Mr S C Joshi, the Chief Labour Commissioner. Therefore, I think, that so far as this Motion is concerned, the motion from the Muslim League party is concerned, it is more or less of a nature the principle of which has been accepted by the Labour Member and I hope that my Honourable friend Mr Jaffer will be kind enough to withdraw his motion. But certainly so far as the motion of my Honourable friend Mr N M Joshi is concerned, there is something which tells me that his desire to take as much time as possible is not with a view to improve the Bill by eliciting public opinion but it is with a view to sabotage the whole measure.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: How do you know it?

Pandit Balkrishna Sharma: I know it. He himself has very clearly said that in case his motion is not accepted, he will oppose the measure, and because in principle he does not accept the fundamentals which are contained in this Bill, I for the life of me cannot understand what possible advantage he will be able to derive by playing these delaying tactics upon the House. He does not accept compulsory arbitration. I do not think Mr Joshi is made of such stuff that he will be made to feel the necessity of accepting that principle even after six months' time, if we postpone this measure till then.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Mr Deputy President, the Bill is being circulated not for my benefit. It is circulated in order to hear the public opinion, in order that the public in India may know what the measure is.

Pandit Balkrishna Sharma: I will come to that public presently. So far as he himself is concerned, he has definitely said that it is not for his benefit that he wants it to be circulated, but it is for the benefit of the public that he wants it to go into circulation. Let me, Sir, with your permission, take into consideration those principles which generally call for circulation of a Bill. There are more or less three or four considerations which make it incumbent upon Government to get a Bill circulated for eliciting public opinion. Firstly, that the legislation should be well considered, secondly, that all sections should be consulted, and thirdly, that we should not legislate in a hurry. So far as these principles are concerned, it is better that we should see whether all these things are not meant for those times when we could go with easy steps and whether they should be made applicable to such times through which we are passing. I am reminded of a very famous saying of the late Lord Lloyd-George who said that there are times when the world spins so leisurely that it seems to remain at a stand-still for centuries, and then again there are times when the world moves with such a giddy pace that the distances of centuries are covered within days. Today we are passing through those times when we cannot wait for these dilatory tactics of sending Bills into circulation, and for very good reasons. Those who are aware of the history of legislation during the last 18 months in Great Britain will know how many laws have been passed in succession quickly. They did not wait for all these niceties.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: You bring forward such legislation, I will support you.

Pandit Balkrishna Sharma: That is the kind of legislation we are bringing forward now, this is part of that legislation. And those who talk in that strain are really people who want to do the workers in the eye. There was a time in my own province when the provincial Government came out with a proposal for the abolition of zamindari. Some people came forward and said, "Well, you are abolishing zamindari, why do you not abolish capitalism itself?"—which means a sure way of sidetracking all our activities.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: You bring forward a Bill tomorrow for the abolition of zamindari and you will have my fullest support.

Pandit Balkrishna Sharma: I am quite confident that Mr. Joshi will support such a Bill but unfortunately zamindari is not his subject but a subject of the provinces, and my province and other Congress provinces are quite capable of tackling the problem and they are doing it. But, as I said, these are the three considerations which guide us in sending a Bill into circulation. But I think we should not in any way allow ourselves to be sidetracked and we should not allow our activities to be confounded by such tall talks. The time-factor is not necessarily a sine quo non of producing good legislation. As the Honourable the Labour Member has already said, he or the Government of India, have been at it for the last so many months, all the employers have been consulted, when they assembled here in the tripartite conference. Similarly labour leaders have also been consulted. But because there is a section of people in the country who want to take advantage of the poor ignorant workers and who want to create difficulties in the way of the smooth working of national Governments in the various provinces, they are coming forward and condemning every legislation that we bring forward for the welfare of the workers. My Honourable friend Miss Kara said that she accepted all these restrictions on workers during the six years of war because she and men of her way of thinking were the people who were very anxious for the victory of the democratic forces of the world. Well, 'democratic forces' is all right, but may I know if this was the only noble principle which inspired them to keep mum during the last six years and allow the workers to be thrown to the wolves? Was that the only thing or was there something else? A tangible Rs 13,000 a month, why should she forget it? There is a character in Dickens who says, "Come, dear, let us talk fustian and gull them." She cannot go on talking fustian like this.

Miss Maniben Kara: What about your getting lakhs from the millowners?

Pandit Balkrishna Sharma: My Honourable friend Mr. Joshi said that by this legislation we are legalising strikes and forcing workers to accept arbitration. And then he made such funny remarks about this that I was really at a loss to understand whether Mr. Joshi was serious. He said we want to force the workers to accept arbitration. Well, he said, the arbitrator must be an impartial man; and who will be the authority that will appoint that arbitrator? Naturally, the Government, and if the Government, as it is constituted today, appoints the arbitrator naturally the Government is not impartial.

[Pandit Balkrishna Sharma]

the arbitrator who will be appointed will be also partial. Therefore, ultimately, from Mr Joshi's own arguments, it is proved that the principle of compulsory arbitration is humbug and therefore in no circumstances should this principle be accepted (Interruptions by Mr N. M. Joshi) I do not give in, Sir

[At this stage Mr. President (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) resumed the chair.]

Mr. President: Let both the Honourable Members resume their seats. Mr Joshi.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Sir the Honourable Member is misrepresenting me. What I said was that when there will be a Government based on adult suffrage in which all sections will be properly represented certainly the working classes will have confidence in the impartiality of that Government.

Pandit Balkrishna Sharma: Let me say that if there is adult suffrage the provincial legislatures and the central legislature will not be changed beyond recognition from what they are today. Such men always harp on the principle of adult suffrage and because adult suffrage cannot come today they stand in the way of a legislation which is in the interest of the workers.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Sir, the Honourable Member is again misrepresenting me. He says I am opposing all measures. There is the Health Insurance Bill coming up, I shall support it. I may try to amend it but I certainly do not propose to oppose all the Bills.

Pandit Balkrishna Sharma: I did not say all measures but such measures as affect labour and such measures about which he does not receive sanction from some organisation in the country to which he owes loyalty.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Sir, he is again misrepresenting me. I owe loyalty to no one. I owe loyalty to myself first and then to the working classes of this country and to nobody else.

Pandit Balkrishna Sharma: If this principle is adopted that so long as Government is not impartial, so long no principle of compulsory arbitration should be introduced in any legislation, then I submit that till Doomsday we are not going to get such Government. If this Government is not there and another Government comes in, that Government may be a Labour Government, and my capitalist friends will stand up and say that that is not an impartial Government and so they cannot accept any principle of compulsory arbitration. That is what it comes to, and their cue to go on saying and harping upon this thing that we cannot have any compulsory arbitration these days is an argument the validity of which I have not been able to understand.

And then again he said you have declared the strikes illegal. I say I have not. By this Bill we are only going to regulate the strikes and not to declare them illegal. That is the position of the Bill.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: We are more anxious to make the strikes successful.

Pandit Balkrishna Sharma: Because we are the men of the people. We are Mr Joshi's colleagues and Mr Joshi knows it and therefore we would be the first persons to come in the way of healthy, strong trade unions developing in this country, and by this Bill we are giving a filip to the trade union movement and we are trying to bring it to its own end and we are trying to get it out of the clutches of those people who have exploited labour for so many years. Let me assure everyone present here that we are not in the least anxious to come in the way of healthy development of labour. We want that our people should gain strength, we want that all classes, particularly those who are exploited, should come to their own and I think, Sir, this Bill which is before us today is the one measure by which we will be able to eliminate the activities of such of the people in labour movement who are trying to discredit our governments in various provinces and who are trying to create confusion in the public mind.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: Whose Government?

Pandit Balkrishna Sharma: Peoples' Governments in the provinces I may also point out that so far as the strikes are concerned, in my own province I had experience of dealing with these strikes for the last 20 years and more, and I know how interested people in the name of popular front have tried to take advantage of creating confusion in the public and of creating disorder in the society. I know it to my cost and the result is today that I am supporting this measure by which we shall be in a position to approach our workers and tell them how they should behave and how they should proceed and how they should protect themselves against those who come and talk of their interest but actually want to forward their own party interests in the name of the labour. And, therefore, Sir, I give my wholehearted support to the amended motion which the Honourable the Labour Minister has placed before us.

There are one or two points which I would like to make clear before I resume my seat. I have heard Mr. Joshi saying, well, if the strikes today are there in the country then naturally there must be some very grave causes. Naturally there are causes. Ill housing—all right. Insufficient wages, all right. I say this is an eternal problem. This problem of poverty of our masses has been unfortunately with us for the last 150 years and we are not going to solve that problem in the twinkling of an eye. If strikes were the only way of achieving that objective, I shall be the first man to go with Mr. Joshi, but, unfortunately, we know that strikes are not the way to achieve that objective. We have to increase our production, we have to regulate our distribution, we have to industrialize our provinces, and therefore it is not by merely going on strikes that the workers will be able to get what they want, and if in their despondency and in their despair they go on strike, then it is up to us, who are their well wishers, who are their servants, to go to them and tell them that the steps that they are taking are disastrous and that they cannot go on like that in future.

Mr. President: Is the Honourable Member going to the other point?

Pandit Balkrishna Sharma: Yes, Sir.

Mr. President: He may resume his speech on the next day when this Bill is taken up for consideration.

The Assembly then adjourned till Eleven of the Clock on Monday the 4th November 1946.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

Monday 4th November, 1946

The Assembly met in the Assembly Chamber of the Council House at Eleven of the Clock, Mr President (The Honourable Mr G V Mavalankar) in the chair.

MEMBERS SWORN

The Honourable Mr Jogendra Nath Mandal (Law Member), and

Sir John Francis Sheehy, C S I , I C S , M L A (Government of India) Nominated Official)

STARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

(a) ORAL ANSWERS

DESTRUCTION OF OFFICIAL PAPERS RELATING TO NATIONALIST LEADERS

164 *Sardar Mangal Singh : Will the Honourable the Home Member please state

(a) whether there is any truth in the press reports that certain papers in the Secretariat, relating to certain nationalist leaders were destroyed or hidden before the Interim Government took over,

(b) whether the Interim Government made any enquiries about this matter, if so what is the result thereof, and

(c) whether Government have taken or contemplate to take any measures against those responsible for this action?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari : (a) Yes some papers relating to certain nationalist leaders were destroyed as no longer wanted. No papers were hidden. No papers were destroyed in the Secretariat.

(b) The answer to the first part is in the negative. The second part does not arise.

(c) Government do not consider that any action in the matter is called for.

Sardar Mangal Singh : May I know if papers relating to the leaders of all parties have been destroyed, or only those relating to the leaders of the Congress Party?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari : The answer to this question would result in the disclosure of the contents of things which ought to be protected.

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal : Will the Honourable Member be pleased to state whether it is a fact that fresh files have been started in respect of these same leaders?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari : This suggestion I must totally deny. Even an answer to this question would involve undesirable disclosures.

Seth Govind Das : How does the Honourable Member think that the papers destroyed were only papers which were not wanted?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari : That is information I am authorised to give.

Lala Deshbandhu Gupta : Has particular care been taken to destroy the personal files of the Honourable Members sitting on the Treasury Benches?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari : The answer has to be a repetition of what I have already said. But I would like to explain. That there has been a long and serious conflict between those in authority before and those who are now in authority. It is a patent circumstance and it is no use trying to escape the corollary of that circumstance. No Government can get on without an Intellgence Department and we cannot get loyal service from an Intelligence Department if we do not protect the sources of information which they use. If with every change of masters, loyal members of the permanent services should be exposed to ridicule and persecution, it would not be a desirable state of things. It is therefore necessary, Sir, to preserve the convention in all good democracies where Opposition becomes Government and Government becomes Opposition, this convention being that members of the public service should not be exposed to any attack or ridicule on a change of masters.

INDIAN TROOPS IN INDONESIA

165. *Sardar Mangal Singh : Will the Defence Secretary please state

(a) whether there are any Indian Troops in Indonesia ;

(b) if the answer to part (a) above be in the affirmative when will the Indian Troops be withdrawn and when will the last Indian soldier leave the soil of that country, and

(c) the number of Indian soldiers and officers who have been killed, wounded and missing in Indonesian operations since the cease fire order on the Far Eastern Front ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: (a) Yes, Sir

(b) Indian troops will be withdrawn from Indonesia by the end of November 1946

(c) The number of Indian Army Officers and other ranks killed, wounded and missing in Indonesian operations since the cease fire order is given in detail in a statement placed on the table of the House. The totals for the Netherlands East Indies are Killed—966, Wounded—1,684, Missing—212

Maulana Zafar Ali Khan: Arising out of part (b), I want to know whether the white man's burden will be transferred to the shoulders of Holland after the British and Indian military forces leave that place?

Mr. President: Has the Honourable Member understood the question?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: I am afraid I have not followed the question

Mr. President: Will the Honourable Member repeat the question? What is the information that he wants?

(Maulana Zafar Ali Khan did not rise to explain his point)

Sardar Mangal Singh: May I know whether arrangements have been made to get our troops out of that country, or is it only the intention of the Government to do so and that there may be some difficulties later on and the Government may not be able to fulfil their assurance given here?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: No, Sir Plans have been well laid for the withdrawal of all Indian troops by the 28th of this month and I see no reason why, unless something very unprecedented happens the last Indian soldier should not have left Indonesia by that date

Mr. Manu Subedar: May I know whether there is any understanding with the Dutch people that the power relinquished by the British will be passed on to the Dutch, and that care is being taken even by our Government that such power does not go to the Indonesians?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: There is no understanding so far as I am aware between the Government of India and the Dutch authorities on this subject of the kind referred to by my Honourable friend

Seth Govind Das: Isn't it a fact that till now several dates had been fixed for withdrawing the army from Indonesia and several times promises were given in this House that by such and such date the Indian troops would be withdrawn? Now should we take it that this 28th November is final?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: According to the present plans and intentions of Government, this is the final date

Babu Ram Narayan Singh: Has this Interim Government got full powers over the movement of Indian troops?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: That is a big question of policy. But I am sure that the Government of India have a considerable voice in deciding on the movement of troops

TALKS re SETTLEMENT OF STERLING BALANCES

166. *Sardar Mangal Singh : Will the Honourable the Finance Member please state

(a) when the question of settlement of the sterling balances is likely to be taken up with His Majesty's Government, whether the talks will take place in Delhi or in London, and

(b) whether Government propose to consult this House before the final settlement is reached?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: (a) The question of the date and venue for the negotiations in connection with the sterling balances is at present under discussion with H M G

(b) The Government have duly noted the views expressed in the House during the discussions on the budgets and the Bretton Woods Motions and will bear them in mind. Government consider, however, that discussion of proposals in the Assembly before final settlement would not be a feasible or satisfactory method of conducting these negotiations

Mr. Manu Subedar: Has the attention of Government been drawn to the statement of Dr Dalton, the Chancellor of the Exchequer that no negotiations would start about the sterling balances till an all Party Government takes place in India? And if it is so, have Government examined the full implications of the statement that England would not pay unless and until there was this sort of Coalition Government which now exists?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: The Government have seen reports regarding the Chancellor of the Exchequer's statement but as the Honourable the Finance Member made it clear in his speech on the Brettonwoods motion, the Government of India are in communication with His Majesty's Government and the latter have expressed their anxiety to conduct the negotiations as early as possible. So the meaning and implication of that statement of the Chancellor of the Exchequer do not really arise.

Sardar Mangal Singh: May I know from the Honourable Member whether these negotiations are likely to take place before the next Budget Session?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: I should think so. As the Honourable the Finance Member has made it quite clear, they are to be started as early as possible.

Sardar Mangal Singh: Will the Honourable Member give the assurance that the Government of India will press that the negotiations should take place in Delhi and not in London?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: I think the House may take it that this point will be duly considered by Government.

APPOINTMENT OF A TAXATION ENQUIRY COMMITTEE.

167. *Sardar Mangal Singh: Will the Honourable the Finance Member please state

(a) whether Government have decided to appoint a taxation enquiry commission to review the entire taxation structure of the country,

(b) its terms of reference and whether they will include the review of the land revenue system also, and

(c) whether Government will await its report before taking any action to abolish or alter any individual tax.

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: (i) and (b). The matter is under consideration and Government have not come to a final decision.

(c) The point raised by the Honourable Member will be kept in mind. Whether or not a taxation enquiry committee is appointed Government must reserve the right to consider individual cases on their merits.

Sardar Mangal Singh: Is it not a fact that during the last Budget Session, the then Finance Member announced in this House that a Taxation Enquiry Committee will be appointed and now the Honourable Member says that the Government of India have not made up their mind yet. Has the decision of the other Government been upset?

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: That was the old Government and this is a new one!

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: What the then Honourable the Finance Member said was "I propose therefore to set up a Taxation Enquiry Committee in the near future." As Honourable Members know the then Finance Member was here only for a short while after the Budget Session, during which he made certain preliminary investigations for the purpose of setting up this Committee, and the matter and not been concluded before he left. Now that there is a new Government the matter has got to be considered again.

Miss Maniben Kara: Do I have the assurance of the Honourable Member that the interests of the taxpayers also will be represented on this Taxation Enquiry Committee?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: I think on the question of representation on the Committee, the then Finance Member made this point quite clear, that it should be an expert rather than a representative body.

Miss Maniben Kara: Does the Honourable Member consider that the taxpayer cannot be represented by an expert on that committee?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: That also has been mentioned—"although care should be taken to obtain the views of all the interests affected,—industry, commerce, agriculture, labour, the consumer, the ordinary taxpayer and lastly, the Administration, both Central and Provincial."

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Is it not a fact that the Interim Government has reached a decision in favour of the abolition of the salt tax?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: There is a question on that later on Sardar Mangal Singh: With reference to part (b) the Honourable Member has said that this suggestion will be kept in view but may I ask the Honourable Member whether he is aware that in reply to the debate in this House the then Finance Member assured the House that the question of land revenue will be one of the terms of reference to this Committee?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: The question here is "whether Government will await its report before taking any action to abolish or alter any individual tax?"

Sardar Mangal Singh: I am referring to part (b) which refers to land revenue.

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: That also is mentioned in the then Finance Member's declaration—all questions will be considered by the Taxation Enquiry Committee

IMPRISONED OR DETAINED I N A PERSONNEL

168. *Sardar Mangal Singh: Will the Defence Secretary please state

(a) the number of Indian National Army personnel still imprisoned or detained without trial,

(b) the number of prisoners of the 20th C I H, and

(c) whether Government propose to review their cases and release them forthwith, if not why not?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: (a) (i) The number of military I N A personnel still undergoing sentences of imprisonment is 15

(ii) The number detained without trial is Nil

(b) The number of prisoners of the Central India Horse still serving sentences is nine

(c) The remaining portion of the sentences of the nine men of the Central India Horse has recently been remitted. As regards the I N A personnel, I would invite the Honourable Member's attention to the reply to part (e) of Starred Question No. 93, asked by the Honourable Shri Sri Prakasa on the 30th October, 1946

Prof. N. G. Ranga: What about the civilian section of the I N A?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: The Defence Department are not responsible for the civilian section of the I N A personnel, but the Home Department

Shri Sri Prakasa: With reference to the answer to my earlier question to which the Honourable Member has referred and the facts stated in the statement that was placed on the table of the House along with the answer to that question may I know the conditions in which these prisoners are kept in the Provinces and whether the Government meets their expenses?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: I am afraid I must ask for notice of that question. I may, however, say about the prisoners that once they are transferred to Provincial Governments they cease to be the responsibility of the Central Government so far as their wellbeing and other matters are concerned

Shri Sri Prakasa: In view of the fact that in part (b) of the statement that was read on the floor of the House on that occasion it was said that the present rules of the respective Provinces apply to the prisoners that are kept in those Provinces will the Honourable Member make sure that these prisoners are properly treated because I find that some of these are kept in the 'C' class and will the Honourable Member order that they should all be put in 'B' class at least?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: I have already explained that the moment the military prisoners are transferred to civil jails they become the responsibility of the Provincial Governments concerned and all matters, including the question of classification are the concern of the Provincial Governments

Shri Sri Prakasa: May I take it that the Government of India have no hand in forcing the Provincial Governments to treat their prisoners properly? Do the Provincial Governments meet all the expenses or have the Government of India to pay for them?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: I have already explained that the Government of India have no say in the matter

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Why not?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: Because they cease to be the responsibility of the Central Government the moment they are transferred to the provincial jails. That is the position. I am not sure about meeting the cost and that was why I asked for notice of that particular question.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: If it is not the concern of the Government of India even when their own prisoners are transferred to the civil jails of the various provinces, may I know why it should be so? There must be some reason for it.

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: The reason why some of the military prisoners are transferred to civil jails is that after the expiry of their term, they are no longer to be re-enrolled in the army and therefore they cease to be really the concern of the Central Government.

Shri D. P. Karmarkar: Whoever may be responsible for the welfare of the prisoners in the Provinces, in view of the clearly expressed opinion of this House, do the Government of India propose to tender advice to the Provincial Governments to see that the prisoners are properly treated?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: If there is any individual case in which the treatment meted out is not satisfactory, we will certainly bring it to the notice of the Provincial Government. From the statement that I have supplied there is only one C class prisoner.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Three according to the statement.

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: The reason why I say only one is that I believe two of them are civilian internees, who have been included in this statement.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable Member kindly get those prisoners to Delhi, if the provinces do not treat them properly? As the Honourable Member asked for a specific case, will he also kindly enquire about the prisoner who is in Agra and find out why he has been put in C class?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: I will enquire about the particular person the Honourable Member refers to but there is no reason to believe that the Provincial Governments do not treat these prisoners satisfactorily as is implied in the first part of his question.

WITHDRAWAL OF INDIAN TROOPS FROM BASRAH

169. Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: (a) Will the Defence Secretary please state when all the Indian troops will be withdrawn from the port of Basrah?

(b) Do Government propose to place on the table of the House all paper pertaining to the decision in regard to the despatch of Indian troops to Basrah?

(c) Have Government received any protests from the Government of Iran and Iraq in connection with this matter?

(d) What is the strength of the armed forces at present stationed in Basrah and elsewhere in Iraq?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: (a) I cannot state when all the Indian Troops will be withdrawn from the port of Basrah as the matter is still under the consideration of Government.

(b) No, Sir, it would be contrary to Parliamentary practice to place on the table of the House all papers leading up to an executive decision.

(c) No, Sir.

(d) I am afraid so long as other countries do not disclose the strength of their Armed Forces it would not be advisable to give the strength of Indian Armed Forces abroad.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Whose decision was it to send our troops to Basra? Was it the decision of the British Government or was it an independent decision of the Indian Government?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: The decision was taken in consultation with the Government of India.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: May I ask whether the Honourable Member is in a position to give us an assurance as to the approximate period within which these Indian troops are expected to be recalled from Basra?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: I wish I could give that information, but as I have said the matter is under consideration, and I would rather not give a definite date.

Mr. Manu Subedar: In reply to part (a), the Honourable Defence Secretary said that the matter is receiving the consideration of the Government. May I know whether it is the Government here or the War Council in London? And will the Honourable Member make it clear to this House the point as to the restrictions which this Government has got in regard to the movement of Indian troops from India to elsewhere and back again?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: I shall repeat the statement which I made the other day that so far as this Government is concerned, their policy is very clear and that is that Indian troops should be withdrawn from all overseas stations. It is, however, subject to our obligations arising from India's past associations with other countries.

Mr. Manu Subedar: My question is, have the Government of India an absolutely free hand in this matter? As I know they have not, will the Honourable Member explain to this House the present constitutional position as to what extent the judgment on these matters is taken,—the final decision is taken in London—and to what extent the Government of India are involved in such decisions?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: I must confess I am not prepared for the discussion of the constitutional position this morning, but I can give this assurance that whatever views are expressed by the Government of India in a matter like this would very likely—I should say most probably—be acceptable to His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom.

Shri Sri Prakasa: What and whose parliamentary practice is followed in putting papers asked for on the table of the House?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: I think it is a well-known practice that papers leading up to an executive decision should not be placed on the table of the House, for obvious reasons. Numerous people from the lowest rung of the ladder to the highest record their notes on files, and what the House is, I think, interested in is the final decision of the Government, and not the stages by which that decision has been arrived at.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: May I know when was this decision to send troops to Basra taken?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: In August last.

Shri D. P. Karmarkar: May I know the object of keeping these troops in Basra?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: That was announced in our press communiqué. I will read that out if my Honourable friend desires it.

"In order that there may be ready at hand for the protection, should circumstances demand it, of Indian, British and Arab lives and in order to safeguard Indian and British interests in South Persia, troops are being sent from India to Basra. There are many hundreds of Indians employed in the oilfields and refineries of South Persia and India depends largely on this source for her vital supplies of petrol."

Diwan Chaman Lal: When was this decision taken?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: This press communiqué was issued on the 3rd August.

DEMobilIZATION OF INDIAN TROOPS

170. *Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: (a) Will the Defence Secretary please state how many Indian troops are still awaiting to be demobilised from the Indian Army?

(b) What is the strength of the Indian Defence Forces at present under the following Services:

- (i) total number of men in the Army,
- (ii) total number of men in the Air Force, and
- (iii) total number of men in the Navy?

Mr G. S. Bhalja: (a) The difference between the strength of Indian Troops on 1st October, 1946, and then strength in the ultimate peace time Indian Army is 669 000

It should, however be noted that the strength of the ultimate peace time army is at present provisional as it has not yet been approved by the Government

(b) The strength of each of the three Services of the Armed Forces (excluding civilians) on the 1st October 1946 was as follows—

(i) Army—
Officers	32,866
Other ranks	10,23,344
(ii) Air Force—
Officers	3,748
Airmen	38,475
(iii) Navy—
Officers	1,252
Warrant Officers, Ratings and WRINS	11,698

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: With reference to part (b) of the question, may I ask whether the figures given by him will be maintained during the post-war period or will they be reduced considerably later on?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: This is the strength as existing at present. It is going of course to be considerably reduced in the course of demobilisation, and as I just now said the ultimate size of the defence force has not yet been finally determined by Government.

Sardar Surjit Singh Majithia: May I ask the number of airmen who have applied for permanent commissions?

Mr G. S. Bhalja: I am afraid I must ask for notice of that question. It does not directly arise out of this.

REVISION OF PAY OF MEN IN CIVIL AND MILITARY SERVICES

171. *Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Will the Defence Secretary please state whether Government have under consideration the revision of pay of men in the services, the Army, the Air Force and the Navy?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: Yes. Government have already appointed a Committee to make recommendations on the post-war pay, allowances and pensions of the three Defence Services. The constitution of the Committee and its terms of reference were announced in a press note on the 29th January, 1946.

Sardar Surjit Singh Majithia: Is the Government aware that it is due to the inaction on the part of Government regarding the announcement of the pay of the airmen that there are not enough volunteers to serve the air forces permanently?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: Government are very well aware of the disturbing consequences of uncertainty, particularly uncertainty about the question of pay and pensions, but unfortunately the Government in the Defence Department cannot come to a unilateral decision on the questions of pay, etc., until and unless they have seen the recommendations of the Central Pay Commission which the Government of India have appointed. Obviously the two should be correlated as far as possible.

Lt-Col Dr J O Chatterjee: With reference to the reply just now given, why this question not referred to the Pay Commission and why was it not considered that the two commissions should sit jointly or at any rate consult each other?

Mr. G S Bhalja: As I said, this committee was appointed early in January of this year, when the idea of appointing a Central Pay Commission to examine the questions of pay and emoluments of the civil services came up at a later stage—if I mistake not, as a result of an impending strike in the Posts and Telegraphs Department.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know what the strength of this committee is and if there are any Indians on it?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: I answered that question fully on the last occasion.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: That there is no Indian on it?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: There is Mr. Dayal of the Military Finance Department on the committee. I promised to examine the suggestion made in this Honourable House about the possibility of finding other suitable Indian officers to sit on this committee.

REMARKS OF DR HUGH DALTON, CHANCELLOR OF EXCHEQUER re RECOVERY OF STERLING BALANCES

172. *Mr. Manu Subedar: (a) Has the attention of the Honourable the Finance Member been drawn to the remarks by Dr Hugh Dalton, Chancellor of the Exchequer, relating to negotiations for the sterling balances of India and his iteration in this connection that the terms of the Anglo-American Loan Agreement would be fully carried out?

(b) Did Government put forward any clear statement of India's case in order to counteract the propaganda against Indian interests in this connection?

(c) What steps have Government taken to secure early recovery of the sterling balances?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: (a) Yes, Sir.

(b) No, Sir.

(c) The position has been explained in the course of the Honourable Finance Member's speech on the motion on the Bretton Woods Agreements on the 28th October, 1946. The Government of India are in correspondence with His Majesty's Government with the object of having the sterling balances negotiations as early as practicable.

Mr. Manu Subedar: In view of the fact that India gave these sterling balances, or was made to give these sterling balances, in the course of five years and in view of the fact that according to the Anglo-American Agreement Britain is claiming that the bulk of these sterling balances would not begin to be repaid for six years more and that the actual repayment would cover a period of 50 years, in other words in view of the absurd position taken up by the United Kingdom under the Anglo-American Loan Agreement by which the Chancellor of the Exchequer swears, will Government put forward India's side of the case and say—what you took in five years you cannot claim 56 years for repayment?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: In the first place I must say that the presumption in these questions is not quite correct. There is no such demand made officially by the British Government that they would pay in 56 years. What my Honourable friend is referring to is the terms of the Anglo-American Agreement.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Clause 10.

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: A portion of the sterling balances will be paid immediately, a second portion, being funded, will be paid over a period of years (it does not mention 56 years) and a third will be adjusted. Now, so far as the question of our having paid in five years and receiving in 56 years is concerned, my Honourable friend knows very well that it was not money that we paid. It was war supplies that we gave and it has got to be fully repaid in the form of goods and services and they must necessarily take a number of years. So far as taking up the question with H. M. G. is concerned, naturally it cannot be taken up piecemeal but it will be taken up along with the sterling balance negotiations.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Has not my Honourable friend seen the suggestion officially made from the U. S. A. as well as from the U. K. that no payment should begin to be made for six years, that is, until 1951 and that after that, payment would be made over 50 years by such instalments as may be fixed. In view of the claim made for such extension of payment, will not the Government of India take proper steps in order to counter the propaganda that what the British Government took from us in five years they will be able to repay only in 56 years?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: Sir, as I said, the whole thing must be considered in connection with the sterling balances negotiations. So far as the propaganda is concerned, it is not official and the Government of India will take such steps as they consider proper.

Diwan Chaman Lal: Is the Honourable Member aware of the fact that Sir William Edie is coming out to settle the question of the sterling balances with the Government of India?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: As I said, the question of negotiations is under discussion with the H. M. G.

GOLD PAR VALUE OF THE RUPEE

173. *Mr. Manu Subedar: (a) Has the Honourable the Finance Member reached any conclusion with regard to the gold par value of the rupee? If so, by what process, on the strength of what materials, and what is the conclusion?

(b) What is the officially accepted value of gold in India?

(c) Have Government any information as to changes in the official value of gold in any of the important countries?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: (a) No, Sir.

(b) None.

(c) From the information available the only countries that have changed the gold value of their currency recently are Canada and Sweden. In the former case the gold value of the Canadian Dollar was altered from 0.80768 grammes of fine gold per dollar to 0.888671 grammes of fine gold with effect from the 6th July, 1946, while in the case of the latter, the value of the Kronner was altered from 0.211595 grammes of fine gold to 0.246914 grammes of fine gold with effect from the 18th July, 1946.

Mr. Manu Subedar: In respect to (b), will the Honourable Finance Secretary tell this House at what rate the Reserve Bank is bound to buy gold if it is tendered to it?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: It is not bound.

Mr. Manu Subedar: In view of the very vast fluctuations and the great speculation occurring with regard to the bullion markets in Bombay, will Government consider the desirability of checking the speculation by stopping the forward trade in gold in view of the importance of gold in the International Fund or in any case will Government see that the rules under which the associations are working for the sale of gold—future transactions—are constantly seen and revised both by the Reserve Bank and the Government?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: Government's attention has been drawn to the present condition of the bullion market and they are considering the necessary steps to counter the present tendencies

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: What is the official value of gold in India?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: There is no official value of gold in India

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: Is the gold sold to the highest bidder by the Reserve Bank?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: The Reserve Bank is not selling gold at present

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: Is it not a fact that the gold is sold for foreign banks by the Reserve Bank?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: Not at present

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: When was it stopped?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: I have not got the date. It was stopped nearly a year ago

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: It was not stopped during the last session of the Assembly. I put this question repeatedly. They are selling it and accepting some commission

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: So far as I am aware, the actual date when the gold sales was stopped was given

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: You may make a reference. You will find that I am correct that the Reserve Bank

Mr. President: The Honourable Member will address the question to the Chair

MONOPOLIES IN THE INTERMEDIATE BOARD, AJMER

174. *Pandit Sri Krishna Dutt Paliwal: Will the Honourable Member for Education be pleased to state if Government are aware that Checkership, Tabulation and Inspectorship of the Intermediate Board, Ajmer, remain the close monopoly of a few persons only and that more than half of the names on the list of these office holders have been appearing for the last fifteen years? If so, what steps Government propose to take to break this monopoly?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: The Honourable Member apparently refers to the Board of High School and Intermediate Education, Rajputana, Central India and Gwalior

The question relates to the internal administration of the Board. The Chairman of the Board, Dr. J. C. Chatterjee, is a member of this House. I propose to bring the question to his notice

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: With reference to the reply given by the Honourable Member may I bring to your notice the constitutional position? I am asking for your ruling on a point of order. This Board is a Federation of the Indian States of Rajputana, Central India and Gwalior. It has been created by a Resolution of the Political Department. The Government of India have never paid one penny towards its maintenance. Now, Sir, I would like your ruling whether a question of this kind where the Board is not the concern of the Governor General in Council can be discussed in this House, as the matter is one for the Indian States?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: I can help Dr. Chatterjee to understand the position. The Educational Adviser of the Government of India is the controlling authority of the Board.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: The Controlling authority is the agent of the Political Department.

RESULTS OF DEMONETIZATION OF CURRENCY NOTES

175. *Shri Sri Prakasa : Will the Honourable the Finance Member be pleased to state

(a) the total amount of Government currency notes that were demonetized during the last financial year 1945-46,

(b) the amount that Government ultimately paid for these notes to the holders thereof,

(c) the amount of profit that Government made by this Ordinance,

(d) if any persons whom it was the intention of the Ordinance to catch, were actually caught and if so, how many, and to what extent they suffered losses, and if any further action was taken against them,

(e) if Government are satisfied that no innocent persons have suffered as a result of this Ordinance, and

(f) the results of the scrutiny held in the reasons the holders gave for having the notes in their possession as required by the relevant Ordinance?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar : (a) Rs 14,96,69,000

(b) Government have not ceased to make payments in exchange for these notes, but the total payment made up till the 11th October, 1946 was Rs 128,59,89,500

(c) I invite the Honourable Member's attention to the reply to part (c) of Sardar Mangul Singh's starred question No 73 on the 30th October, 1946

(d) The Ordinance has so far resulted in seven prosecutions, all of which are as yet sub judice. Several other cases for prosecution are under consideration

(e) No claims have so far been refused, and Government are satisfied that no loss has been caused to innocent persons presenting High Denomination notes for encashment

(f) As the scrutiny of the declarations filed is continuing, Government are, as yet, unable to indicate its result

Shri Sri Prakasa : With reference to the reply given to Sardar Mangul Singh's question on an earlier occasion, may I infer that the Government expects to make 20 crores of rupees from this transaction?

An Honourable Member : Where is the harm?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar : In reply to another question we mentioned the amounts which had already been paid. It has already been mentioned that 128.59 crores have already been repaid. I am afraid 20 crores is not likely to be realised. Even the present difference is only about 15 crores.

Lala Deshbandhu Gupta : Is the Honourable Member aware of the fact that soon after the ordinance was issued, currency notes of the value of Rs 1,000 were sold in Delhi for Rs 500? Enquiries showed that some very highly placed officials of the Supply Department were seen busy making transactions.

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar : There are various reports, but the Government is unaware of it.

Shri Sri Prakasa : With reference to the Honourable Member's reply to part (a) of the question, is he not aware that a lady in Karachi died of heart failure as soon as she heard of this Ordinance? If so, may I know whether the Honourable Member has punched her thousand rupee notes and if not what has happened to them?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar : The Government is not aware of this, and if the lady died I do not know whether it was genuine or not.

Lala Deshbandhu Gupta : With reference to the reply of the Honourable Member to my supplementary question, may I ask whether it is a fact that particular mention was made in the local press about these transactions? If so, may I know if any action was taken by Government or Government propose to make necessary inquiries in the matter?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: This very question was asked on a previous occasion on this matter in the Assembly and it was pointed out by the Government Member then that as soon as this report came to the notice of the Government of India instructions were issued to all the District Magistrates to be on the watch for such cases and take action.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Will not the principle adumbrated this morning by the Honourable the Education Member apply here also to the effect that permanent officials should not be victimised?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: I do not see the point of the question.

ABOLITION OF SALT TAX

176 *Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable the Finance Member be pleased to state

- (a) if it is a fact that Government are considering the abolition of the salt-tax;
- (b) if so, when the proposals are likely to come into effect;
- (c) what will be the loss to revenue; and
- (d) what arrangements Government propose to make for the production and distribution of salt in the future?

Sir John Sheehy: (i) to (d). The Honourable the Finance Member hopes to be able to make a statement shortly.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Could the Honourable Member enlighten the House as to the amount by which the price of salt will be reduced when the salt tax is abolished?

Sir John Sheehy: The duty on salt at present is Re 1-9-0 per maund and the cost of manufacture of salt is about 4 annas. Anyhow, the price ought to be reduced by Re 1-9-0, which is the amount of the duty.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Will Government assure this House that steps will be taken to see that the salt supplied to the public is clean and that the amount of the deleterious kind of salt which the poor man manages to get will be reduced and will not be increased by the abolition of the duty?

Sir John Sheehy: I think we can give that undertaking.

Khan Mohammad Yamin Khan: Has the Honourable Member abolished the system of giving monopoly for the sale of salt in the districts to individuals?

Sir John Sheehy: That will be considered, but that was necessary in order to insure an adequate supply of salt in the various districts.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: May I ask if there will be still monopolies even when the salt tax is abolished?

Sir John Sheehy: I do not know whether the salt tax will be abolished and I cannot answer hypothetical questions.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: I had already asked one supplementary question—is it not true that the Interim Government had already reached a decision that the salt tax should be abolished?

Sir John Sheehy: I cannot answer that question.

*177 [Withdrawn]

PROGRESS OF WORK BY THE PAY COMMISSION

178 *Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable the Finance Member be pleased to state

- (a) the progress so far made by the Pay Commission;
- (b) the period of time for which they are expected to sit further; and
- (c) the approximate date by which their report is likely to be ready?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: (a) The Pay Commission have under consideration the large mass of representations sent, in the first instance, by associations of Government employees and others as also the replies received to the Commission's questionnaire. At present the Commission are in the stage of taking the oral evidence of representatives of staff associations and of Government officials in elucidation of the points made in the replies.

(b) It is expected that they will sit till the end of the current financial year, but, if the programme is slowed down by the fact that the Members of the Commission have also to attend to legislative business, the work of the Commission may have to be prolonged till the end of June 1947.

(c) The report is likely to be ready within the period indicated above for the sitting of the Commission, but it is expected that Government will be informed of the preliminary views of the Commission by the end of January 1947.

Miss Maniben Kara: Is the Honourable Member aware that the strike of the workers all over India, particularly of the railway employees, was suspended as a result of the assurance given that the Pay Commission will hurry up with their results as early as possible?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: That is true, but the whole question has to be considered for all the Government services and the Pay Commission cannot take up the question of one particular service only.

Miss Maniben Kara: Is the Honourable Member aware that there was an All-India strike of the Posts and Telegraphs workers also and they were also assured to await the result of this Pay Commission? Is he also aware that a terrible feeling of discontent prevails among the workers owing to this delay in publishing the report and finishing their inquiry?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: Government is fully aware of the whole situation, but, as I have explained, the Commission must take its time because the whole question is very complicated.

Mr. S. Guruswami: Is it not a fact that certain Provincial Governments have been already advised by the Central Pay Commission about the pay structure of certain categories of staff?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: I must ask for notice of this question.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. O. Chatterjee: Is the Honourable Member aware that the Pay Commission takes evidence for over seven hours a day and that it is humanly impossible to take evidence for more than seven hours at a stretch?

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Is it not a fact that the Government had promised to direct the Pay Commission to take up the investigation of pay and salaries in the Railway Department first before they directed their attention to the other Departments of the Government of India?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: That is true, but the Commission said that they must deal in a single report with the whole question of salaries of all Central Government services.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Has the Pay Commission gone into the salaries of the railway employees at all till now?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: I am sorry I do not know the exact stage which the Commission has reached.

Miss Maniben Kara: Do we have the assurance that the report of the Commission will be completed by the end of this year as they had promised in the beginning?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar: I have said in my reply that the Commission hopes to finish their report by the end of the financial year; but, as I pointed out, if the time of other Members is taken up on account of the legislative business, it will have to be prolonged.

CULTIVATION AND MANUFACTURE OF OPIUM IN INDIA

179. *Shri Sri Prakasa : Will the Honourable the Finance Member be pleased to state

- (a) the amount of opium cultivated and manufactured in India during the financial year 1945-46,
- (b) the amount sold in India and the amount exported abroad,
- (c) the countries to which opium is exported,
- (d) the amount of profit made by Government by such sale, and
- (e) if any countries have protested against the export of opium to them?

Sir John Sheehy: (a) In the Government Opium Factories at Ghazipur and Neemuch accounts are maintained for the opium season, i.e. from October to September. The information furnished below is accordingly for the opium season year ended 30th September 1945 in so far as the two factories are concerned. Information in respect of certain Indian States which produce opium is not readily available

The quantity cultivated, by which I take it the Honourable Member means, produced and the quantity manufactured was 14,650 maunds and 8,844 maunds respectively.

(b) The total quantity of opium sold in India and the quantity exported abroad was 6,740 maunds and 1,890 maunds respectively

(c) Since 1936 opium is normally supplied to the countries with which there is a close geographical or long-standing political link, namely, the French and Portuguese Settlements in India, Nepal, Burma, Zanzibar (including Pemba), Aden and the United Kingdom

(d) The amount of profit made on opium exported from India during the aforesaid year was Rs 28,75,000. Opium issued for internal consumption in India, to the Provincial Governments and Indian States is sold at cost price

(e) None

Breejut Bohini Kumar Chaudhuri: May I ask in what provinces of India opium is not sold at all?

Sir John Sheehy: I should like to have notice of that question, but I think it is prohibited in Assam. But I would not say that it is not sold there.

Shri Sri Prakasa: Is it a fact that no opium is exported to China?

Sir John Sheehy: That is so.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: While exporting opium to foreign countries, is care taken to see that opium sent to other countries is used only for medical purposes?

Sir John Sheehy: Yes, it is.

REPATRIATION OF INDIAN PRISONERS IN ALLIED HANDS

180. *Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal : Will the Secretary of the Defence Department be pleased to state :

- (a) how many Indians—outside India—are still either prisoners in the Allied hands or are exiles;
- (b) the machinery which the Government of India can use for getting whereabouts and other particulars direct in respect of such men;
- (c) whether the Government of India have entered into direct diplomatic relations with the Allied powers for the above purpose,
- (d) what steps are being taken by this Government for repatriating such persons to India; and
- (e) the Government policy in the matter?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: The question should have been addressed to the Honourable Member for External Affairs. It has accordingly been transferred to the list of questions for the 7th November, 1946, when it will be answered by him.

FUNDS FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF DESTITUTE HOMES

181. *Seth Govind Das : (a) Will the Secretary for Health Department please state if Government have ever given any consideration to the estimate of funds required for the establishment of destitute homes?

(b) Will he take the Lucknow 'Poor Home' as a suitable basis for such estimates?

Mr. S. H. Y. Oulsnam: (a) The question was considered in 1944 in connection with the establishment of a Poor Home in Delhi.

(b) The provision made in Lucknow was considered when the Delhi scheme was drawn up.

TEST FOR MINISTERIAL STAFF IN THE INCOME-TAX OFFICES IN SIND

182. *Seth Sukhdev : (a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the Income-tax Commissioner, Bombay, introduced a test for the ministerial staff in Income-tax Offices in Sind in 1944?

(b) Is it a fact that clerks in the lower grade irrespective of age or service were required to appear for the test?

(c) Is the Honourable Member aware that some persons who were on the eve of retirement were reverted for not securing a certain standard in the test?

(d) Is it a fact that the persons who were reverted were subsequently promoted after a year or so, ignoring the result of the said test?

(e) If the reply to part (d) is in the affirmative, why were they not allowed the difference of pay due to them for the intervening period?

Sir John Sheehy: (a) and (b) The Honourable Member's attention is invited to the replies to parts (a) and (b) of his question No. 1044, on the 19th March, 1946.

(c) I am not aware of any such cases.

(d) Yes, some persons have been so promoted to officiate temporarily, as it was not possible to secure more efficient men to fill the posts which had to be filled to try and clear the arrears.

(e) Because they did not hold during the intervening period the posts carrying the higher pay and discharge the duties pertaining to those posts.

NEW SCALES OF PAY FOR OLD CLERKS IN INCOME-TAX OFFICE, SIND WHO WERE REVERTED AND THEN PROMOTED

183. *Seth Sukhdev : (a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member be pleased to state if it is a fact that on introduction of the new scales of pay from the 1st January, 1945, the salaries of the old clerks in the Income-tax Offices in Sind and Baluchistan who were reverted and subsequently promoted were re-fixed on the new scales?

(b) If the reply to part (a) is in the affirmative, why were their salaries fixed at a lower stage than their juniors, in spite of their longer service in higher grades?

(c) Is the Honourable Member aware that on introduction of new posts of Upper Division Clerks in Sind and Baluchistan, senior persons, though performing more important duties, are drawing less salaries than their juniors doing less important duties? If so, why?

(d) Do Government propose to afford relief to the affected staff?

Sir John Sheehy: (a) Yes.

(b) This happened in some individual cases under the ordinary application of the rules, because they did not have a substantive right to the higher scale of pay, but when the hardship was brought to the notice of Government special orders to remove it were issued.

- (c) I am not aware of any such cases
(d) Does not arise

IMPROVEMENT AND MARKETING OF BETEL-NUTS

184. *Sri A. Menon : (a) Will the Honourable the Finance Member be pleased to state what grant was allotted for the purpose of financing measures designed to improve the production and marketing of betel-nuts for 1946-47? And what is the amount spent so far for the purpose?

(b) Were any applications for help received from duly constituted Co-operative Societies or other recognised bodies of betel-nut growers of the Malabar District received by Government? Was any help given to them?

(c) Do Government propose to call for a report from the Madras Government on the working of the above Society or Societies, and if the report are favourable, to tender them and before the betel-nut season is over?

Sr John Sheehy: The question should have been addressed to the Secretary of the Agriculture Department. It has accordingly been transferred to the list of questions for the 11th November 1946 when it will be answered by the Secretary of the Agriculture Department.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE SARGENT REPORT

185. *Mr. Madandhari Singh : Will the Honourable Member for Education be pleased to lay on the table of the House a comprehensive statement indicating the action that has been taken or is proposed to be taken on the principal recommendations of the Sargent Report?

The Honourable Sri C. Rajagopalachari: A fairly comprehensive statement is laid on the table of the House.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

statement indicating the action that has been taken or is proposed to be taken on the principal recommendations of the Report of the Central Advisory Board of Education (Sargent Report) on Post War Educational Development in India

The Report of the Central Advisory Board of Education on Post War Educational Development in India popularly called the Sargent Report was published in January 1944. In October 1945 the Government of India accepted generally, the principles and the objects of the Report.

The decision of the Government of India was conveyed to the Provincial Governments and they were asked to prepare their educational development plans in the light of the main recommendations of the Central Advisory Board of Education. All the Provincial Governments with the exception of that of N.W.F.P. have now prepared their first five year programme of educational expansion. The Centrally Administered Areas and the Central Government have also prepared their five year plans, which are complementary to the plans prepared by the Provinces. This entire programme proposed involves a total expenditure of Rs. 125 crores approximately. The schemes are being examined by this Government with a view to according their final approval. Some of the plans received from the Provincial Governments are still tentative but their finalised plans are expected very shortly.

The Provincial Governments have been requested to embark forthwith on schemes selected out of the Five-Year Plans, which are of an urgent character. As far as Education is concerned, schemes regarding higher technical education, the training of teachers and educational facilities for ex-servicemen received high priority. These schemes have been examined by the Government of India and those found suitable have been sanctioned for immediate execution.

In the first quinquennium a reasonable provision has been made in the Provincial and Central Plans towards the following essential requirements—

1. Universal Compulsory and free basic (Primary and Middle) education for all boys and girls between the ages of 6-14.—The Provincial and Central schemes of basic education cater both for boys and girls except in Sind and N.W.F.P. whose plans have not yet been finalised. Bihar, Orissa, Madras, the United Provinces and the Centrally Administered Areas have agreed to provide for compulsory basic (primary and middle) education in due course for the entire age-group of 6-14, the remaining Provincial Governments have not made it clear if it is their objective to cater for the entire age-group 6-14 though they have made provision for the age-group 6-11 in the first instance. The rate of progress is—determined by the availability of trained teachers. The total expenditure proposed in the Provincial plans on basic (primary and middle) education, including indirect expenditure on the training of teachers, inspection, school meals, amounts to Rs 56.95 crores (Rs 20.52 crores capital and Rs 36.43 crores recurring) which is about 58 per cent of the total expenditure on Provincial education schemes. The total expenditure on basic (primary and middle) education during the quinquennium in Central areas will approximate to Rs 1.9 crores (Capital Rs 1.14 crores, recurring Rs .79 crores).

Most Provinces have also agreed that the education to be imparted at earlier stages, would be through the medium of creative activities.

2 Technical and Commercial Education—The Government of India have initiated a scheme in co-operation with the Provincial Governments under which they are sending approximately 500 scholars each year abroad for higher technical training and scientific research. It would cost the Central Government approximately Rs 3.60 crores over the five year period. An All-India Council for Technical Education has already been set up to make a survey of the needs of the country as a whole and recommend ways and means to meet her urgent requirements. The Provinces have made the following additional provision in the five-year period:

(1) Establishment of 160 new Institutions (105 Junior Technical and Vocational Schools, 35 Technical High Schools, 16 Polytechnics and 4 Engineering Colleges.)

(2) Expansion and reorganisation of 32 Junior Technical Institutions, 12 Technical High Schools and 10 Engineering Colleges.

The total capital expenditure for the above schemes will amount to Rs 7.1 crores and the recurring expenditure in the five year period will total to Rs 4.43 crores and the ultimate recurring expenditure per year will be about 2.14 crores. While the Provincial plans propose generally to improve facilities for turning semi-skilled and skilled craftsmen, foremen and chargemen and some engineers, the training of high grade engineers and technologists (designers, planners, research workers, production experts, etc.) to take up positions of trust and responsibility in industry will be provided by the two proposed Central Higher Technological Institutions each with an annual output of 1,000 engineers and technologists costing 3 crores in capital and 46 crores annually in recurring expenditure. The Indian Institute of Science, Bangalore, and the Delhi Polytechnic will also be strengthened considerably. These four institutions together with other Provincial colleges will ensure an annual output of about 4,000 engineers and technologists in the quinquennium. It is also proposed to set up a Technical Teachers' Training College to train teachers for Technical High Schools and Senior Technical Institutions. The Central schemes are expected to cost about Rs 8.48 crores in capital and Rs 2.96 crores total recurring expenditure over five years and with an ultimate recurring expenditure of Rs 1.06 crores per year.

The Provincial and Central schemes for the five year period on technical education will involve an expenditure of about Rs 23 crores (capital Rs 16 crores and recurring Rs 7 crores).

3 Adult Education—The expenditure proposed by Provincial Governments on Adult Education in the first quinquennium is Rs 2.10 crores which is about 22 per cent of the total expenditure on all provincial education schemes.

4 University Education and Research—It is proposed to spend approximately Rs 2.54 crores on the three Universities (Delhi Rs 1.14 crores, Aligarh Rs 70 lakhs and Benares Rs 70 lakhs) during the quinquennium to strengthen the Universities and bring them upto the standard prevalent in other educationally advanced countries. Benares and Aligarh Universities will be assisted to set up a Medical College each to teach up to the degree standard. Provincial Governments in their development plans have made some provision for strengthening the provincial universities. They propose to spend approximately Rs 5.24 crores in the next quinquennium.

The National Institute of Sciences will advise the Government of India on all scientific matters. It is also contemplated to give substantial grant in aid to all India research Institutes which are in a position to promote higher scientific research and it is proposed to spend about Rs 75 lakhs for promotion of scientific research in educational institutions in the quinquennium.

Other Educational Schemes—The Five-Year Plans also include a reasonable provision for strengthening secondary education with a view to meeting the requirements of professional and technical colleges, for the training of teachers and for the improvement of the health of the school child. Special attention has been paid to women's education to make up for the present deficiency.

The Department of Education of the Government of India have also prepared a number of schemes which have been approved by the Co-ordination Committee of the Cabinet. It is proposed to start a post graduate Training College for men and women, a Training College for Physical Education and to reorganize the present Lady Irwin College for Domestic Science, by next year in Delhi. A grant has been paid to Visva-Bharati for training of teachers on the lines recommended by the Board and a grant is being paid for the same purpose to Jamia Millia Islamia, Delhi, where a scheme for training of teachers has already started. A proposal for reorganising the Marri College of Hindustani Music, Lucknow on an All India basis is also under consideration in the Department of Education.

CONTROL ON CAPITAL ISSUES.

†186. *Mr. Vadlal Lalubhai : Will the Honourable the Finance Member be pleased to explain the necessity of continuing the control on Capital Issues even now when the war has ended ?

Mr. K. G. Ambegaokar. The control is being continued as offering a first instalment of a National Investment Policy designed to secure a balanced investment of the country's resources in industry, agriculture and the social services .

INDIAN TROOPS IN IRAN

187. *Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad : Will the Defence Secretary be pleased to state:

(a) if it is a fact that both Congress and Muslim League have been demanding that Indian troops should not be sent abroad ,

(b) if it is a fact that the Interim Government gave its consent for sending the Indian troops to Iran , and

(c) whether Government propose to take steps to see the withdrawal of all the troops ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: (a) Yes, Sir

(b) No orders for sending troops to Iran were passed by the present Government, in fact, there are no Indian troops in that country

(c) Steps are being taken for the progressive withdrawal of Indian troops abroad

Khan Mohammad Yamin Khan: Does the Honourable Member know that a convention was started in 1938 in which the then Viceroy agreed that no Indian troops would be sent outside India except with the consent and after consultation with the Party Leaders in this House?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: Yes, Sir This question referred particularly to the despatch of troops to Iran If you permit me, Sir, I am prepared to answer the question now raised in a general way Khan Mohammad Yamin Khan: When the convention is in existence, why there are any troops outside India and how is it that these troops have been sent away?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: A statement was made on the floor of the House that in so far as considerations of time and secrecy permit the Government will consult the Legislature before Indian troops are sent overseas for purposes not connected with the defence of India

Mr. Manu Subedar: Will the Honourable Defence Secretary or the Honourable Defence Member take an opportunity sometime during this session to make a clear statement to this House on the constitutional disabilities of India in regard to military matters generally and particularly in regard to the despatch and withdrawal of Indian troops from abroad?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: We will examine the suggestion

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: Will the Honourable Member explain the position? In one part of his answer he says there are no Indian troops in Iran, and in another part he says that steps are being taken for the progressive withdrawal of Indian troops from abroad.

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: Part (b) of the question referred to the despatch of troops to Iran, whereas part (c) is in general terms, whether Government propose to take steps to see the withdrawal of all the troops This we understood to imply that it referred not only to troops in Iran, but in other places.

†Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent.

TRAINING OF INDIAN PERSONNEL FOR THE ARMED FORCES

188. *Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad : (a) Will the Defence Secretary please lay on the table of the House a statement about the steps which he is contemplating to take for the training of Indian Personnel for Army, Navy and Air forces ?

(b) Will the training for the three categories of the fighting forces be common or separate ?

(c) How many Indians are competent to take the command of brigade and regiments ?

(d) What is the policy of the Government of India in appointing foreigners non-Britishers and non-Indians for the defence of India ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja. (a) and (b) Officers.—The intention of Government is that on the opening of the National War Academy the majority of officers will start their training together at the institution. On completion of their Academy course they will be graded commissions and thereafter training in all three Services will be continuous throughout an officer's career. It will consist partly of training in units and partly of courses of instruction at various schools. All three Services have established in India Service schools for various specialised training. Training is normally put to each Service but there are from time to time joint inter-Service exercises and inter-Service training problems are co-ordinated by an inter-Service committee. In Pakistan all training is carried out in India and from Indian resources, except in the case of a few highly specialised officers who still have to go to the United Kingdom.

Other Ranks.—All training of ratings and other ranks, both basic and specialised training, is given in this country, although occasionally ratings from the Royal Indian Navy are sent overseas for more specialised duties not previously undertaken by the R.I.N., e.g., on manning duties. But the same principle is followed for other ranks as for officers in that training is continuous in units and specialists are deputed from time to time to specialist schools.

(c) So far, in accordance with the normal machinery, seven Indians have been accepted as suitable for command of brigades or sub-divisions, and 82 for command of regiments or battalions.

(d) The policy of the Government of India is not to appoint any foreigners except as Advisers or in technical jobs.

Shri Sri Prakasa. With reference to part (a), will the Honourable Member kindly let us know what training is given to Vice-Chancellors of Indian Universities before they are conferred the title of Lieutenant-Colonel ? Are the Government also satisfied with the manner in which they put on the ill-fitting uniforms ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja. I am not sure whether this derision is deserved by the Vice-Chancellors. I suggest that this supplementary question does not arise out of this question.

Shri Sri Prakasa. This part (a) of the question refers to the training of Indian Personnel for Army, Navy and Air forces ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja. This 'Indian Personnel', we take it as meaning personnel in the defence services and not non-official gentlemen.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad. May I suggest that if my Honourable friend is so anxious he can take these titles ? But I wish to ask.

Mr. President. No more question on this point.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi. May I know, out of seven Brigadiers, how many belong to each section of the population of this country ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja. I am afraid I must ask for notice of that question.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee. With reference to part (a) may I know whether it is the intention of the Government to close down the academy in Dehra Dun after the new Academy has been established ?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: Government have not yet received the report of the National War Academy Committee. So far as one can see at present it is the intention, that on the establishment of the National War Academy that we envisage the academy at Dehra Dun will be probably converted into a feeder school.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Is there any truth in the rumour that the National War Academy is going to be shifted from Poona to the North?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: The Government have not yet received the report of the National War Academy Committee and they have not yet come to any final decision on this question.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Is it finally decided to establish this National War Academy at Poona?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: That is the tentative decision of the Government.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. O. Chatterjee: In reply to the supplementary question asked by me, may I ask further whether the Honourable Member considers that one training academy whether at Poona or elsewhere would be sufficient for the needs of training officers in all the three branches of the armed service for so vast a country as India?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: Sir, that was prominently the question which was referred to the committee for advice by Government and when the report is received by Government, I have no doubt that the question will be re-examined finally.

Sardar Mangal Singh: May I have an assurance that at least this report will not be treated as secret?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: No, Sir the report will be made public.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Will this House be given an opportunity to discuss the report?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: If the House so desires, Government will certainly have no objection, but I thought it would suffice if the report were first placed before the Defence Consultative Committee which is a Committee of this House.

We have, however received a message from our Agent-General in Washington this morning to say that the new procedure will not apply to wheat which will continue to be purchased by the Department of Agriculture as before. The other parts of the question do not, therefore, arise.

Seth Govind Das: Is only wheat going to be imported from the United States or any other grain also?

Mr. B. R. Sen: No, Sir. At present wheat is purchased by the Department of Agriculture of the United States for the countries to which that wheat is allotted. This news item stated that for all grains the importers from the United States would have to go to the market and not the Department of Agriculture.

ELECTION OF A MEMBER TO STANDING ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRIES AND SUPPLIES

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai (Member for Industries and Supplies) Sir, I beg to move

"That this Assembly do proceed to elect, in such manner as the Honourable the President may direct, one non-official member to serve on the Standing Advisory Committee to advise on subjects with which the Department of Industries and Supplies is concerned, during the unexpired portion of the current financial year, vice Shaikh Rafiuddin Ahmad Siddique resigned."

Mr. President: The question is

"That this Assembly do proceed to elect, in such manner as the Honourable the President may direct, one non-official member to serve on the Standing Advisory Committee to advise on subjects with which the Department of Industries and Supplies is concerned, during the unexpired portion of the current financial year, vice Shaikh Rafiuddin Ahmad Siddique resigned."

The motion was adopted.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO DEFENCE CONSULTATIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. G. S. Bhalja (Secretary, Defence Department) Sir, I beg to move

"That this Assembly do proceed to elect, in such manner as the Honourable the President may direct, three non-official members to serve on the Defence Consultative Committee, vice Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan, Mr. M. Asaf Ali, now members of the Cabinet and Shree Sarat Chandra Bose, resigned."

Mr. President: Motion moved.

"That this Assembly do proceed to elect, in such manner as the Honourable the President may direct, three non-official members to serve on the Defence Consultative Committee, vice Mr. Liaquat Ali Khan, Mr. M. Asaf Ali, now members of the Cabinet and Shree Sarat Chandra Bose, resigned."

Prof. N. G. Banga (Guntur cum Nellore Non-Muhammadian Rural) Sir, I should like to know how often the Defence Consultative Committee has met since the House adjourned last session and what work it transacted. I thought we were given an understanding by the department concerned that a short summary of their proceedings would be circulated among the Members of the House and I do not know whether any such summary has been at all circulated.

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: Sir, I was advised that on this motion I should not make any statement and that is why I did not think it worth while taking the time of the House. But as my Honourable friend wants to have details I shall gladly give them. After the last Committee was elected by this House two meetings were held, one on the 8th March 1946, and the other on the 12th and 13th April 1946. The meeting of the 8th March 1946 discussed the Royal Indian Navy mutinies. On the 12th and 13th April 1946 among the items discussed were the future officering of the defence services of India, the future of Vice-roy's Commissioned Officers, policy regarding the retention of Gurkha units in the post war forces, the progress of demobilisation in the three services, purchase of cruisers for the Royal Indian Navy, the Women's Auxiliary Corps (India)—organisation during the war and future policy after the war, and the progress made by the Indian National War Academy Committee.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer (Bombay Southern Division Muhammadan Rural) Sir, may I take it that there was no meeting of this Committee held in the last six months since April? If so, is there no matter of urgency and importance to be placed before it, in view of so many problems arising in regard to the post war army in India? Why was no meeting held in six months?

Mr. G. S. Bhalja: Our intention is to call a meeting at the earliest possible date. But, as the House is aware, three vacancies have arisen, and in respect of the Members of the Upper House the election is to be held for the year 1946-47 as soon as that House meets. Members of that House elected on the last occasion have ceased to be members of the Committee, and it was not considered desirable to proceed with a Committee on which there was no representation of the other House and which three Members of this House would not be able to attend.

Mr. President: The question is

"That this Assembly do proceed to elect, in such manner as the Honourable the President may direct, three non-official members to serve on the Defence Consultative Committee, vice Mr. Laquatt Ali Khan, Mr. M. Asaf Ali now members of the Cabinet and Shree Sarat Chandra Bose resigned."

The motion was adopted.

Mr. President: I have to inform Honourable Members that for the purpose of election of one Member to the Standing Advisory Committee for the Department of Industries and Supplies and three Members to the Defence Consultative Committee, the Notice Office will be open to receive nominations upto 12 Noon on Wednesday, the 6th November and that the elections if necessary will be held on Friday, the 8th November. The elections, which will be conducted in accordance with the Regulations for the holding of elections by means of the single transferable vote, will be held in the Assistant Secretary's room in the Council House, between the hours of 10.30 A.M. and 1 P.M.

MOTION RE FOOD SITUATION

Mr. B. R. Sen (Secretary, Food Department) Sir, I beg to move

"That the food situation in India be taken into consideration "

It has been the practice in the past on a motion of this character for the mover to make a statement reviewing the position in India as a whole, and indicating the measures which Government have taken or propose to take in dealing with it. On this occasion the House will no doubt like to have that statement not from me but from the Honourable the Food Member, Dr Rajendra Prasad. I shall not therefore take up the time of the House except to say that at a later stage, since the Honourable the Food Member will not have the time to reply at a later stage, I should be prepared to deal with any points which arise in the course of the debate and on which information is asked for or on which clarification of Government policy is required. Sir, I move

Mr. President: Motion moved

"That the food situation in India be taken into consideration "

I have received one amendment in connection with this motion. I would prefer that the amendment is also moved at this stage, so that the House may be in possession of the original proposition as well as the amendment

Mr. O. P. Lawson (Bengal European) Sir, I beg to move

"That at the end of the original motion, the following be added, namely

'and that the particular attention of the Government be directed to the matter of losses in storage' "

Mr. President: Amendment moved

"That at the end of the original motion, the following be added, namely

'and that the particular attention of the Government be directed to the matter of losses in storage' "

The Honourable Dr. Rajendra Prasad (Food Member). During the last session of the Assembly the question was debated at great length. This was in February 1946. Since then the situation has not improved, except for the fact that the monsoon which has just ended has on the whole been more or less favourable. It is therefore necessary for me to explain to the House the way in which we have managed to deal with the situation during the last seven or eight months.

It will be recollected that it was pointed out during the debate in February, that we anticipated on account of the failure of the monsoon last year and the failure of winter rains, a deficit of something like seven million tons in kharif and rabi crops. The question with which the Government was faced was how to meet this big deficit. It was a big deficit because if you take into consideration the amount of grain that is produced normally in the year it came to something like 10 per cent, and in a country which lives more or less from hand to mouth a deficit of 10 per cent is likely to upset most calculations. We had, therefore, to take steps from the very beginning to meet the situation with which the country was faced. The Government decided upon three courses for meeting the situation. The first was to get imports of foodgrains from foreign countries. Great stress was laid, I find from the reports of the proceedings, on this aspect of the question. Many members impressed upon the Government the desirability of getting as much imports as they could from foreign countries. The second line which the Government adopted was to husband the resources within the country and this involved two different modes: one was to procure what we could within the country, and the second was to so distribute what we had as to make the deficit spread over the whole country as far as possible, and to let people share the difficulties as equitably as they could. The third line was to step up production as far as that could be done. I will take each one of these and will place before the House the extent to which we have succeeded in the steps that we have taken.

Coming first to the question of imports from foreign countries, as soon as we discovered that we were faced with a large deficit, the Government of India deputed the Food Secretary, Sir Robert Hutchings to London and to America. This happened before the debate took place in February last. During the course of the debate, it was announced that a larger delegation under the then Food Member would proceed. The Food Member did not go but the delegation did proceed under Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar, and it was fortunate enough in securing the support of the British Government. Subsequently ex-President Hoover of America visited this country and sometime later another American Mission under Dr. Schultz went round the country visiting particularly the areas which were most affected. Our delegation pressed the case for India before the International Organisation which deals with the food question and as a result we secured some allocation. Our demand was for 4 million tons. Unfortunately, we never got any firm promise with regard to the amount that we could get and since then what has happened has been more or less a sort of ad hoc arrangement, programmes made from month to month for giving us wheat from America, Australia, Canada, and other countries, and rice from the countries of South East Asia like Burma, Siam, Indo-China, etc. We have been pressing the International Food Emergency Commission for larger and larger allotments to us but situated as the world is today, it has not been possible for that Commission to give us all that we wanted. We know that the whole world today is in short-supply with regard to foodstuff and it is the function of that body to pool whatever surpluses are available from the producing countries and to distribute them to the countries which are in need. India has had her share, but unfortunately it has not been what we wanted or what we needed. With all our efforts we have so far been able to import into this country 1,484,740 tons of wheat and other grains and rice 247,500 tons, a total of 1,782,000 and odd tons. This is as against our demand of 4 million tons. We have been therefore faced with this other difficulty of meeting this big deficit which arises on account of our not getting what we wanted from foreign countries. We are indeed grateful to those foreign countries which have come to our help, and we cannot blame them if they are unable to give us more. But at the same time, we cannot help asking them to give us more, and I hope that in the months which are still difficult for us we shall be able to get something more. But it is not only the difficulty of allocation or difficulty of availability which has stood in our way. There have been other difficulties also which have made imports more and more difficult. We know that in the United States of America the shipping strike has been going on for a pretty long time. That has affected our imports to a considerable extent from that country. We expected something like 224,000 tons of wheat from America in the month of September. All that we have been able to get has been no more than 110,000 tons, thus causing a short-fall of no less than 114,000 tons. We find that it was not possible to rely only upon America, Canada and Australia, although they have given us quite a good deal of wheat. We felt that it was necessary to look to other sources also, and therefore we turned to countries which are just west to our own. We have got supplies from Iran, Turkey, Abyssinia and Egypt and these are of the following order. They come in all to 89,210 tons, of wheat, barley and millets from these countries. We have got from Brazil 28,904 tons of rice. The House is aware that recently Diwan Chaman Lal, a Member of this House, whom we are all pleased to see back today, was deputed on a mission to Argentine to secure permits for the export of 300,000 tons of maize which we purchased in that country. I am sure the House will be pleased to convey to him its thanks for the skill with which he conducted the negotiations and congratulations on the way he has achieved success in that effort. Out of the 300,000 tons of maize which we have secured in that country, 150,904 tons have already arrived and we are hoping that the balance will be coming within the next two months or so. In order to secure these supplies, we have had to be constantly in touch with the International Emergency Food Council through our representative and with the various countries from which we have these imports. In some of these we have got our permanent representative in others our representatives go as necessity arises.

Turning now to the countries on the South East from which we have got our rice, I find that we have secured about 247,500 tons from these countries. Burma is of course the largest exporter of rice for us. We had expected a large quantity from Siam, but unfortunately that has not materialized and we have not secured more than 17,000 tons from there. We were offered very kindly by the Indonesian Government some 500,000 tons of paddy, and we had hoped that we would be able to get that paddy, which would have gone a great way towards solving our difficulties. Unfortunately in Indonesia as in Siam, difficulties have arisen which have made exports difficult. In both these countries, there were internal difficulties of transport. The Government of India offered to meet these difficulties by supplying locomotives, wagons and trucks to Siam and trucks and coal to Indonesia. The position in Indonesia was complicated by the fact that political considerations came in and military reasons stood for sometime in the way of the supply of our trucks. Fortunately all these difficulties have now been removed and a special officer has been deputed by the Government of India to Indonesia to expedite the despatch of rice or paddy from that country. On account of these difficulties our import from Indonesia has not been more than 16,000 tons so far out of the 500,000 tons promised. We are hoping that with the changed circumstances and with the facilities which we have provided in the shape of trucks and coal we may be able to import larger quantities hereafter. As I have stated the total imports thus far from foreign countries come to something like 1,700,000 tons.

One question with regard to these imports is that of price. We have been paying rather heavily for these imports. We expect in the course of the current year to make purchases to the extent of 91 crores worth of foodgrains from these countries. The prices at which these arrive in this country and the prices prevalent in this country differ to some extent and we felt that if we allowed these imports to be sold at the cost price, it might have the effect of upsetting the price structure in this country and the Government therefore decided to make good the difference between the price at which these were purchased and the price prevalent in this country for the same quality of grain. This would come to something like 15½ crores in the course of the year. This is what we have done by way of imports.

Turning to the second line of attack, we had first to procure what we could get in this country. Procurement is not easy, when you have not a factory or a number of factories from which you have to procure, but when you have got innumerable cultivators spread over this vast country, from each one of whom you have to collect what is surplus to his own needs. There is the further difficulty which has arisen on account of lack of statistics and information with regard to individual producers. In provinces where the ryotwari system prevails there is undoubtedly an agency which keeps account of individual cultivators and which can give us more or less reliable data with regard to what is produced by each cultivator. In the areas where the permanent settlement prevails no such agency exists, because there the Government is concerned only with getting its land revenue, which is paid by the middleman, the zamindar. The difficulty in procuring therefore has been greater in the case of the permanently settled areas than in the ryotwari areas.

The system that has been followed by the various Provincial Governments with regard to procurement has also not been uniform. In some places practically monopoly procurement prevails. This Government has been in favour of monopoly procurement in all provinces but it has taken time for all the provinces to fall in line with the policy of the Central Government. On the opening day of the session a statement was laid on the table of the House which showed the methods pursued in the different provinces. Today I can say that almost in every province there is or is going to be more or less monopoly procurement and we expect that with the next crop the procurement will be on a larger scale than has been possible in the past. But even as it is procurement has given us a very considerable quantity of grain within this country. We have been able to secure by procurement 8,800,000 tons as against 1,700,000 tons of imports. We have procured within the country itself more than double what we have been able to import from other countries.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad (United Provinces Southern Divisions, Muhammadan Rural): Is not procurement less than ten per cent of the produce?

The Honourable Dr. Rajendra Prasad: I think it will be less than ten per cent but it has to be taken into consideration that the procurement can only be with respect to the surplus which is actually marketed. Every cultivator naturally wishes to retain for his own use what he needs.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: (Guntur cum Nellore Non-Muhammadan Rural) Should they also be starved?

The Honourable Dr. Rajendra Prasad: And his needs are in the first place, food for his family and in the second place wages for his labourers to the extent they are paid in kind and not in cash and thirdly, seeds.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: and the village requirements also.

The Honourable Dr. Rajendra Prasad: After making allowances for these three kinds of requirements of the cultivator, whatever remains as surplus is placed in the market. It has been found that the surplus which is marketed ordinarily is 40 per cent of the total produce. That has been arrived at by our statisticians and if we take into consideration the total produce at 60 million tons and deduct from that what is retained by the cultivator we get 24 million tons for sale. And out of these 24 million tons we have secured nearly [Dr Rajendra Prasad] 4 million tons, 38 million tons to be accurate. That I think is about 1/6th or 16 per cent of the surplus which was available for procurement. Honourable Members will be able to understand and appreciate the importance of this procurement when they take into consideration the amount procured in the provinces which have been worst affected. We have to deal with two kinds of Provinces and two kinds of crops. There are certain crops in certain provinces which are grown for the market. In other provinces the crop is grown for consumption and only a part of it which is surplus is really marketed. Take, for example, the case of the Punjab or Sind. Some part of the wheat grown there is for sale. Whereas in a province like Bihar, if anything is sold, it is sold more or less under necessity. There is hardly any grain produced for sale.

So, in taking into consideration what amount the governments have been able to procure, we have to consider whether in any particular province the procurement has been of grain which was produced for sale, or of grain which was disposed of by the cultivator as surplus to his needs. Naturally what was produced for sale came in larger quantity and in greater proportion to the market for sale. What was produced for consumption naturally came in a much smaller proportion to the market for sale, and therefore when we see the figures for procurement for Punjab or Sind, we see a higher percentage of procurement, when we come to a province like Madras, which has been hard hit during the last year and which is still very badly hit at the present moment we find that there the procurement has been very, very successful from this point of view, there we find that during these difficult times through which we have been passing Madras has been able to procure something like 94 per cent of what might be a surplus with individual cultivators, and it is because of this policy of rigid procurement and rigid distribution that that province has so far been able to scrape through.

I do not know if it will be able in future to do so and to what extent it will be able to do so, but it is because of this rigorous procurement and rigorous distribution that it has succeeded.

The province that comes next in this respect is the province of Bombay. There, the procurement has been something in the neighbourhood of 60 per cent. Amongst other provinces I might mention the case of the United Provinces, which in previous years depended upon the Government of India for meeting its deficit to a considerable extent, but after the last rabi crop the ministry there carried out a rigorous policy of procurement, with the result that we have been free from anxiety for that province for these months, and any responsibility that we had in respect of that province has for the time being been taken off our hands. I do not say that that will be so in the future, but that is the present position.

On the other hand coming to a province like Bengal or Bihar, procurement has been rather poor, and as I have explained one of the reasons has been the difficulty in getting statistics and data on which to proceed. As I have submitted, the procurement policy of the government has so far been more or less un-uniform. Now that we are going to have monopoly procurement, I am hoping that in the coming season we shall have larger quantities at the disposal of the government which could be taken to places in need from places where there is a surplus.

The second line of attack in regard to internal husbanding of resources has been an attempt to make distribution as fair and equitable as possible. For that purpose, we have had to extend rationing and controlled distribution. Rationing has been extended very considerably. In 1943 there were few towns that were rationed, and the population that was rationed was not a very large one. There were only 2 million people rationed in March 1943. By March 1944, the number of rationed people had increased to 26 millions. In March 1945 it was 52 millions, and in March 1946 it was 100 millions. Today it is 150 millions. This does not mean that this entire population of 150 millions is completely rationed in the sense that each member has got a card. A certain number—one-third—is completely rationed in that sense, the remaining two-thirds of about 100 millions are under controlled distribution. The areas which are completely rationed are mostly urban areas but there are some rural areas also. The areas which are under controlled distribution are mostly rural, and these belong largely to the southern presidency of Bombay and Madras and to Bengal, and the states of Mysore, Travancore and Cochin. For meeting the demand of this rationed and controlled population, we have been distributing from government sources and through government agencies something like 650,000 tons of foodgrains a month, roughly, and this has continued for the last 8 or 9 months up to now.

Members will recollect the figure of imports and the figure of internal procurement which I mentioned a little earlier in my speech. The two come to something between 55 and 56 lakhs tons. We have been distributing 650,000 tons a month during the last 8 or 9 months. We started with a ration of 12 oz. per head. To begin with the ration was of the quality of grain which was consumed ordinarily in a particular locality, but as the position became tighter we had to alter that, particularly in regard to rice, the position became so tight that even in a presidency like Madras and in the states of Travancore and Cochin, where the ordinary food of the people is rice, we had to give them only wheat; we had to give them not even wheat but also maize, and the House can easily imagine the difficulty of people who have never been used to wheat or maize, having to take to them under stress of hard times. But they have taken to them because they could not get anything better and we had most reluctantly to acquiesce in giving them wheat and even maize because we had nothing else to give them. In Northern India, where rice is eaten as in Bihar, there also wheat had to be given but no portion of Northern India is so unfamiliar with wheat or maize as the South is. Therefore while inconvenience must have been caused to these parts too, it could not be anything compared to what the people in the South had to suffer.

The system of rationing has further had to be modified and altered to suit the exigencies of time by dividing the ration of 12 ounces into separate kinds of grains, a portion to be given in wheat, a portion to be given in rice, a portion to be given even in maize or millets and I imagine—in fact, I fear that in some cases people have not taken their full ration because they could not use the full ration on account of the unsuitability of the grain which was given to them. That has happened, I believe, in many cases. Then the question arises how is it that with this small import, when we demanded four million tons and we got only 1.7 million tons, how is it that we have been able to survive these months. I have to point out that various factors have contributed to this. Our people are used to suffering and they know how to face such difficulties because they have done it in the past and India is more or less in a chronic position of underfeeding. That has been one of the causes contributory to our success in gaining this time which we have so far succeeded in gaining. Another cause which must have contributed to it is that from the very beginning the Food Department has been anxious to maintain two things—to maintain the ration at 12 ounces by splitting up the ration into various kinds of grains and thereby making some sort of a saving although indirectly.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: You give a stuff which cannot be eaten. That is true of Madras.

The Honourable Dr. Rajendra Prasad: In the second place we have always been anxious to maintain a stock for about six weeks in every province. It has been a most difficult job to maintain this stock of 6 weeks. We have some how or other managed so far but the month of November opens with a stock of 4 weeks or even less in some of the provinces. I can say this that the most difficult months we have now almost passed through. We now have the crops in sight of us. The monsoon has been fair. There have been floods in some parts like Assam, Bengal and Bihar which have damaged the crop considerably and we have had short rain also as in parts of the Punjab and Sind but on the whole I must say that nature has been kind to us this year and we are hoping to get a more or less normal crop this season. With this crop in sight I venture to hope that our people will not starve and what is more I have found that the provinces and the people have shown a grit in facing this difficulty which is really admirable. Some time ago after taking office I made an appeal to the people to save as much as they could. It has gladdened my heart to see that I have received thousands of letters and telegrams from thousands of people offering to save part of their ration. Some people have even starved and they have started fasting clubs to be able to save their own food for the sake of others. All this taken in terms of maunds and tons may not come to very much but that shows the spirit in which the people have taken it and the spirit in which they have been facing this calamity. I have also appealed to provinces which have any surplus to spare over and above what they declared earlier in the year to make such surpluses available and I am glad and grateful that Orissa, the Central Provinces, and the Punjab have given us larger quantities than they promised to give in the beginning. This extra surplus which we have received from these provinces comes to something like 45 thousand tons which is not an inconsiderable amount when we are so hard pressed. All these factors have enabled us to pass through the most difficult times. We are not yet out of the wood. November and December are still difficult months, although we have a crop standing in front of us, we still need imports of wheat from foreign countries because during the past months we have had to borrow wheat from some provinces to meet the urgent necessities of other provinces and they were able to give us even at risk of their own supplies going short. We are pledged to repay the loan within December and I hope that we shall be able to get this import of wheat which will enable us to repay the loan. We cannot get any more wheat in this country because the wheat crop will not be ready before the spring next year and our loan of wheat has to be repaid out of imports from foreign countries. It is for this reason that I have said that we are not yet out of the wood but the chances are my hopes are, that with people determined to get over the present difficulties we shall be able to get over them.

One question which has been raised and which has caused us considerable anxiety is the question of prices. That has two aspects. The first aspect relates to the price which we have to pay to the cultivator for the grain that he gives us. The second relates to the price at which the grain is to be sold by the Government to the consumer. Both these go together and I shall deal with them in such a way as to place before the House the views which we have taken in regard to them.

Taking first the question of prices at which we have to place our food supply to the consumer, I know that throughout the country there is control of prices of the principal foodgrains. There is widespread complaint that in some places, the grain that is actually sold in the market is not sold at the control price, and I have myself come across cases where the difference between the control price and the price at which the grain is actually sold is very very great. It is as much as twice or two and a half times the control price. This is due undoubtedly to various causes—we may call it black marketing—but if you analyse what that actually means, we shall see that various factors enter into this. It was suggested to me in my own province, which I recently visited, that if inter-district restriction of movement of foodgrains is removed, it would be possible to bring down the sale prices of foodgrains within the district. It is very often assumed that the man who actually sells to the consumer is the really guilty person in respect of these high exorbitant prices. As a matter of fact, the retailer is only the last link in the chain through which the grain has passed from the producer to the consumer. Every link that has preceded this last link has had its share in some way or other in putting up the price. It may sometimes be the greed of the various men through whose hands the grain has passed. It may be—probably it is in some cases—corruption on the part of those who are entrusted with the control of these prices which is responsible for adding to them.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: And the Police also, every constable!

The Honourable Dr. Rajendra Prasad: I think I have included that. We cannot forget that whenever anything is smuggled, the smuggler runs a certain risk and the profits which he charges naturally are commensurate with the risk which he runs. So what with the greed of the middle man, what with the corruption of those who have to supervise the sales and what with this additional profit which is to be charged as a result of smuggling, the price of which the retailer sells to the consumer becomes very exorbitant.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: How many stages this wheat passes through? Can we not minimise them?

The Honourable Dr. Rajendra Prasad: It is difficult for me to say that. It depends upon the particular locality, it depends also upon the agency which is employed. And the idea of monopoly procurement has been to eliminate as far as possible these intermediary stages in the matter of procurement. Similarly, wherever it has been possible to have co-operative societies for the sale of goods that has been encouraged, and wherever it will be found possible to eliminate these stages, the Government will undoubtedly give consideration to any suggestion and eliminate these intermediaries who add to the price. The question of the control of retail prices is really in the hands of the Local Governments. We from the Central Government can only advise and can only give indications but we cannot really control the retail shop and the retail shop-keeper. I do not mean to suggest that the Provincial Governments are not mindful of their duty. They are, I am sure, doing their best to control these things, but the force of circumstances and the force of events have made their efforts unfruitful or, at any rate, not as fruitful as one would wish them to be.

Turning, then, to the other aspect of the price—the price at which the grain has to be procured from the producer, we have to take into consideration two classes of people. We must give the producer a reasonable profit for his labour, we must, at the same time, attend also to the position of the consumer, who should not be made to pay more than he can bear. And in fixing the price for foodgrains particularly, one has to be very careful to see that the interests of neither are sacrificed. I know there is a great demand for raising prices of foodgrains, and it has been suggested that the cultivator does not get what is his due and the prices of agricultural produce should be enhanced to give him a reasonable and fair return. On the other hand, the number of consumers is not negligible. Among the consumers we have a class of people who do not produce at all. There is another class which produces only a part of its requirements and for the rest it has to depend upon what is produced by others. In the first class that is to say, those who are only consumers and not producers at all, we may include the townspeople all over the country, we may include the entire population which is engaged on labour in factories, and we may include also a certain proportion of labour which is employed in agriculture but which has got no land of its own. A certain proportion of the land labour is paid in kind, but the modern tendency—I should say the up-to-date tendency—is to pay in cash and not in kind, and that is partly also because of the high prices which grain fetches. The cultivator does not want to part with his grain, if he can help it, for paying wages to his labourers. Then, there is another class which is employed in various kinds of sundry services and which is also a non-producing class. If you take all these classes together, you will find that a pretty good proportion of the entire population is a non-producing class.

An Honourable Member: All the M.L.A.'s are non-producing class.

The Honourable Dr. Rajendra Prasad: I do not know if all but certainly most. There is no means of ascertaining the exact proportion of the population which is purely a consumer population as distinguished from the producer.

[Dr Rajendra Prasad]

population. But there are some data from which we can draw an inference. I stated earlier that about 40 per cent of the total produce is marketed by the producers. I take it roughly that that indicates the quantity which is surplus to his own needs, that is to say, for feeding himself and his family, for wages which he pays to his labourers for seed etc. If 40 per cent is actually sold by the producer I take it that roughly speaking 40 per cent of the population is fed with that 40 per cent of the produce, and we add to that a certain quantity which used to be imported from abroad that would also go to feed the non-producing population. I take it therefore that 40 per cent or a little more than 40 per cent of the population consists of people who do not produce, but who purchase their food requirements from the market. In fixing the price, we have to consider the interest of this 40 per cent or more of the population as against 60 per cent or so of the population, which is the producing population.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: The average income is three or four times that of the agriculturist's income.

The Honourable Dr. Rajendra Prasad: If we consider the prices from the point of view of both these classes of our population, we cannot help coming to the conclusion that the price should be fixed in such a way as to be fair both to the consumer class and the producer class. Now, Sir, in arriving at the correct figure of prices, we have also to take into consideration other things to which I will presently refer. What would be the fair price that we should pay? The claim for higher prices arises because it is said that the prices of other consumer goods which the cultivator or the producer consumes have risen and therefore he has to spend more and he should accordingly get more for what he produces. If we look at the index figures of various kinds of commodities we find that in the case of agricultural produce, the rise has been higher than in the case of other consumer goods. Taking 1939, August as the base, I find that in September 1946, the price of rice has risen 322 per cent, wheat 377 per cent, sugar, 169 per cent, cotton, 192 per cent, jute 227 per cent, linseed 357 per cent.

Sardar Mangal Singh (East Punjab Sikh): What about cattle? It has risen five times.

The Honourable Dr. Rajendra Prasad: I have not got the figures.

Now coming to the materials which go into consumption.

Mr. President: The House will now adjourn for Lunch. The Honourable Member can continue his speech after Lunch.

The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly reassembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. President (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

The Honourable Dr. Rajendra Prasad: Sir, when the House rose for Lunch I was giving the index figures of various commodities—agricultural and other—which go into the daily consumption of the people. The year 1938-39 (August) is taken as the base. The index figures in September 1946 were: Rice—322, wheat—373, sugar—169, cotton—192, jute—227, linseed—357, iron—117, hides and skins—200, kerosene—151, cotton manufactures—261, cement—182, galvanised corrugated sheets—229. It would appear from these figures that agricultural products, particularly foodstuffs, have got the highest index figure, much higher than those for manufactured articles like cloth, kerosene and other things which are largely used by agriculturists. If we took these figures into consideration it would seem that there is no case for raising the price of foodstuffs in this country.

There is another test which might be applied. If, as a matter of fact, agriculture does not pay and does not give a fair return to the producer one would expect one of three things. The producer might reduce production, that is to say, give up the land which he cultivates or allow it to remain uncultivated, secondly, he might divert the land from food crops to other crops which might bring him more money, thirdly, he might reduce his cultivation by less intensive effort in cultivation and thereby reduce the actual produce. I am not aware of any evidence that any of these things has happened in the case of agriculture. We know as a matter of fact that land instead of going out of cultivation has actually increased in extent, and within the last five or six years there has been considerable increase in the acreage under cultivation. We have no evidence of land going to cash crops from food crops. On the other hand, within the last five or six years a considerable quantity of land which was under cotton cultivation has been diverted to food crops. Some amount of land which was under cane cultivation has also been diverted to food crops, and there is no evidence whatsoever that I know to show that there is less intensive cultivation on the part of the agriculturist. Taking this test into consideration I think there is no case made out for increase of agricultural prices. I know there is a great demand for increasing the prices of agricultural produce. Some of the provincial Governments under pressure from the producing section have recommended increases in the price of agricultural produce. The position of the Food Department is very unenviable when it has to sit tight in spite of demands made by Provincial Governments, in spite of demands made by the producing section of the community. My position is particularly difficult. On the one hand I have to look to the interest of the agriculturist, and on the other I cannot ignore or neglect the consumer. I have no personal experience myself, but sometimes I feel I am in the position of a man with two wives, both of whom he loves equally, but does not know whom to neglect or ignore. As Member in charge of Agriculture my interest is to see that the agriculturist gets as high a price as he can, on the other hand as Food Member my duty is to see that the consumer gets food as cheap as possible. Between the two you can easily imagine what my position must be. I can give this assurance that it is only under a compelling sense of duty that I have to stick to the prices which have been fixed and not to agree to an increase at the present moment. But I may say this also that Government have not been content to leave things to their own decision alone. We have known that for some time past a sub-committee which was appointed some time ago under the chairmanship of Sir T. V. Krishnamachari has been considering the question of prices of agricultural produce. That committee has submitted its report only recently—just a few days ago—and we have not had time to consider that report. But it is a comprehensive report which deals with all aspects of the question, and Honourable Members must have noticed from the press summary that has been published that one of the recommendations is to have a sort of independent and semi-judicial body to deal with the question of prices. We shall consider the report of that committee as soon as it is available in a printed form which I hope will be very soon.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: Will the report be circulated to the Members of the House or those who desire to have it?

The Honourable Dr. Rajendra Prasad: I think we shall follow the usual practice. If such reports have been previously circulated to Honourable Members, this also will be circulated.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: It depends on the generosity of the Honourable Member.

The Honourable Dr. Rajendra Prasad: I did not know that, if that is so, the Honourable Member can count upon it.

So as soon as this report is available in a printed form Government will give their most earnest consideration to it, and I can give the House this assurance that if as a result of the consideration of that report a review of the price policy is called for, I shall not be deterred from taking action simply because the Food Department has been wedded so long to a particular policy. And I shall give effect to such decision as on a consideration of that report Government feel it is necessary to arrive at for the benefit of the agriculturist and the consumer alike

I will now come to the third line of attack on the shortage of food, and that is to increase our production in this country. In a sense that is the most important aspect of it. We have seen that we cannot depend upon imports from foreign countries or meeting our requirements. It is not possible either to continue to depend upon such imports. India is an agricultural country and it is really a matter of shame for us if we have to go to other countries for the one thing which is supposed to be our main source and our speciality, namely, agriculture. It would therefore be in the fitness of things that Government should take all possible steps to increase the production in this country. It is the function of the Department of Agriculture to find out ways and means for increasing production, and I will mention briefly the programme which the Department of Agriculture has before it. It is no new programme which we are going to adopt today. In fact it was explained at some length in the course of the debate last time. The objective that we have set before ourselves is two-fold. We must produce enough to meet the present emergency, and, secondly, we must produce enough not only to meet the present emergency on present scale of consumption but also to improve the standard of living of our people, and to find enough food which will be sufficient in quantity and also in quality. The problem, therefore, has to be attacked in two ways. We are contemplating one long range programme and another short range programme. As a long range programme, there are several multi-purpose projects which are in contemplation of the Government. I might mention the project of the Damodar river which flowing through Bihar passes into Bengal and causes immense havoc in Bengal whenever it is in flood. The idea is to train the river and to so control it as to make the water, which is now a source of havoc and devastation into a source of profit to the agriculturist and at the same time to create power which will be available for industrial and other purposes cheaply. Other projects relate to the river Mahanadi which is in Orissa, to the river Kosi which is in Bihar, which is the source of immense devastation not only of wealth but also of human life because in its trail there is always malaria. There are similar other projects of this nature. But these projects are likely to take time to be planned and to be executed and we cannot depend upon them for meeting our immediate requirements. But we can certainly depend upon them for giving us more food to enable us to improve the standard of living of our people.

The other kind of projects are short term projects which are intended to bring quick results and they have become popularly known as Grow More Food projects. The target which we are fixing before us is to produce four million tons food in the next five years, i.e. by 1952. Four million tons will be sufficient, as we think, to meet the present requirements at the present scale of consumption and also the requirement of the increasing population which we shall have by 1952. It is not expected that this four million tons will in any way be able to improve the standard of living or the standard of consumption. It can only meet the demand at the present scale of consumption and no more, but for the present we are aiming at that and leaving it to the multi-purpose projects to supply us more for the other purpose. It may seem to be a very ambitious project to be able to produce four million tons, but I submit, Sir, that if we take into consideration the quantity of land on which this has to be grown it is not much. After all it amounts to an addition of four million tons to 60 million tons that we are producing now, or 1/15th of what is being produced today. If the area which produces 15 maunds to-day, can be made to produce an additional maund, we shall have reached the target of four million tons assuming that every unit which produces 15 maunds today begins to produce 16 maunds by 1952. Looking at the same problem from another point of view, we know that the average acreage of land under food crops for five years is something like 240 million acres, or 24 crore acres and we shall have to raise this 4 million tons from this 24 crore acres, which means really that we shall have to produce about half a maund extra per acre which is not a very big demand to make. So whether we look at it from the point of view of producing one maund extra for every fifteen maunds that is produced today or from the point of view of producing half a maund extra per acre, the figure is not such as to terrify us. But I know that averages are sometimes very deceptive, and I am sure it will require much determination and much application to secure this additional four million tons.

With this object in view the Government have decided to give aid to agriculturists for various purposes. One of the needs of agriculture is irrigation and it is proposed to help small irrigation works like surface wells, tubewells, digging tanks, repairing or digging channels, putting up small equipment for drawing water from rivers. In this way we expect that we should be able to add considerably to the present production by means of additional irrigation.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: Have you got any planned scheme for using sub-soil water?

The Honourable Dr. Rajendra Prasad: We are working out a plan. As a matter of fact that plan is being prepared and I am thinking of sending the Agricultural Development Commissioner to the various provinces to fix up targets year by year in consultation with the provinces and to see to it that in course of time these targets are reached.

The first thing is about irrigation. The second item is to supply manure at relatively low cost to the cultivators to enable them to increase their production. The third thing is to give them seeds of improved variety so that a larger yield may be secured.

We also propose to help in bringing under cultivation land which on account of deep-rooted grass is not fit for cultivation today by helping parties to cultivate them with tractors and such other mechanical implements.

It is hoped that with all these methods of encouragement it will be possible to raise the four million tons.

The Government propose to bear a part of the cost of these schemes. The idea is that if a particular scheme costs Rs. 100 Rs. 50 should be made available by the party benefitted by it. Of the balance of Rs. 50, Rs. 25 should be contributed by the Provincial Government and Rs. 25 by the Central Government. This applies to all provinces except the three smaller provinces of the North-West Frontier Province, Orissa and Assam, in the case of each of which the share of the Central Government would be two-thirds of the half, which is payable by the Provincial and Central Governments jointly. We hope that with this contribution there will be sufficient encouragement given to the cultivators to come forward to increase their produce.

When I was thinking of raising the question of prices of foodgrains, I felt we would be much more profitably employed in thinking out means of raising the produce per acre and increasing the income of the cultivator in that way and also solving the food problem incidentally. I know that the cultivator in the past has suffered on account of economic forces over which he had no control. But today that is not the position. Today the cultivator is getting what in fairness he can claim, and I hope that with these schemes for increasing the production, it will be possible for him to increase his income from his land cultivation.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: Have you done anything for manuring? What practical steps have Government taken?

The Honourable Dr. Rajendra Prasad: As regards manuring there are two kinds of manure which can be used. There is the farmyard manure which can be used in the form of compost and chemical fertilizers which are produced in factories. Propaganda is being carried on and practical demonstrations are given for producing compost from the refuse matter which ordinarily goes into waste and very often is the cause of ill-health and insanitation.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: And burnt also?

The Honourable Dr. Rajendra Prasad: Yes, in many places cow-dung which can be converted into fertilizers is burnt, but that is complained by the question of finding alternative fuel for the poor man. My own belief is that if all that is wasted today could be utilized by way of manure, the cultivator would be able to get more than what he would lose by way of fuel from his cow-dung.

Seth Govind Das (Central Provinces Hindi Divisions Non-Muhammadan) What about bullocks? This is a very knotty problem?

The Honourable Dr. Rajendra Prasad: That is another question and a very much larger question. I was thinking and confining my remarks this afternoon to the question of cereals and grains and not to go into the question of other kinds of foodstuffs.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: "Grow More Food" comes under that!

The Honourable Dr. Rajendra Prasad: I would have liked to deal with more milk, better bullocks, if I had time, because that is a subject in which I personally feel very very interested. But at the present moment I will content myself with saying that the Agricultural Department, apart from what it is doing for increasing the production of cereals by the methods which I have just indicated, is not negligent of improving the breed of cattle and cattle husbandry generally. We have in hand many schemes for improving the yield of milk from our cows and also for improving the breed of cattle. It must be recognised that in a country like India, which is largely agricultural and where agriculture depends upon bullocks very considerably, we cannot afford to have cattle which will give either only milk or cattle which can be used only for draught purposes. We need cattle which will serve the double purpose of giving good quantity of milk and doing a great deal of hard work with the plough, etc. The object of the Department is to encourage these breeds and considerable experiment has been made in this respect and we are trying to help provide dairies and goshalas to improve the breed of cattle and to improve the milk yield of the cows.

I have not dealt with other items of food because I thought I had better concentrate on the question of cereals and foodgrains in this debate. But I may give this assurance that none of these has been neglected and we are conscious and we are anxious to improve the yield of milk, to improve the yield of ghee, to improve the quality of the bullocks, to increase the quantity of sugar which may be made available to our people.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: The prices have gone up!

The Honourable Dr. Rajendra Prasad: In regard to the price of sugar, we find that in the case of sugarcane, land has been diverted from sugarcane to other crops which were found to be more profitable than sugarcane and consequently the quantity of sugar that was produced had gone down. One of the tests as I said for judging whether prices of a particular commodity should be raised or not is whether in actual practice the production of that particular article is coming down or is increasing or is stationary. If it is increasing or stationary, there is hardly any case for increasing the price. If it is going down, then the question does arise and we will have to consider the extent to which the increase should be given. We find in the case of sugar that in the last few years land under sugarcane had gone down by more than 13 per cent. We also found that the quantity of sugar produced during the last few years compared with what was produced in the last season, had gone down in the last season by over 13 per cent. It was for this very reason that we have cut down the allocation of sugar to the various provinces by 13 per cent and unless that previous figure is reached it will not be possible to increase the allocation to the provinces. The long range programme has contemplated the establishment of a number of factories,—I forget the figure (I think it is about 24 or 25, but I am not sure). They are fresh factories to be established in the provinces to enable the quantity of sugar produced to be raised from about 9.48 lakh tons, which was raised last year to about 15 lakh tons. We have to wait and see when all these factories begin to function and when we are able to get this larger supply of sugar.

As I have said, the most important thing in the matter of food is to increase our production of foodgrains and every thing that we require for our food purposes and this cannot be achieved by the Government of India or for that matter by the Provincial Governments without the co-operation of the cultivators, the producers, the labourers and also the general public and we require also scientific knowledge for this purpose. We are anxious that this question of shortage of food should be solved and solved within the quickest possible time. The only way in which it can be solved is to produce more and more within this country. We cannot, as I said, depend on imports. Imports are indispensable. Imports also mean something to be given in exchange. Up to now India has been an exporting country and the exports used largely to be agricultural produce and raw materials. It was in exchange for these that we used to get manufactured goods from other countries. If now we have to import not only manufactured goods but also our foodstuffs from foreign countries, I do not know how we shall be able to pay for them. As I said earlier, this year we are importing more than 91 crores worth of foodgrains. If we go on at this rate, I doubt whether we shall be able to go along for any length of time over this path. And therefore the only course left to us is to increase our production and for that purpose the co-operation of all is required. The Government is willing to give aid to the extent I have just indicated. The Provincial Governments are expected to pay their share of the aid and we hope that the cultivators will see that it is after all profitable to invest the 50 per cent of the cost. I was calculating the cost of an ordinary well in my province, say at about Rs 600 or 700. The share of the agriculturist in that would be about Rs 300 or 350. One well is expected to irrigate about six acres and if on each acre we get, say one or two maunds extra, which is what is expected to be produced as the result of the improved irrigation, then the agriculturist would get something like 12 maunds extra and we can easily see that in a few years time (say in four or five years time) he will have earned enough from this extra produce to cover what he has invested.

Babu Ram Narayan Singh (Chota Nagpur Division Non-Muhammadan)
But there is no money with the cultivator to invest

The Honourable Dr. Rajendra Prasad: We have suggested to the Provincial Governments and some Provinces are prepared to advance the share of the agriculturist also and to realise it in course of time, in instalments, something in the nature of a ta'aruf loan. So the difficulty which my friend apprehends may not arise but of course I cannot promise that it will be done in every case, because it means, in that case, that the Governments—both Provincial and Central—will have to find practically the entire amount of the cost. I cannot promise that that can be done in every case and I believe that there will be many cases in which it would not be necessary for the Government to invest the entire amount. There will be many cultivators forthcoming who will invest either their own money or money raised otherwise in the hope that they will be able to recover what they have invested within four or five years at the most. I therefore feel that although we have passed through the present crisis and although we may not soon expect to be in the brightness of full sunshine, we have just begun to see streaks of light and I am hoping that we shall be able to pass through the darkness of this crisis and emerge into full sunshine very soon. We cannot ignore the perennial problem of shortage of food in this country and the only way to meet that is to increase our own production. I appeal to all members of this House, to all the Governments concerned, to all cultivators, to all producers, to scientists and technicians both in Government service, as well as elsewhere outside Government service, to help in this work of increasing our food and saving the country from having to face this kind of calamity again.

Mr. O. P. Lawson: Sir, I would like to begin by thanking the Honourable Member for Food and Agriculture for a most excellent summing up of the situation, which I have listened to with the greatest attention. Not only has he produced a masterly survey of the situation which faces the country but he has also faced up to problems in a way which we find extremely heartening. I would like to say that we here view with particular pleasure the fact that Dr Rajendra Prasad now presides over the two departments of Food and Agriculture, which we have always considered to be complimentary and his speech this morning and this afternoon has shown very clearly that these two departments are now in extremely capable hands.

Sir, I know that he will not object if I also pay a tribute to his department which we here feel has done an extremely fine job of work over these past few years. I would like to say at once that the rationing that this Department has introduced, a rationing which embraces, as Dr Rajendra Prasad told us, 150 million people, is an organisation which is second to none in the world. It rations more people than are rationed in any country in the world, and I feel that to the Food Department is due its meed of praise for having carried this organisation into effect. I would like to say also that we are much impressed by the flexibility of this department, its ability to distribute the food in accordance with the varying demands of the country, switching from north to south with bewildering rapidity, and third, but by no means last, I would like to congratulate the department on realising the need in which the country stood of imports and on getting down at once to securing those imports which were so greatly needed and which indeed the world owes to India for this is no parochial problem, this is not a problem of feeding a single country, it is a problem of feeding one-fifth of the inhabitants of the world, and the rest of the world cannot deny its responsibility for that.

I would like to say that these three items seem to us to supply a very good reason for thanking the Food Department and paying them a tribute for their work, and as I have stated already, it is indeed a great pleasure to us to see them aligned with the department of agriculture as they properly should be under the leadership of Dr Rajendra Prasad.

Now, Sir, the difficulties that the Food Department have had to face have been considerable, a number of these difficulties are constitutional and it will be the work of many of my honourable friends in this house soon to see how those difficulties may be overcome. The Food Department is not paramount in its sphere, it relies upon provincial governments for carrying out its mandates. Indeed up to the present, it has not been in a position of power in the field of agriculture, upon which department it depends for its supplies. It has in fact been a distributing department, with the doubtful ability to say to the various provinces "Unless you do as we ask, we may be able to make things difficult for you." That is a situation which will need to be faced in the future, and the courage with which the Member for Food and Agriculture has faced up to the problems he has put before us leads us to hope that that problem also will be solved in the future.

Sir, I have moved an amendment to the main Resolution today which deals with storage and I have moved it in no spirit of criticism but more in the hope that in putting these various points before the House we may be able to do something to add a little more to the full efficiency which we hope will undoubtedly come. No one would suggest for one minute that any grain in any country can be stored without loss. It would be quite an impossible thing to happen, and indeed if we can do anything to save a few maunds here and a few maunds there, the speech of the Honourable Member has supplied us with every reason for doing so. He has for instance indicated that we are going to spend the enormous sum of Rs 91 crores on food. That is money paid out from India, going abroad. He has also indicated a figure of Rs 15½ crores in subsidies. Now, these are very big figures for a country with comparatively slender finances, and we now see that an enormous figure of 1,700,000 tons of foodgrains is coming from abroad—a figure which indeed is higher than I expected and must have covered a period of more than a year, but however that may be we now have the figure of 1,700,000 tons, an expenditure of Rs 91 crores, and subsidies of Rs 15½ crores—I say, save 50 per cent of your storage losses and you have that for nothing. That to me is an effective point. The country loses every year 3 million tons of foodgrains in storage. Save 50 per cent of that loss, and you have very nearly as much as your total imports for nothing or for a comparatively negligible cost, and of course saving all the money in subsidies too. That is why I have been impressed with the need for emphasising this necessity for proper grain storage. We shall never eliminate total loss in storage and I do not suppose there is a country in the world which could. But we can undoubtedly reduce those losses and I am sure that this is taking place. I asked a question on the subject some few days ago, and the Honourable Secretary for the Food Department gave us an idea of what was going on. I asked for certain figures—perhaps I asked for them a bit too early. This is not a matter which can be cleared up in a minute, and I do not expect it to be so cleared up, but provided we have it in mind, I think it should be a fruitful source of making up a little bit on our losses, and saving the money that we so greatly need.

Now, Sir, a memorandum has been issued by the department which I have also read with particular interest. I could wish that all Dr Rajendra Prasad told us could have been included in this memorandum, because to me it had one grave drawback. This memorandum of some 26 or more pages contains something like 20 pages of matter dealing with the question of food supply from abroad, the position of food organisations abroad, and I began to think, surely this is a bit too much. Surely the balance should be the other way round, surely there should be 20 pages about production in India and perhaps 6 or 7 pages about the situation abroad. That balance has been entirely rectified in my mind by the speech of the Honourable Member. He has put things back into the proper perspective. He has shown us that whatever we do with these organisations abroad, whatever we get from abroad, the problem of this country will be really to feed itself. What do we get from abroad? Supposing we get 1,700,000 tons—we need it, we cannot do without it. But against a production of 60 million tons, it falls in importance, and if we can increase the yields over and above this 60 millions, that is really what we are after. The questions in fact which I wanted to be answered and which were not answered in this memorandum but which have been largely dealt with, though not wholly dealt with, by the Honourable Member, are something like the following. What are we growing? Are we producing more than 60 million tons total, because working it out we need about 60 million tons to supply everybody in this country with a pound of cereals a day?

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras Ceded Districts and Chittoor Non-Muhammadan Rural) 65

Mr. C. P. Lawson: 65, thank you. Are we meeting the population increase? In other words, are we every year growing that amount of more food which the extra mouths will need. I would like to have known, for instance, how we were getting on with the programme of supplying improved seed which, I believe, before the war was utilised only to the extent of about 6 per cent. I wonder how much more is being used. Above all, I wondered what the increase in the yield per acre was coming to, whether we were beginning to show any results in that most important side, because however many more acres we can put under cultivation it is the yield per acre which is going to save this country. In due course if every cultivable acre in this country is put under the plough, a state of saturation will be achieved, but there is the most enormous room for improvement in the yield per acre and that is the whole prospect on which we must base our hopes.

Now, Sir, I would like to join the Honourable Member in paying a tribute to the work, which we have followed in the newspapers, of Diwan Chaman Lal in the Argentine. I am sure the House will be grateful to him for what he has done and I was more than heartened to hear that so great a proportion of this 800,000 tons had already been shipped. At the moment of course a thought also comes to my mind that that 300,000 tons is just about one-tenth of our total losses in storage. The figure is interesting just to mark the importance of my point. I also sincerely hope that the incredible confusion which appears now to exist in the jute market will not cause any trouble in that arrangement and perhaps later on in the debate we may hear a little more about that, because while one does not want to start unpleasant hares, I do sincerely hope that the jute situation will soon be settled. We understand, of course, that there was some per contra understanding. But to think that by just making a saving of one-tenth of our losses in storage we could make up all that Diwan Chaman Lall by his efforts has produced justifies the amendment that I have put before this House.

Now, Sir, I have said before that the Department of Food has to rely very largely on Provincial administrations for the working out of a lot of this programme, including its programme of storage. I understand from the figures supplied to me that the Government of India has produced something like storage for $2\frac{1}{2}$ million tons. Apart from that they have hired space for about another 8 million tons and I presume therefore that some $2\frac{1}{2}$ million tons are now accommodated in reasonably good storage conditions but I take it also that that 8 million tons of storage is to a large extent administered by the provinces and there of course is room for improvement. What are these godowns like? Are they full of rats, cockroaches and vermin of every type? I am sure, as the Honourable Member said, that Provincial Administrations do what they can to help but I also know the water tight compartments that Government produces when the demand for the provision of accommodation becomes an annoyance to the people who have to produce it. Then they are not perhaps so careful and we have a situation to be watched. I have in mind the situation in this particular city. Sometime ago when a railway strike was threatened it was thought wise to send some stocks of grain to Delhi. The stocks of grain arrived. They remained in station premises for a very long time. Then the rats and other pilferers began to take their toll. The rains began to come. Somebody said to the Chief Commissioner of Delhi, "You will have to requisition godowns to take this stock." I may as well inform this House that in the last six months in this city both derequisitioning and requisitioning have taken place. The Defence Department derequisitioned. The Chief Commissioner under the orders of the Civil Supplies Department requisitioned. I asked the other day for a statement of what requisitioning had been taking place and a list was laid on the table. I looked through the list. It was a list of only about 6 items which could easily have been read to the House. It was laid on the table and I noticed items like this—"godowns in Naya Bazaar, godowns behind the cloth market" and other items which did not make clear how many godowns there were and in what condition they were. Now, in reply to another question I was told that those stocks could not be moved even up to the Cantonments because of the extra cost of transport involved. I myself made an inquiry as to whether these stocks could be moved out to Ghaziabad where I knew there were a lot of godowns and movement to which was fairly easy. I was told that this could not be done because Ghaziabad was not in the Delhi province. These are the water tight compartments regarding which I complained. The godowns behind the Cloth market and in Naya Bazaar may not have been suitable. They may have been infested with every kind of vermin, but because of a few rupees to be spent in lorry charges or because Ghaziabad, 15 miles from Delhi, was over the borders of the Delhi Province, these stocks must go to godowns which I believe were never used for this purpose before and Lord knows what they contained before. Now, Sir, if that is happening in Delhi, it is probably happening in other places too and I emphasize the point because I think it is a thing in which we all can help. I daresay poking my nose into this matter was not particularly liked in certain quarters. But these are things in which we carry a responsibility for poking our noses and I think that much can be done to stop this kind of thing

Now, Sir, I am not going to take very much more of the time of the House because I have been raising these points now on this agriculture question here and in other place ad nauseam. I can see the Honourable Secretary, Food Department, getting that tired expression that he cannot help feeling when he hears repetition of the various points that have been put before him and before the Honourable Secretary, Agriculture Department, time and time again

I was glad to hear the Honourable Member for Food and Agriculture raise the point of food prices and we on this side have always stressed the necessity for the standardization of prices as soon as this may be done. The reasons are obvious. First of all, unless the cultivator can see ahead a good, sound price for his produce and knows just what those prices are going to yield him, a feeling of insecurity must be there and we could not be certain of our increase. There is another reason and this is that the price of food is, to my mind, a basic principle in the make-up of the nominal per capita income of the country. I think that the time is shortly coming when a review will have to be made of the per capita income in the country so as to judge just where we stand. I do not see, for instance, how we can possibly fix wage scales and so on—the work that is going on now under the Pay Commission—without just knowing what the per capita income of the country is. Clearly, if we start paying out more than we are taking in, we are in the direction of inflation, and, until food prices can be stabilised, I do not see how this review can be made. I feel that we are very largely working in the dark even over these food prices. The price for a commodity changes. Perhaps one year we get a good price for sugar-cane and another year an exceptionally good price for rice or wheat. Over the switch-round of crops this Central Government has no control and the Provinces can change whenever they like. This must be most disturbing and must upset the estimates of what is coming in and what is to be distributed. It is equally certain that until something is done, we shall never know what the cultivator is eating and, as we are told that 60 per cent of the available food is eaten by the agricultural classes, it is important to know just what they are eating.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Has anybody worried about it?

Mr. C. P. Lawson: My friend Prof. Ranga says 'Has anybody worried about it?' Well, Sir, I worry about it a good deal and I have studied the subject a good deal because of that.

Babu Ram Narayan Singh: Thank you.

Mr. C. P. Lawson: My friend, I am glad, expresses the thanks, which I thought would undoubtedly come from Prof. Ranga.

Then, Sir, there is another point that perhaps I might make before I finish. I was a little bit misled by some of the figures produced by the Honourable Member and, in particular, the figure of 3,800,000 tons procurement. If that represents the procurement portion for the consuming part of the population (I gathered from him that 60 per cent was eaten by the agricultural part of the population and 40 per cent by the non-agricultural portion) we have 3,800,000 tons against that 40 per cent. Perhaps later in the debate the Honourable Member or Honourable Secretary will tell us how the rest gets to the consumer.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: It is sold voluntarily.

Mr. C. P. Lawson: By that, I suppose, the Honourable Member means sold outside, the method of compulsory procurement.

Prof. N. G. Ranga: Without the intervention of these procurers.

Mr. President: Order, Order. Let the Honourable Member proceed.

Mr. C. P. Lawson: I look to a possibly more authoritative but no less vocal source for information later in the debate.

Now, Sir, there are a number of other points that I have been frequently pressing. There is the point of fish which I hope will continue to expand in procurement, which I have mentioned on other occasions and which I do not propose to deal with just now. Certain figures were given us the other day. I do not think they indicate very much material advance. I am certain the Department has the most excellent plans, but one day we shall certainly want to see the result of this plan. I asked a question as to what the Department was doing to attract capital to fisheries and I think an Honourable Member from Bengal interjected: "Would the Government say that they would do everything possible to keep this business out of the hands of the capitalists?" One of my reasons for wishing to see the distribution of this trade over a wider field is that certainly in the province from which I come the very danger to which that Honourable Member refers has occurred. In fact, I do not suppose there is a more strongly protected ring than the fishery ring in Calcutta and I would very much like to see that net thrown a bit wider—not the fisherman's net but the capitalist's net. I do not mind if the Provincial Governments feel it worth their while to interest themselves in the project too.

Well, Sir, I do not propose to occupy the House any more. I would like to conclude once again by thanking Dr. Rajendra Prasad for a most able survey which we on this side greatly appreciate.

Mr. M. R. Masani (Bombay City Non-Muhammadan Urban) Mr. President, Sir, Mr. Lawson followed me in the last debate in this House in February and was good enough to lend support to the plea I made then for concentration on imports into this country and I am glad to follow him on this occasion and lend my support to the case he has made out for concentrated attention on the not negligible problem of storage and the elimination of waste that takes place in this country. I would also like to join Mr. Lawson in welcoming the lucid, fair and frank exposition of the problem that has come from our esteemed friend, the Honourable Member for Food and Agriculture. Since we last discussed this problem, two major developments have taken place. One is for the good, and the other is for the bad. The unfortunate development has been the further deterioration in the food situation revealed in the data made available to us. When we discussed this problem last, we were considering the reduction of the ration in this country from a per capita ration of 1 lb. of cereal to that of 12 oz. and we accepted that reduction under protest. We were then assured that the 12 oz. ration was an irreducible minimum and that it was very temporary in its operation, and that the 1 lb. ration would be restored very soon, within a matter of a few months.

Recently, when the Honourable Member delivered his broadcast, he had to indicate a further deterioration in the position and he drew our attention to the fact that, if things could not be improved, even the 12 oz. ration would be in danger. The train of disappointments, the series of disappointments in regard to imports, has undoubtedly been primarily responsible for this further deterioration in our position.

The change for the better is the change that has come over this House and the political change that has come over this country with the establishment of this Interim Government representing various elements in our political life and including the two major political Parties. When we met last we all expressed the hope that if only a National Government could be established in office, then the very bleak situation that faced us then would not continue. I was among those who claimed that it was only a National Government that could speak with authority and on terms of equality in the society of nations and claim for India that justice which was due to it. We also claimed, Sir, that a political government representing the major political parties would be able to exercise moral authority over the provincial Governments and make the surplus provinces in this country play their proper part in contributing towards the national economy.

in regard to food. We also felt and expressed the hope from all sides of the House that only a National government could deal effectively with anti-social elements and anti-social practices. Unless, Sir, this political change for the better can check the deterioration that has taken place, those hopes that we expressed would be belied. If this Government representing the people of this country cannot check this deterioration and can, not only maintain the 12 oz ration which it has today, but also look forward within a period of months to restoring the 1 lb ration, which in itself is inadequate for human needs, then, Sir, I feel that the challenge to the existence of this National government will not have been met.

I am therefore very gratified to see the note of determination that runs right through the speech of the Honourable Member and the guarded optimism that he has expressed that, unless further ill-luck dogs our steps, we shall be able to surmount the immediate crisis that faces us in the remaining two months of this year. It is in the spirit of strengthening that note of determination and optimism, that this country can meet this food problem, both in the short range and long range problem, that I would like respectfully to make a few submissions to the House and to the Honourable the Food Member and to suggest certain detailed ways and means by which the food crisis can be tidied over.

When I moved an amendment in the Food Debate in February last, which this House accepted, I stressed the importance of imports—added imports from overseas. Today, I would like to shift the emphasis to what can be done in this country because, in spite of all the efforts that have been made, in spite of the success of the mission to the Argentine and the removal of difficulties in the case of Indonesia, it is quite clear that—so far as the next seven or eight weeks are concerned—very little relief may be expected from overseas. If anything comes, that will certainly help us. But it is becoming more and more evident that we shall have to rely on our own resources if we are going to maintain our present ration and turn the corner from 1946 to 1947. It has been said that if only we can get additional imports in the next two months of the order of 515,000 tons of food grains, we can avoid any major breakdown of our system. It is obvious also that only a fraction of this can be expected from overseas and that therefore, we shall have to look, for the major part of these 515,000 tons, to our own country.

That brings us to a choice between two alternatives: either we can hope for nothing better than what has already been obtained from the surplus provinces and from such stocks as might be hidden in all the provinces of this country, in which case we would have to resort to the expedient of cutting the ration again, or we must bridge the gap of 515,000 tons. I was very happy to see today that the Honourable Member did not even refer to the grim possibility of a further cut in the ration, and I would like to express to him the gratitude of the House that he has found it possible to avoid such a recourse because only six weeks ago, in the course of his broadcast, he found it necessary in the public interest to sound a note of warning when he said "It may become necessary, and people must be prepared, for a further reduction in the rationing of cereals, particularly rice." If his silence today means that we can now lay that possibility aside and look forward at least to the maintenance of the present ration and to its ultimate increase in the not too distant future, then I am sure it is a matter for gratification today for us. But just in case any lurking thought may continue, not in his mind, but in any other minds among those who wield authority in this particular regard, I would like Sir, to make the submission that the needs of the case do not justify recourse to any further cut in the ration.

The present ration, as we all know, has a caloric value of anything between 1,000 and 1,200 calories a day. One of our delegates, who has just returned to this House today from the Copenhagen Food and Agriculture Conference, after taking part, along with the delegates of other countries, in fixing world targets, will tell you that at that Conference they fixed on a per capita ration of 2,600 calories. Yet, in our country today, we have ration of which it has been said that "it is so little that a man cannot live and so much that he cannot die" Is that a ration, Sir, which any Government can even contemplate reducing still further? A Member of the U S Food Mission, to which the Honourable Member referred, went back to America and said "If we mean by 'alive' a human being in full possession of his five senses, then the Indian people are not alive" It was very distressing for us to have read in the broadcast of the Honourable Member that the deterioration had gone so far that even that terrible expedient of reducing the basic subsistence of our people still further was not absolutely absent from his own mind, particularly when the Provincial Food Ministers' Conference passed a resolution on 10th August 1946, which was accepted, I understand, by the Government of India That resolution, Sir, is one which I am sure, if this House were to express itself in that formal way, would find ready acceptance It said

[Mr M R Masani]

"After carefully examining the over all picture of the food-grains position in India, this Conference is definitely of opinion that the present over all ration of 12 oz. is already inadequate and a further cut is bound to have disastrous consequences on the health and life of the people Also, such a course will defeat its very object by slowing down procurement, shaking public confidence and causing general confusion and unrest This Conference, speaking in the name of 400 million Indians calls upon the Government of India, and regards it as their clear duty, to redouble their efforts to secure additional supplies from overseas without which a breakdown on a wide scale cannot be avoided"

There is another important reason why this flow of food from the producing to the consuming end needs to be kept going without interruption Just before coming up to Delhi, I had the misfortune to live in a part of Bombay where the Water Department of the Bombay Municipality lowered the pressure Being on a hill-part of the city, I found that the storage tanks got easily emptied But the point is that even when the storage tanks filled up later when the pressure was increased, the water did not automatically begin to flow again A vacuum had been created, air had rushed in and it required plumbing operations before the water which was in the tank above could reach the tap and the showers in the bath-room The flow of food supplies is rather of the same kind It goes through a pipe line and the pipe line has got to be kept filled all the time if it is not to dry up The position we in the South face is that on 1st November we have one month's stocks in the Provinces of Bombay and Madras, and at the present rate, on 1st December, we shall have, I believe, only 18 days' stocks In other words, our storage tanks will start getting emptied, and if these storage tanks are not replenished in time from those parts of the country where surpluses exist, it will not be possible, when the new crop comes on the market or new supplies become available, to push these stocks down the pipe line which by that time will have gone dry and where a vacuum will have been created It is therefore highly essential that an uninterrupted flow of foodstuffs down this pipe line should continue at whatever cost

My Honourable Friend, and any one else who takes a grim view of the picture, would then be entitled to ask "How is this gap of five lakhs of tons, which we expected from overseas and which may not materialise, to be made good?" I am not suggesting for a moment that the demand for imports should not be kept going insistently We have every right, at every international gathering, to point out that the present position, where the people of more favoured countries can eat a diet of three thousand calories or more while leaving the people of India to make shift with a thousand-calorie diet, is inconsistent with the ideal of One World which is professed by the Democracies of the world We also have the right to point out that if people in other far away countries take the view that they are not interested in our plight, they are not doing their duty in the comity of nations But if we turn the search-light inwards, I think we shall also find that there are parts of this country which might not illegitimately be accused of showing a similar indifference to the plight of those who are less fortunately situated than themselves

I come to the question of provincial surpluses And here I should like to say that I wish I could share the satisfaction which the Honourable Member has expressed at the progress made with the scheme of compulsory procurement in the various provinces of this country. I noticed that the Honourable Member qualified his satisfaction by saying that one could "almost" say that most provinces had gone in or were going in, "more or less" in for monopoly procurement. That, Sir, is not satisfactory, because at the Food Ministers' Conference a Resolution moved by the delegate of the Punjab Government, Sardar Baldev Singh, was unanimously carried, and that resolution runs as follows

"This Conference is of opinion that the time has now come when in every Province and State, surplus or deficit, procurement of rice and wheat shall be by Government monopoly, and by compulsory levy wherever necessary, and possible. Where other cereals are important they too should be procured by similar Government monopoly. Only by such steps can the resources of this country be best mobilised."

Now, going through the note which was circulated by the Food Department to us a few days back, I find that this is not a situation which has by any means been achieved. It is true that progress has been made in the past few weeks, but I suggest that the progress is not commensurate with the gravity of our position. I understand—and I am prepared to be corrected by the Food Secretary when he replies to the debate—that in the Punjab, monopoly procurement exists for rice, but that for wheat it only applies to surplus districts of the province. I suggest that the next step forward, which should also be an immediate step, should be for the Punjab Government to bring in monopoly procurement not only in surplus districts but also to bring it into play in the case of individuals who may have surpluses but who live in deficit districts. So that, as in Bombay and Madras and other provinces, that individual surplus or the surplus of a particular farm can be brought into the market under Government control. Bihar and U P have gone in for a compulsory levy, but there one finds that the levy is rather light and the exemption limits are high and the incidence of that levy bears no comparison with what it does in more progressive provinces. And Bengal, I am afraid, cannot avoid the charge of having defaulted substantially because, while half the districts in that province are nominally under direct procurement, as far as we can ascertain, about 80 to 85 per cent of the total produce is still being left for collection to the Chief Purchasing Agents and is not being done departmentally, as it should be in any scheme of monopoly procurement. This is reflected in the figures of percentages of the amount procured of the marketable surplus to which my Honourable Friend referred this morning. Here are the figures. I am leaving aside the Punjab and Sind because, as the Honourable Member rightly pointed out, different considerations apply in their case, but as between the provinces which are of the same nature it will be found that there is a wide disparity in the percentages procured in various provinces. Madras obviously takes the prize because, in the case of rice it managed to procure 94 per cent of its total marketable surplus. Bombay came next with 68 per cent in rice and 81 per cent in wheat. And then we have a sudden drop to U P, which in the last figures available procured only 16 per cent of rice and 16 per cent of wheat, Bengal, which procured 19 per cent, and Bihar which procured only 11 per cent. The total, as the Honourable Member pointed out, of procured foodgrains is 3.8 million tons out of a marketable surplus of 24 million tons, which is about 15 per cent. I should like respectfully to suggest to the Honourable Member that this is not a percentage about which we can feel any satisfaction. We are talking about the marketable surplus and not the total produce, some of which the peasants would keep with themselves. There is no reason why in every province of this country the larger part of the marketable surplus should not be procured by the Provincial Governments as the provinces of Madras and Bombay have managed to do for themselves. The only hope, therefore, would appear to be that the provincial surpluses should be adequately drawn into the common pool and I should like to ask the Honourable Member, or the Food Secretary who will speak for him, whether the Government of India are satisfied, for instance, that a surplus province like the Punjab has done all it can and is doing all it can to part with supplies which can be made available in the next few weeks by way of a loan to tide over the deficit provinces whose ration would otherwise be in danger. Is it true, for instance, that while in the past the figures of production prepared by the Punjab Government have tallied with the figures of the sample survey prepared by the Imperial Council of Agricultural Research, in the case of the last crop the Punjab Government's figures are materially lower than the figure the sample surveys of the Imperial Council of Agricultural Research would show? If so, what is the view that the Central Government take of this disparity in the figures of yield? As I said, we have every right to quarrel with Americans and Russians and any others who cannot or do not adequately come to our rescue. But a pre-condition to our claims on them surely is that at least in India itself all the provinces and all the people are prepared to pool their own resources. Therefore, Sir, if imports cannot give us the five lakhs of which we are short in the next two months, surely a part at least of the five lakhs can yet be obtained by further loans from surplus provinces like the Punjab.

Another means of making up this gap would be to offer incentives to the peasants to come out with past stocks which they have not disclosed so far. I am not ignoring the considerations urged by the Honourable Member in resisting the raising of prices. That is an issue in itself into which I will not enter, perhaps my Honourable friend Prof Ranga and others may have something to say on that point! But assuming that the considerations pointed out by the Honourable Member against a rise in the price of foodgrains are sound and valid, even so, temporary inducements should not be out of the question, because the problem we are facing is one of life and death. And in that regard, I believe, an example has already been set by the Province of Madras which, I understand, in the month of May offered a bonus of one rupee per maund to cultivators who came forward with stocks. That amount I understand has been raised to Rs. 2 per maund. At the same time, no questions are asked as to where the foodgrains have come from, in other words immunity is given to a man who may or may not have put away the stocks for a rainy day. In any case, an incentive has been given to the cultivators to come forward with their reserve stocks and thus to keep the ration intact. I should be glad to know if the Government of India can not recommend to other provinces such a method of financial bonus to bring out stocks which most people assert lie hidden here and there throughout the country. I know that there will be the danger that the cultivator who has got the bonus once and has tasted that profit may feel he had better do the same thing again by putting away some food to stow with and produce it in case there is similar scarcity again. But those dangers have to be faced. I think the necessity of keeping our present ration intact is such a supreme necessity that it justifies us in taking a chance by offering bonuses of a like nature to those offered by the Government of Madras.

An alternative method would be to make available to the cultivator who comes forward immediately with foodgrains consumers goods on preferential terms. I believe in my own province of Bombay the Provincial Government has been considering, and probably has by now put into operation, some such incentive—that a cultivator who comes forward with a material stock of foodgrains would have easier access to cloth or to implements or to manure compared with another who may not do so. These are two possible ways in which an incentive can be given for the immediate production of stocks.

I wonder, Sir, these methods are not adequate to produce five lakhs of tons, though I believe that they should—with imports on one side provincial surpluses better mobilized and brought into play by way of loans on the other, and on the third hand incentives to the cultivators throughout the country to come forward with stocks which they may have spare. I should imagine that five lakhs should not be too much to expect out of these various sources.

[At this stage Mr President vacated the Chair which was occupied by Mr Deputy President (Khan Muhammad Yamin Khan)]

After all, five lakhs is less than one per cent of our total foodgrain production in a year, and if this Government has, as I believe it has, moral authority and political leadership over the masses of this country by reason of its representing the major political parties as well as other elements, then it should not be beyond the leadership of this Government to produce less than one per cent of our total annual produce. We are aware how at the present time, the people of Britain, faced with the necessity of building up their export trade, are doing without the essential comforts of life and seeing them shipped under their very noses to foreign countries so that Britain's export trade might be built up. They are going short of socks, shoes and other necessities of life, so that people abroad can buy although they have made them. If this national discipline can be enforced by the British Labour Government I feel that our National Government, faced with the possibility of starvation or breakdown of our rationing system can produce even better results in national discipline.

But I would say that, if all these methods fail, then there is one last expedient which I would like to place before this House and before the Honourable Member and that is to bring into force those principles of equitable distribution to which he referred in his speech this morning.

I understand in the City of Delhi, while a loaf of bread is on the ration, even today dinner loaves can be had off the ration. It is a small point, but it shows that even today the upper classes in this country are doing well for themselves at the expense of the masses. And to take the argument a little further, if I can eat fish, eggs, and chickens, if I can afford milk and a variety of vegetables and fruits, do I really need the same 12 ounce ration that a poor man does, for whom rice and wheat are his staple and practically his entire diet? My Honourable Friend made an appeal which has already produced some results in that direction. I remember reading in the papers in Bombay that within a few days of his broadcast a thousand people in Ahmedabad gave up their cereal ration for one week. That was a fine response, and we are glad to know that the Honourable Member has had evidence of similar responsiveness not only from Ahmedabad but various other parts of the country. In our own City of Bombay, the People's Provincial Food Council launched a campaign to induce the well-to-do classes to give up at least half, if not the whole of their cereal ration for a period of three months, and I am thankful to the Government of India for the support they gave us in the way of advertising space. But the result was that after two months of campaigning we were able to get 1200 people of the well-to-do or upper classes to give up their ration. It is a drop in the ocean, even so we should pay our tribute to those who gave up their ration as public spirited people. But the point is that in the City of Bombay itself, there are at least 10 000 motor car owners and thousands of club members. If the social conscience of our upper classes is not adequately developed to the needs of the situation, I wonder if there is any reason why our Government cannot enforce restrictions which will make that conscience come to life, and what I would like to suggest is that, if even any modification of the present ration were to become necessary, rather than make a flat cut of two or three ounces in the ration, a differential ration on an income basis needs to be considered first. I am told that is all very well for non-vegetarians, what about the poor vegetarians. I will not go in detail into the nutritional side of the question here, but I can assure Honourable Members who may have such fears that the kind of nutrition that cereals give, which is known as carbohydrate, can be adequately and easily replaced from other vegetables, fruits and nuts and that one does not need meat or fish to replace rice or wheat. There is a long list of foodstuffs with which you can replace your cereal ration. A pound of potatoes can replace your wheat ration and other substitutes which are manifold include gram, lentils, soya beans, sago, tapioca, macaroni, groundnuts, cashew nut, dry coconut, bananas, and plantains, raisins and dates, honey, sugarcane and jaggery. A reasonable quantity of some of these would make up for the cereal ration of 12 ounces for the day, particularly in the case of people who can also have milk and other milk and vegetable products to take. Therefore, if our upper classes do not respond in time to the call of the country, I for one would like to see Government consider the institution of a differential ration in the case of people who pay income-tax on incomes of more than Rs 5,000 a year. That is an arbitrary figure, details will need to be worked out. But it should not be beyond the administrative capacity to Government to draw a line between those who can do without cereals and those who cannot. In fact, if we go back in history we find that in the days of Ancient Iran there was a King named Tehmuras. Once during his reign, says a history book, a great famine swept over his kingdom. "Tehmuras introduced fasting as one of the measures of relief. He decreed that the rich and the well-to-do should take one meal a day, and give away the morning meal to the poor of the land. This order was compulsory for everyone of his subjects and heavy punishment was meted out to anyone who dared to defy the King's order." This shows that even in olden times it was not considered inequitable, Sir, that when famine and starvation faced the common people, the upper class should be coerced, if necessary, to do with the minimum which it needs for its requirements. Since we cannot ration meat and vegetable and other products, let us leave the cereal ration for the common people of this country who cannot afford anything else.

That, Sir, is the spirit in which I would like the declaration made by the Honourable Member that we hope to tide over our crisis to be implemented, and I do hope that when the Food Secretary replies, he will be able to give us an assurance that so far as the immediate crisis for the next two months is concerned, we can leave out of consideration any threat to our present, already inequitable ration of 12 ounces, and that in that spirit, Dr Rajendra Prasad's declaration that "we refuse to be defeated" will be honoured and respected by Government.

Mr. Krishna Chandra Sharma (Meerut Division Non-Muhammadian Urban) Much emphasis has been laid as to how much food has been procured and how it was distributed. But mere procurement and distribution will not suffice. It is the question of production that is important. So far as the present crisis is concerned, if the Government assures the producer that the next crop if it is a better crop may fetch him a better price, then I assume the Honourable Member that there is so much food in rural India that you can meet the crisis without any difficulty. I have been in the procurement line in the United Provinces and I know that still a lot of it is lying in the houses of the cultivators. But the trouble is that if the prices are not attractive, there is neither the stability nor the guarantee that if he produces more his produce will find a market to-morrow. The 1st world war's experience is still fresh in his mind. What happened after the 1st world war? During that war he went on producing more and more, and after the war had ended that surplus was not marketable. The prices fell and the cultivator was nowhere. During the last war in England there was a guarantee that the minimum wages would be given to the cultivator and the market would be found for their grain. In India there is no such guarantee and the prices are not stable. You must also look to the need of the cultivator. The price of a bullock has gone up ten times. Iron has gone up, so far as the cultivator is concerned, no less than 50 times. Ordinary timber it is difficult for the cultivator to get. So when you talk of procuring grain, I again assure the Honourable Member that there is so much grain that the present need is not difficult to be met. But the question is not only that the cultivator is not willing to sell but that is the position, because he feels insecure and he has developed an apathy towards the city population. The conflict is between the man who produces and between the man who enjoys, and many of the things which are unpleasant today owe their origin to this conflict. You cannot ignore it. What I mean to say is that too much emphasis is laid on the question of procurement and on the system of distribution.

but very little emphasis is laid on the question of production, its method and the facilities to be provided for it. Today we have the Honourable Food Member's statement in a English daily with headlines 'Food situation dangerously insecure'. The situation has been insecure for a long time past. As far back as 1942, the Indian Central Cotton Committee and the Advisory Board of the Imperial Council of Agricultural Research made recommendations for growing more food, and in 1942 a conference for growing more food was called. It recommended certain measures, namely

- (a) an increase in the area under food and fodder crops by—
 - (i) bringing new land, including fallow land, under cultivation,
 - (ii) double cropping, and
 - (iii) diverting land from non-food crops to food crops
- (b) an increase in the supply of water for irrigation by the improvement and extension of existing irrigation canals, the construction of additional wells, etc.,
- (c) the extended use of manures and fertilizers,
- (d) an increase in the supply of improved seeds.

The difficulties that arose in the way were described, namely lack of water, lack of drainage, unhealthy conditions, chiefly due to malaria, deep-rooted grasses and weeds, low fertility of the soil, salinity and alkalinity, and liability to damage by wild animals.

Some of the difficulties pointed out were simply frivolous. No deliberate and determined effort has been made to produce more food, and the situation is that since 1942 we are where we were. Food has not increased and without an increase of food, the system of procurement and perhaps a better system of distribution cannot be achieved. After 1942, when these attempts were made, there came the terrible famine of Bengal of 1943 wherein no less than 35 lakhs of our people died. We called it callous disregard for human life and we said it was due to the inefficiency or lack of appreciation on the part of the Government at that time. But what is the present situation? Have we improved any the better? Sir, the UNRRA Food Committee recommended that a diet containing 2,650 calories would be necessary, in addition to the necessary nutrition of other elements as the amount necessary to keep up the full health and efficiency of man. A diet of 2,000 calories was considered just sufficient to keep a man going and sustain his energy. Mr Bevin was recently shedding tears that 40 million people in Europe were getting 1,500 calories of food. Japan was getting 1,575 calories and Germany was getting no less than 1,500. But Japan and Germany are enemy countries and we were the favoured allies of the great powers. Yet we got from 900 to 1,000 calories and at 900 they say that death begins. So we are somewhere between death and life. It is dying a long time. A terrible situation. It is a pity that with a country like ours and with the man power that we possess we have got this miserable state of affairs in our land. One element that has been largely responsible for the decrease in food is that 2 million of our youth were recruited for the army. The decrease in food was mainly due to the shortage of labour. The best youth of the country went to the army and labourers in the field joined factories and industrial concerns. Now the labour of the field has gone out of the field altogether and for ever. They are not returning back. They have taken to other occupations and the cultivator will never be able to pay what labour demands now, because it is too high.

Agriculture in this country unfortunately has been merely an occupation. It has never been a profession. Those who could not do better elsewhere were left to agriculture. As a matter of fact it was a sort of residue of society. That sort of class can never be expected to pay labour in terms of its demands. The only remedy lies in utilising the energy and the labour of the demobilised soldiers. If you meet a soldier in the streets you will find that he is unwilling to go back to the field. So the position is that the field worker has gone out, the youth of the village who joined the army and is coming back after being demobilised is unwilling to join agriculture or work on the field. It is a difficult problem which has to be tackled with great determination and deliberate and planned strategy. Without planning you can never expect to have greater production and without greater production we cannot meet the demand of the increasing population in our country.

There has been great emphasis on the imports from other countries. Many deputations have been sent to foreign countries and many of our able leaders have placed our case before the world with ability but the response has been poor. So the question is whether it is safe to depend on foreign countries. The English became our masters by supplying us with fine clothes and things of comfort and convenience. It is difficult to believe that England and America have ever returned altruistic to play the role of a Christian Samaritan. If you hold the beggar's bowl before them the supply would come at the cost of your liberty. Take the case of Russia. The border countries which are being supplied with food by Russia are coming under its political domination. They could appease their hunger at the cost of their liberty. There are no two opinions about that. So it is not a safe thing to depend on imports from abroad. It has not been a pleasant experience to get things of comfort and luxuries from other countries and it would not be pleasant in future either. We have to depend on our own resources and our resources must be so organised that in the future our demands should not be allowed to outgrow our production and steps should be so taken that there would be no question of inadequacy of food in our country.

One thing which would go a great way in creating a new life in our society and encourage the producer to produce more is systematic and organised propaganda. We have our broadcasting department. What has it done? It only broadcasts cheap songs daily. If we start with something to tell the villager that the old chapter has ended, new life born, new spirit permeate, and that he has to play a great part in the present situation and in the times to come, that his role is superior and more responsible than that of others, he would be induced to labour harder and be more responsive to our appeals. After all during the war by propaganda and publicity 2 million of our youth went to the army. If a man can be induced by systematic propaganda to face death, not for his own country, or his people but at the command of a foreign ruler who has never been kind to him, then it needs no logic to see that he can be induced to work harder for his own people at the command of his own great leaders and for the fair name of his own country. The first thing is to create a new psychological change in the cultivator, to give him a more honourable place, to make him understand that he is as good and honourable a creature as anybody else and that he is no longer the residue of society. Let him know that from now on he has become an honourable man, that he has a responsibility that he is something to be counted upon, that the sustenance of the people lies in his hands and that on account of the labour that he does on the field his place in society is better than that of anybody else's. He should be told all this through broadcast and through publicity organisations and non-official committees. We had in the U P non-official committees of M L As to procure food. Before that the district authorities went to the people. They asked under the threat of law that the cultivator should give his grain and the people refused. Nobody came forward from the villages. When they came they said they did not get timber, they did not get iron, they did not get any bullocks nor any of the articles they needed were supplied to them. "And now you may shoot us down but we will not give you grain to eat." They refused. But when the non-officials went round, they promised that the timber would be supplied to them, the iron would be supplied to them, bullocks would be provided for them, and ploughs would be given to them. The cultivators willingly supplied the requisite grain. The promises have not yet materialised. That is the tragedy of the situation. When we asked the government "Please give us these things which we promised at your instance, will you fulfil them?" They said "Yes, we will try to do it." But when the time for the fulfilment of the promises came they were deaf. This position has created all the difficulty. We made certain promises at the instance of the authorities. Those promises have not been fulfilled, and now if we ask the ministers and the authorities to do the needful, they do not listen. So, when we go again to the villages, they cry "Once you have deceived us, next time we are not going to believe what you say." I say again there is so much gain in the rural areas that you can meet the demand and tide over the crisis. But the fact remains that the cultivator has made certain demands and we have not met those demands. The Government have to co-ordinate the position from the centre with the help of the provinces. The Government have got to have a vigorous campaign. I want the government to tell the cultivator on the broadcast something like this "You have a new life, you have a new sense of responsibility", then they will respond to the call as once they said they would. Let them begin with a song like Goethe's—

'Build it again,
Great Child of Earth,
Build it again—
With a finer worth,
In thine own bosom build it on high,
'Take up the life once more,
Run the race again,
High and clear
Let a lovelier strain
Ring out than ever before."

Something like that you have to sing. Say goodbye to the useless song, say goodbye to the things that are not palatable to the man in the street. The government must have a purpose, and objective. You must make a determined effort and adopt a deliberate policy, a policy that will create new life and a new sense of responsibility in the cultivator. Without all this you cannot hope to create an atmosphere to bring in more produce into the market. It is impossible. Things have come to a crisis, not because there is want of production and not because enough cannot be produced or is not being produced, but because the producer stands apart from the consumer. He is not willing to sympathise with the consumer. He has suffered and he is not prepared to suffer longer. So you have to change the existing state of things. You must have a planned economy and a deliberate and determined effort.

I come now to how it is possible to produce more under the present conditions. To produce more you have to give additional labour help to the cultivator. As I said, the decrease in production was caused by over two million people going to the war, from the field, and also by a lot of labour joining the factories. Therefore it is the function of the Central Government so to plan the economy that those areas now lying waste are brought under cultivation. We have got in this country over 250 million acres lying waste or fallow, that can be brought under cultivation. It might be said that it requires long term planned economy and that nothing can be done tomorrow. It might be that you cannot have water reservoirs tomorrow, but you can dig wells. If during the last war the Burma jungles could be laid low and roads opened and many great things could be done, not in months but in weeks and days, then I see no reason why wells cannot be dug tomorrow and why kutha wells cannot be constructed soon, and why river water cannot be raised, or tank water could not be raised. Very little mechanism is required to do all these things, but we are failing as perhaps we never have failed before. The need of the hour is great efforts and determined efforts but we have been supplied with long range policies. We were told last time that every green field would be seen with vegetables and fruits growing thereon, but we see today that the green fields are as good or as bad as ever. Promises were made and policies were laid down but no actual change in the affairs has happened. So, long range policies and big promises will not help. It is only immediate action that can help. The cultivator will respond in the measure that you actually work out your plans tomorrow. If you fail for a day the country will fail you for two days. I want you to start him again with whatever little help can be given to him, and I do not think that you cannot do much. You can do much. Where is the difficulty in digging wells? Where is the difficulty in not utilising river water? Where is the difficulty in providing manure and good seed? These are things which alone can increase production by 50 per cent. Further, the agricultural department can issue a list of substitute food. It is not necessary to take as much cereals as one usually takes. There are other substitute foods which people can take. The higher class people can take less of cereals and more of other foods and so you have to plan accordingly. The balanced diet is an important question. Cereals may be reduced and other nutritious elements added.

As my Honourable friend said, in Madras you are giving wheat which the people there do not like, they like rice, but if you ask them to live on bajra or jowar for two months, it disagrees with their system, but perhaps if you give wheat along with it, you will get a better diet. The necessary thing is to plan production, and to plan diet and then to make a vigorous propaganda for the objective. Take all measures necessary to save food where possible. Much of food is wasted in family and on ceremonial occasions. Procuring and distribution are necessary measures but production is more important for unless you can produce more you cannot distribute more. After all we shall have to produce more some time and so why not do it immediately? My only submission is that you should take immediate steps and take those steps effectively and the position will improve and it will improve in no time. At present, I would suggest that vigorous propaganda is necessary. The formation of non-official committees is necessary and co-ordination with the Provincial Government is a further step that would help it. With the co-ordination and sympathetic co-operation of the Provincial Governments, the Central Government may go into details with regard to the particular areas and find out the possibilities of growing particular crops and possibility of an increase in the quantity produced and I am confident that in no time things will improve with very little effort and with a little improvement in the things necessary for the cultivator for producing the crop, I have no doubt that 50 per cent of the increment would be forthcoming. Most of our manure is wasted. A little propaganda in this direction and a little co-ordination with the Provincial Governments can save lot of manure. Cowdung is a precious kind of manure which is wasted as fuel. Pressure from the Local Governments to induce the forest department to supply them with cheap fuel would save the cultivator lot of precious manure. There are other kinds of manures which can be made easily available and with the good manure available to the villages, the yield can be increased by 15 per cent and if you supply good seed this will help further increase the yield. My experience of the United Provinces goes to show that good seed is never supplied in time. When the peasant needs the seed, it is not supplied to him in time. If good seed is supplied to him at the proper time, the production can be very easily increased. If ordinary irrigation wells are dug out and water is made available then, Sir, the crop can be increased. There may be double cropping, triple cropping and cultivator may have many crops in a year. It is not very difficult to give proper irrigation facilities. If this is done, we shall have good harvests in time and that will improve the situation. Let us meet the situation as brave men and with all the resources at our command instead of going about with the beggars' bowls before this country and that, risking things which are precious in life, which are precious today and which would be much more precious tomorrow for the generations to come. I express my sense of gratitude to the Honourable Food Member for the steps he is taking and hope much more determined efforts would be made.

With these words I take my seat.

Sardar Mangal Singh: I heartily congratulate the Honourable Food Member for his masterly analysis of the food position in the country. The country is grateful to him for the effort he is making to save the starving millions. He has said that he wanted 7 million tons in the beginning. Out of that, he wanted to get 4 millions from outside the country and during the last few months several delegations have gone out with begging bowls in their hands, with the result that so far we have succeeded in securing only 1.7 million tons. While on this point, I wish to say that we should make efforts to produce all our food from inside the country and we should stop looking forward to other countries to get food from those places. I quite agree with my Honourable friend Mr. Lawson when he said that in the note which was circulated to the members a very large number of pages were devoted to the efforts which the Government of India made to secure food from outside. The position should have been just the other way about. Efforts should have been made to grow more food in this country. The Honourable the Food Member has given large number of figures but he has omitted to mention how much area during the last year the grow more food campaign of the Government of India has actually brought under the plough and how much grain has been produced by the efforts of that campaign. The Honourable Member has not mentioned these figures. It would have helped the House to come to some decision if he had mentioned as to what efforts the Government of India is making to produce food immediately. The Honourable the Food Member has mentioned that Government has now sanctioned subsidies to sink more wells and to help other means of irrigation. On this point I may mention that the efforts of the Government of India so far in this direction have remained mostly on the files only undefined. I speak subject to correction. Last year the Government of India decided that it will offer 50 per cent subsidies to those agriculturists who sink wells on their own lands. Out of this 50 per cent, 25 per cent are to be met by the Government of India and the remaining 25 per cent are to be met by the Provincial Governments. I know from personal knowledge from my province of the Punjab, the Punjab Government failed to avail of this facility. I understand from the Agricultural Secretary now that the Punjab Government have reconsidered the position and now they might contribute their 25 per cent quota but I wish the Honourable the Food Member to make sure whether all the Governments will fall in with this scheme, because the scheme has already met with some obstacles in some of the provinces. We can produce more food if irrigation and other facilities are made available to the cultivator. The greatest help which the Government can give is to make water available to the agriculturists. In my province most of the land is lying uncultivated for want of water. In certain villages about 50 per cent of the land can be brought under the plough if water can be made available to them. Then, again, the Government of India have so far done nothing to provide agricultural implements, such as, tractors, and manures and other things, which can help them to grow more food. The Government of India has spent 15½ crores to subsidise the imports of foodgrains. If the same amount had been spent in the other direction, I think the results would have been much better. I hope the Government of India even now will turn in that direction and will immediately make available to the cultivators all the things which they want.

One other thing which is worrying me is the availability of the bullocks to which the Honourable Member referred and in which he is personally interested. In these days the price of the bullocks has gone up very much. The Honourable Member gave the index figures about wheat, sugar and other articles which the agriculturist is selling, but if he had taken the trouble to find out the index number of the bullocks—I doubt very much if the Government of India maintains that index number here—he would have found that the price of the bullocks and buffaloes has gone up by 4 or 5 times. I am, very much dissatisfied with the announcement of the Honourable the Food Member that it would not be possible for him to increase the prices of the foodgrains. He said that he is in a difficulty. He is, Sir, like a man who has two wives. One of them represents the agriculturists and the other the consumers. In this connection, I would like to submit that the wife representing the consumers is very clever. She has got means of propaganda and she can adopt various ways and methods in order to please him. But the other wife representing the agriculturists, though faithful, is simple. She does not know the use of cosmetics and therefore it is not possible for her to please the Honourable the Food Member. Unconsciously, therefore, the Food Member is favouring the other wife.

Sir Gowdasjee Jehangir (Nominated Non-Official). You are afraid of the other wife.

Maulana Zafar Ali Khan (East Central Punjab Muhammadan). Let him have the third wife

Sardar Mangal Singh: I hope when things are brought home to him, he will consider the position calmly and try to encourage the cultivator to grow more food just as he has done in the case of sugar-cane growers. He has rightly increased the price of the sugar-cane in Bihar and the United Provinces and I hope he will similarly encourage the cultivators all over India to get a fair price for their produce. In this connection, while we should increase our produce, we should also take steps to avoid wastage. At the present moment, we are losing 3 million tons of foodgrains on account of their wastage by rats and other insects. This is a huge figure.

In this connection, although the wastage is comparatively small, I wish to bring to the notice of the Honourable the Food Member one small item of wastage which is now being carried on at Quetta. There is a Government-owned factory there which is manufacturing what is known as coal eggs. In this factory they are burning ata. I am told that during the last two years they have burnt about 20,000 maunds of ata. The Honourable the Food Secretary shakes his head. I will request him to make detailed inquiries. That factory is at Quetta and they are manufacturing coal eggs by mixing coal, coaltar and ata in some proportions. This coal egg is burnt in the cold weather for heating purposes. I hope the Honourable the Food Secretary will make note of it and make inquiries in the matter.

Mr. B. R. Sen: Is that ata unfit for human consumption?

Sardar Mangal Singh: That is the point I was coming to. It is said that that ata is a condemned ata. But I would like to invite the attention of the Food Secretary to the fact that Quetta has a cold climate and of all the cities why ata at Quetta should be condemned as unfit for human consumption. I am told there is some gol-mal about it. Somebody is selling and somebody is buying. I will request him to make inquiries into that matter. The whole affair appears to be fishy.

Then, again, Government in other countries helps the agriculturist in several ways. The Government of India here should make available tractors and petrol practically at a nominal price. Government should also make available electricity in the villages for agricultural purposes. Immediate steps can be taken by sinking tube wells which can be run with the aid of electricity and more food can be grown, particularly in villages near the cities.

About procurements, I am glad that the Government of India have, after all, succeeded in having the monopoly procurement practically all over the country. But there may be still some people who might be hoarding grains and they might be waiting for favourable prices. In this connection, I would submit that the Government can take over the grains lying with the cultivators and give them a receipt telling them that the cultivator should be at liberty to cash those receipts at any time whenever he thinks that the prices are favourable to him. This method has been used in the U S A and it has brought very good results. At the present time, some people are keeping back the grains. They might think that in January or February or even in March just before the harvest, they might get higher prices. In order to allay their fears or apprehensions, I suggest that Government can say that they take over all the grains and give them receipts. Let them cash those receipts at any time they like. By this method you will be able to get more grains without offering any bonus or subsidy as has been suggested by my Honourable friend Mr. Masani. This will give confidence to agriculturists to part with their food grains.

Mr. Deputy President: The House will now adjourn.

The Assembly then adjourned till eleven of the Clock on Wednesday the 6th November 1946.

STARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

(a) ORAL ANSWERS

HYDARI MISSION REPORT

201. *Sardar Mangal Singh: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state

(a) whether Government will place a copy of the Report of the Hydari Mission in the Library of the House for the use of the members of the Central Legislature, and

(b) whether all consumer goods mentioned in that Report have actually been received in India, if only some portion of those goods has been received how much more goods are yet to come and whether arrangement reached then will be adhered to?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: (a) Yes, Sir

(b) In respect of consumer goods, the object of the Hydari Mission was to stimulate the flow of consumer goods into India in the year 1945 No precise undertakings were entered into as to what quantities would be sent from the U K, the Mission indicated the main types of goods of which India was in need and indicated also India's approximate requirements Since that time the system of Open General Licence has been widely extended, and the position now is, as regards consumer goods in general, that importers in India are at liberty to import whatever quantities they can locate, without any interference by Government As the Honourable Member is no doubt aware, the supply position of consumer goods in India has very greatly improved If the Honourable Member wants to ascertain exactly what quantities of any particular types of consumer goods have been imported recently into India, I would ascertain statistics from the Commerce Department and let him have them

Mr. Manu Subedar: Will the Honourable Member tell this House, if he has got the information ready with him now, whether it was not one of the objects of the Hydari Mission to get special machinery and equipment which would expedite coal production? I should like to know whether such machinery was imported and also whether some of this machinery after importation was found to be useless

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I should like to examine the matter and give the information to the Honourable Member

Seth Govind Das: How are these imports of consumer goods going to affect our sterling balance with the United Kingdom?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I think it is much too soon to answer that question at present

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know if the present Government have reviewed the list and is taking care to see that such categories of goods as are produced in this country are not affected by importation?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: That is a matter which we keep constantly under review

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: If so, has the Honourable Member removed from the list any categories of goods so far?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: It is not a question of removing goods altogether from the list. The matter has got to be determined with reference to the actual production in India of that particular class of goods and the extent to which India's requirements exceed the production. It is a matter which, I think, has got to be examined on the merits of each case.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: It is a question of regulating the quantity, what steps are taken by Government?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: That is roughly the principle on which we proceed

Sardar Mangal Singh: May I know whether the Government of India will give first priority to the import of agricultural implements and agricultural machinery?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: That, I think, is an important matter which we will certainly keep in mind
COMMISSION TO BRITISH FIRM FOR PURCHASE OF MACHINERY FOR FERTILIZER FACTORY AT SINDRI

202. *Sardar Mangal Singh: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state

(a) whether the transaction relating to the purchase of machinery for the erection of the Fertilizer Factory at Sindri has been completed or whether it is still in the course of negotiations

(b) what part of that machinery has been purchased from the United Kingdom and what parts from the United States of America and India, and

(c) what will be the estimated cost of machinery and what amount will be paid as a commission to the British firm which negotiated the purchase for the Government of India?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: (a) Orders for about 50 per cent of the plant required have already been placed

(b) Of the items so far covered, orders have been placed in the U K to the value of Rs 3.13 crores, in the U S A to the value of Rs 48.4 lakhs and in India to the value of Rs 8.4 lakhs. Tenders have been called for in India for a considerable amount of additional equipment and buildings. Tenders so far received and under consideration amount to Rs 12 lakhs and enquires outstanding to a further Rs 15 lakhs. Further substantial orders will be placed in India as information is received from the designers of the plant.

(c) On the basis of information so far available, the approximate cost of the whole machinery is expected to be about Rs 8.02 crores. A commission of two per cent is being paid to the British firm for negotiating the purchase of the plant.

Mr. Maru Subedar: Have Government received any representations to the effect that the British consulting firm which has got an office in India is discriminating against Indian manufacturers and firms and is not giving them full and adequate particulars of manufacture for this purpose of all the plant and equipment which they are capable of manufacturing?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: If the Honourable Member will be so good as to give me particulars of any case I shall certainly look into it.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know if the Honourable Member has looked into the list of articles or machinery, tools and plant, which are being brought to this country from Germany by way of reparations? If so, which of this plant and machinery will be useful for starting similar industries in any other part of India?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: On the information that we have at present I do not think it is possible for me to answer that question.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know if it is not useful to decentralise, and instead of spending eight crores on a single plant or machinery at one place to have small suitable machinery in various parts of India?*

The Honourable Dr John Matthai: That is a question which has been often considered. It is a matter on which it is possible to entertain different views. But from a certain point of view I think there is a good deal to be said, when you are undertaking an enterprise of this kind, for the view that production for the sake of economy should be organised on as large a scale as possible. But that is not a final view to take of the matter. In certain cases I think the circumstances may be such that decentralisation would be possible and would be desirable. But, as I said, it is a matter on which it is possible to hold different views.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Is it expected that this single factory at Sindh will be able to provide for the needs of the country as a whole?

The Honourable Dr John Matthai: No, Sir.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: As America is the greatest expert in the production of fertilisers, will Government kindly explain why the percentage or the value of the orders placed in the United Kingdom is higher than those in the United States of America?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: This is a matter regarding which a decision was taken long before I assumed responsibility, and I am not in a position to answer the question.

Sardar Mangal Singh: Will the Honourable Member make enquiries and satisfy himself that the machinery which is being purchased from the United Kingdom is not more costly than we could have purchased from the United States of America?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: On all these matters a good deal of enquiry was made and on the results of such enquiry, I presume, the Government then in power took the decisions they did.

(CIVIL AVIATION CONFERENCE)

203. *Sardar Mangal Singh: Will the Secretary of the Communications Department please state

(a) when Government are calling the Civil Aviation Conference and, apart from representatives of Provinces and States, what other elements are being invited to this Conference,

(b) whether Government are aware that the most vitally concerned element is the travelling public, and whether their representatives will also be invited to participate in the deliberations of the Conference,

(c) whether the agenda of the Conference includes discussion on the question of nationalisation of Civil Aviation, and whether it will be open to the Conference to make a definite recommendation to Government to operate Civil Aviation lines themselves and not hand over this business to private companies,

(d) if the answer to (c) above be in the negative, why this Conference is being debarred from expressing an opinion on this question, and

(e) if the answer to (c) above be in the affirmative, then why the Government of India have come to the conclusion that this business will be done by private companies and not by the State before the Conference have had occasion to express their views on the subject?

Sir Harold Shoobert: (a) The question of calling a Civil Aviation Conference is still under consideration

(b), (c), (d) and (e) Do not arise

Sardar Mangal Singh: May I know whether the Government of India have decided to call a conference or the very calling of the conference is under consideration?

Sir Harold Shoobert: The very calling of the conference is under consideration. Perhaps I should explain that the late Honourable Member in the Communications Department, Syed Ali Zaheer, had decided to call a conference, but since then there has been a change in Government and there has been no time for the present Honourable Member to come to a decision upon the subject.

Sardar Mangal Singh: Do I understand the Honourable Member to say that Syed Ali Zaheer when he was the Honourable Member had decided to call a conference, and he announced it publicly and is it a fact that later on this decision was upset?

Sir Harold Shoobert: There is no question, Sir, of the decision having been upset. The matter is still under consideration as I stated.

VIEWS OF INTERIM GOVERNMENT ON NATIONALIZATION OF TRANSPORT SERVICES

204. *Sardar Mangal Singh: Will the Secretary of the Communications Department please state

(a) whether the following sentence from his own statement represents the official view of the Interim Government on the subject of nationalisation, or it is his personal view only

"The Government hopes that on account of the private enterprise greater facilities, efficiency and courtesy will be available to the passengers than if the services were to be nationalised at this stage", and

(b) if it be the official view of Government as a whole, whether this observation applies to the Civil Aviation alone or also to other key industries such as Railways, Motor Transport and Posts and Telegraphs Departments?

Sir Harold Shoobert: (a) and (b) The sentence quoted by the Honourable Member is from a statement issued by Mr Ali Zaheer, the last Member for Communications. Since that statement was issued there has been a change in the Government. Sardar Mangal Singh is moving a resolution on 8th of November on the question of nationalisation of air services. I hope to be in a position to indicate the new Government's policy then.

Sardar Mangal Singh: My question was whether the policy stated in the announcement of Mr Ali Zaheer represents the attitude and the policy of the Government of India? To this the Honourable Member has not replied.

Sir Harold Shoobert: Sir, I am afraid the Government of India has not been in a position to let me know whether this does represent the present policy. As the Honourable Member is aware, the Member in charge of the Communications Department, after only having held charge for a few brief days, has gone away from Delhi on business of urgent public importance, and this is a matter upon which Government has to formulate a policy. Whether that policy will be the same as the policy of the last Government or whether there will be any kind of revision of the policy—at present we are unable to state.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: May I ask the Honourable Member whether it represented the Government's policy when this statement was made?

Sir Harold Shoobert: Yes, Sir.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: Do I take it that the policy of the Government is to artificially keep up the high fares by reason of the control which they now exercise or will they be willing to review these fares? Air transport companies are prepared to offer passages at a much lower rate, but they are prevented from doing so because of the prices fixed by Government

Sir Harold Shobert: That is a matter which will undoubtedly receive consideration

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Will it not be correct to say that until a change is made, the policy of the Government remains what was enunciated by Syed Ali Zaheer?

Mr. President: That is a matter of interpretation

CORRUPTION IN RAILWAY DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEES

205. *Sardar Mangal Singh: Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state

(a) whether Government intend to take any special measures to eradicate the evil of corruption from the Railway Department employees, and if so, what those measures are, and when they will be actually put into effect,

(b) whether it is a fact that Government intend to make bribe taking and giving a cognizable offence, and

(c) whether Government intend to bring forward any special legislation for this purpose this session or the next?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) This question should really have been addressed to Honourable Home Member, but in so far as it concerns the eradication of corruption in the Railway Department it is the prior determination of Government to intensify the existing measures for checking it. In addition to use being made of the Special Police Establishment set up under the Home Department to deal with this evil, a stern warning has been issued to the staff of all ranks to the effect that very severe action will be taken against any railway servant found guilty of having received illegal gratification or of having indulged in corrupt practices. A Complaints Section has recently been set up in the Railway Board's Office and arrangements have been made to set up similar sections on railways to deal with complaints of all types including complaints of bribery and corruption.

(b) The reply is in the affirmative

(c) Government are about to introduce in the current Session of the Legislative Assembly a Bill to amend the Criminal Law in order to make it more effective in dealing with cases of bribery and corruption among public servants

INTRODUCTION OF CO-OPERATIVE FARMING IN CENTRALLY ADMINISTERED AREAS

206. *Sardar Mangal Singh: Will the Secretary of the Agriculture Department please state

(a) whether Government have considered any scheme for introducing an improved method of farming in the Centrally Administered Areas, and

(b) whether it is contemplated to make co-operative farming compulsory in the villages in the Centrally Administered Areas so as to serve as a model for Provincial and State Administrations to follow, whether Government intend to bring forward any legislation for this purpose this session or the next?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: (a) It has been decided recently to take up pilot experiments in co-operative or joint farming in the Delhi Province to determine the type of farm management most suitable for adoption on a large scale under local conditions. The question of preparing a scheme for this purpose is under consideration.

A scheme to introduce mechanical cultivation in selected areas in Baluchistan is also under examination.

(b) There is no proposal at present of making co-operative farming compulsory or to enact legislation for this purpose.

† Answer to this question laid on the table the questioner having not put the question

FACILITIES FOR PASSENGERS IN NEW DESIGN THIRD AND INTER CLASS COACHES ON RAILWAYS

207. *Pandit Sri Krishna Dutt Palwal: Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state

(a) if Government intend to provide new designs for third and Inter class passenger coaches, if so, when,

(b) the facilities these new design coaches will provide to the passengers, and

(c) if fans will be provided in third and Inter class compartments?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) It is the Government's intention to provide new designs for all classes of passenger coaches. A number of new designs have been prepared but it is not expected that these can be put into service until early 1948. The primary need at the moment is to provide more coaches, and coaches to the pre-war design can be manufactured without initial delays and more rapidly than could coaches of the improved designs.

(b) The facilities which it is proposed to incorporate in the new III class designs include more comfortable seats, more space per passenger, more latrine accommodation, wider doors, improved lighting, water for washing etc. The financial implications of these amenities are now under examination and it is contemplated that it will be necessary to associate their introduction ultimately with increased fares.

(c) Government are considering the practicability of installing fans in III class carriages but no decision has yet been taken. It is proposed with the introduction of new coaches to abolish Inter class.

Seth Govind Das: Will the Government think it advisable to provide sleeping accommodation in these new third class coaches on extra payment?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: That question is under consideration at present, and I think it will be possible for Government to provide sleeping accommodation for 60 per cent of passengers.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Is it not a fact that these new designs have been on exhibition for three years now but no attempt has been made to remodel or manufacture new coaches of these new designs?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I am afraid Sir, my Honourable friend is thinking of the exhibition coach which he once asked to see.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: No, no.

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: As a matter of fact, during these three years the repair programme has been exceedingly heavy and it is not possible for the workshops to turn out new coaches in large numbers while other coaches are being repaired.

Sreejot Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: May I know when we will have the pleasure of riding those coaches?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: As soon as they are ready.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: I am not referring to the Exhibition coach, but in the Railway Exhibition that was held here about three years ago some new model coaches were exhibited. They were also exhibited to the members of the Standing Finance Committee. I am asking the Honourable Member why, when there is nothing new about those coaches except more accommodation, it should take such a long time and why should we have to wait until 1948?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I have already explained that question at length. It is not easy to make coaches of the new designs straightaway. It will mean some delay and naturally we are trying to build coaches of pre-war design for the time being, because our requirements are so heavy. We require something like 6,000 coaches straightaway, but we cannot produce them overnight.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Will the Honourable Member consider the advisability of abolishing the first or second class instead of the intermediate class, as that will affect the middle class more?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: If the House votes for the abolition of first and second class compartments, I shall certainly take that decision.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Will this question be brought before the House for consideration?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: There will be plenty of opportunity for the House to consider this question during the budget session.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: Have the new coaches got broader footboard accommodation since so many people now travel on footboards?

Lala Deshbandhu Gupta: Is the Honourable Member aware that the third class coaches on the Nizam's Railways have already been provided with fans?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I am fully aware of that fact.

Mr. Leslie Gwilt: May I ask the Honourable Member whether Government have considered whether the air-conditioning of coaches, at the time of building, is not going to work out very much more expensive than the installing of fans?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: We were talking about providing fans in third class coaches and not air-conditioned coaches which have nothing to do with the point.

Mr. Leslie Gwilt: I too am talking about third class coaches.

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: The suggestion is very interesting and will be considered.

INCREASE OF PETROL RATION OF MEMBERS OF LEGISLATIVE AND CONSTITUENT ASSEMBLY

208. *Pandit Sri Krishna Dutt Palwal: Will the Honourable Member for Transport please state

(a) whether Government intend to retain or withdraw the Petrol Control Order in the near future,

(b) whether they propose to increase the basic ration substantially, and

(c) whether Government propose to consider the advisability of increasing the ration for members of the Indian Legislature and the Constituent Assembly to at least one gallon per day?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) For the reasons explained in the Press Note dated the 3rd August 1946, it is not possible to withdraw petrol rationing in the near future.

(b) The basic ration for private cars has been doubled with effect from the 1st August 1946. An over-all increase of 30 per cent in the volume of petrol released for civil consumption was made during the August—October 1946 Rationing Quarter, and a still further increase of ten per cent has been made in the volume of petrol to be released during November 1946—January 1947 Rationing Quarter. The present position of supplies, storage and transport does not permit any further relaxation at present.

(c) The scale of petrol ration for members of the Indian Legislature and of the Constituent Assembly has recently been increased from half a gallon to one gallon per day when there is a sitting of the Council of State or the Legislative Assembly or the Constituent Assembly or any of their Committees.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Does the Honourable Member for transport expect Members of this Legislature to sit in their chauns all the time when the Legislature is not sitting and does he not expect that some of us may have friendly visits to pay, including a visit to himself?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: All these questions have been very carefully taken into consideration and the allocation the Government has made appears to me to be perfectly just.

Shri D. P. Karmarkar: Is the Honourable Member aware that this short supply of petrol has rendered the supply of certain essential commodities like foodstuffs, fuel, etc. very costly? Is he prepared to relax this short ration in respect of the transport of essential commodities?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: So far as the question of the transport of essential foodstuffs or fuel is concerned, I can assure the Honourable Member that the Government will always be prepared to concede whatever is legitimate. In fact I may inform him that while the South India Railway strike was going on we sanctioned 15,000 gallons a day for the movement of essential foodstuffs, etc.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: In view of the fact that the war is over and the demands of the military have been considerably decreased in regard to petrol, may I ask the Honourable Member whether he would consider increasing the basic petrol for civilians?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: As soon as there is a further reduction of military requirements, of which I cannot speak here, I am perfectly certain that the Government will be prepared to have a further relaxation in the rationing of petrol.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: Is the Honourable Member aware that there are already large stores of aviation spirit now not wanted by the military in this country? And will he consider the possibility of making them available for civil use since they are now being wasted and stored for very long periods?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I am not aware of any very large quantities of petrol being held by the military which is surplus. I know that there is a certain amount of reserve kept both by the military and civil side which we cannot dispense with.

Lt.-Col. Dr. J. C. Chatterjee: I did not mean petrol but aviation spirit.

President: Order, order. Next question.

MONOPOLY OF MESSRS. A. H. WHEELER & CO. FOR RUNNING BOOKSTALLS ON MOST RAILWAYS

209. Pandit Sri Krishna Dutt Pahlwal: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state

(a) whether Government are aware that Messrs. A. H. Wheeler and Company have practically got the monopoly of running bookstalls on most of the Railway stations,

(b) the year in which the last public tenders for the contract to run those bookstalls on Railways were called, and

(c) the reasons for accepting the tender of Messrs. A. H. Wheeler and Company?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) Yes. Messrs. A. H. Wheeler & Co. have the sole right of selling newspapers, periodicals, books etc., on the Bengal Assam, East Indian, Bengal Nagpur, Great Indian Peninsula, Bombay Baroda & Central India and Oudh Tirhut Railways.

(b) Public tenders were last called for by the East Indian Railway in 1932, the Bengal Assam Railway in 1942, and the G. I. P. Railway in 1945. The other three Railways were associated with Messrs. A. H. Wheeler & Co. during the days of Company management, and they have not yet called for tenders since coming under State management.

(c) Messrs. A. H. Wheeler & Co.'s tenders were accepted in 1942 by the Bengal Assam Railway and in 1945 by the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, because they were the highest. The East Indian Railway accepted Messrs.

A H Wheeler & Co's tender in 1932 because the only other tenderer had no experience of the work

Seth Govind Das: Does the Honourable Member know that generally the literature which is kept by Wheeler & Co is trash literature, especially of Hindustani and other Indian languages?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: If that is so, nobody need buy it

Seth Govind Das: Does the Honourable Member know that they are not supplying right literature to the people, and isn't it the duty of that company to keep such literature which is useful for the public?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I suppose they know exactly what their duties are Mr Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: Will Government inform the House whether Wheeler & Co is an Indian concern or an Anglo-Indian concern?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I am afraid I must ask for notice of that question. I did not know that I was going to be asked that Mr N M Joshi: Are these stalls maintained for private or public convenience?

The Honourable Mr. M Asaf Ali: Obviously for public convenience

Mr N. M. Joshi. If it is for public convenience, why does not the Railway Department run these stalls themselves?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali. This Department will be glad to do so provided my Honourable friend will point the way. I should like to know the gentleman who would be prepared to take it up

Mr Manu Subedar. In view of the assurance which his predecessor had given, will the Honourable the Transport Member seriously examine the position as to whether there may not be a fundamental change of the system and railways may not look to making money out of this great convenience to the public to get newspapers and also whether in due course as an experiment on one State railway, Government may not experiment whether it cannot be done departmentally

The Honourable Mr. M Asaf Ali. It is a rather large question. At present the Government are taken up with all sorts of questions connected with transport, and thus after all is a side issue. But I agree with my Honourable friend that it is an experiment which may be tried whenever the occasion permits

Khan Mohammad Yamin Khan: Has the Honourable Member seen a report of the Sub-Committee appointed by the Central Advisory Committee on this issue?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: I have gone through the report of the Sub-Committee and I find that my answer is fully consistent with what the Sub-Committee has done or said

RAILWAY LINES DISMANTLED DURING WAR

'210. Shri Sri Prakasa: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to lay on the table of the House a list of Railway lines that were dismantled during the period of the war?

(b) What steps have been taken to restart these lines?

(c) When does he expect the following lines to start working (i) Cawnpore-Banda Section, (ii) Akbarpur-Tanda Section, and (iii) Bijnor-Chandpur-Sial Section?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) and (b) I would refer the Honourable Member to the reply given by the Honourable the Railway Member to Mr K C Neogy's unstarred question No 26, on the 8th February 1946

* Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent

Out of a total of 984 miles of lines dismantled during the war the restoration of approximately 412 miles is now under investigation by railways. Restoration of the remaining 572 miles was not considered necessary by railways as they were unremunerative and were not supported by the Provinces.

A statement giving details of dismantled lines, the restoration of which is under investigation is placed on the table of the House.

(c) (i) Cawnpore-Banda Section—The Branch line originally dismantled was Cawnpore-Khairada and not Cawnpore-Banda. It is anticipated that the line may be opened to traffic early in 1948 if there is no unforeseen delay.

(ii) Akbarpur-Tanda Section—The restoration of this line was not recommended by the Provincial Government. However, as a result of representations from the Public, the matter has been referred to the United Provinces Government and their reply is awaited.

(iii) Bynour-Chandpur-Siau Section—The traffic survey of the line is in hand. The restoration of this line will be considered after a scrutiny of the traffic survey report which is awaited.

PETTY ACCOUNTS LYING IN POST OFFICES AS UNCLAIMED

[211. *Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Secretary of the Communications Department be pleased to state

(a) the amounts of money lying in the Post Office at the end of the financial year 1945-46 as (i) unclaimed last petty accounts in the Post Office Savings

+ Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent

Bank, (ii) undelivered money orders, and (iii) realised from addressees but undelivered to the senders on account of V P articles,

(b) if separate accounts are kept of these, and

(c) what steps, if any, are taken to trace the persons concerned and deliver the money to them?

Sir Harold Shookert: (a) (i) The amount of unclaimed S B deposits in accounts with a credit of less than Rs 2 at the close of the year 1945-46 was Rs 10,11,534-13-5

(ii) and (iii) The information is not readily available. In connection with this the attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the replies given on the 28th March, 1946, to a similar question asked by him in the last session

(b) Yes

(c) As regards unpaid money orders and undelivered V P articles, I would refer the Honourable Member to the reply given in the last session on the 28th March, 1946, to his question No 1347

So far as Post Office Savings Bank accounts are concerned no special steps are taken to trace the depositors

INSTRUCTIONS TO PASSENGERS HOW TO BEHAVE ON RAILWAY JOURNYS

212. *Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state

(a) whether Government are aware that Railway premises and Railway compartments are made unnecessarily dirty by passengers,

(b) Whether Government are aware that passengers keep their luggage and sit about in a manner that causes unnecessary inconvenience to others, and

(c) whether Government propose to consider the desirability of putting on walls of Railway stations and Railway compartments instructions to passengers as to how to behave, arrange their luggage, and accommodate others, etc?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) It is unfortunately correct that some members of the travelling public do not observe the degree of cleanliness and tidiness which they are expected to do

(b) It is true that some passengers, inconsiderate of the convenience and rights of their fellow-travellers, do unnecessarily obstruct compartments with their luggage and occupy more space than they are entitled to

(c) The Government have already considered this matter and have instructed railways to take action in the directions suggested. Some have already done so and others will do so shortly. I would like to suggest to my Honourable friend the desirability of men of his influence and civic sense doing something independently of the railways to educate the public in matters of this kind

RULES OF COMPULSORY INSURANCE OF MOTOR VEHICLES

213. *Shri Sri Prakasa: Will the Honourable Member for Transport be pleased to state

(a) if the rule regarding compulsory insurance of motor vehicles has come into force,

(b) if he is assured that all motor vehicles have been so insured

(c) if it is a fact that different insurance companies charge different rates for insurance of motor vehicles, and

(d) if he would please consider the desirability of requiring insurance companies to have uniform rates in the matter of such compulsory insurance?

†Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) Chapter VIII of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, enforcing the compulsory insurance of motor vehicles against third party risks came into force on the 1st of July 1946

(b) So far as Government are aware, the insurance of vehicles registered in British India is now fully enforced. Pending introduction, however, of a scheme of reciprocity with those States who wish to enact parallel legislation, it has been necessary to ask Provincial Governments not to enforce the insurance of vehicles registered in the territory of those States when brought into British India

(c) Yes, with the exception of insurance companies which are members of Tariff Associations and are bound by the rates fixed by these Associations

(d) Government will consider the suggestion in the light of the experience gained of the working of the Compulsory Insurance Scheme. It should be remembered, however, in this connection that it is open to the owner of a motor vehicle to insure it with any company he may select

GRANT OF NEWSPRINT QUOTA TO INDIAN AND ENGLISH NEWSPAPERS

(214. *Shri Sri Prakasa. Will the Honorable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state

(a) the present position of newsprint in India,

(b) if there is any possibility of further increase in the quota given to the various papers, and

(c) the principles, if any, that are followed in the grant of quota to the different categories of newspapers, namely, English and Indian language papers representing different political opinions.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai. (a) The newsprint position has been more difficult during the last six months than it was at any time since July, 1944. However, there is good reason to anticipate that the position will improve towards the end of the year. Stocks at the end of September were about 11,000 tons as against 14,000 tons in January and an average of 12,000 to 13,000 tons during 1945. When the Newsprint Delegation left India, it looked as though India would not receive more than 17,000 tons during the year as against 22,000 tons in 1945 and an average of 24,000 tons for the years 1940 to 1945. As a result of the Delegation's visits, however, India has been promised a total of 32,500 tons for this year of which roughly 17,000 tons have so far been received. It is expected that between 8,000 and 10,000 tons will be received before the end of December and that the balance of the 32,500 tons will be carried forward into the next year. The Government of India have no information at present as to how much may be expected during 1947. But there is reason to hope that the figure will not be less than 32,500 tons.

(b) Newspapers were given an increase of 25 per cent. over the basic quota in September 1945. This increase had to be withdrawn on the 1st of May 1946. If the reduction was restored on the 1st of August and half on the 1st of October. The consumption at present is at the rate of 2,500 tons per mensem or 30,000 tons for 12 months. There is, therefore, no possibility of any increase in the basic quotas for perhaps another six months.

(c) Quotas of papers which were published in March 1943 are based on the average consumption during the second half of 1942 modified with reference to the consumption in the year 1940. New newspapers have been allowed to give scope for expression to political points of view not adequately represented in the existing Press or where they will be brought out in areas where there are no other daily newspapers at present. Quotas for such papers are generally settled taking into account the supply position and the minimum circulation required for each case.

CONSTRUCTION OF A BRIDGE OVER THE GANGES IN PATNA DISTRICT

215. *Mr. Madandhari Singh: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state the decision of Government to construct a bridge over the Ganges in the district of Patna?

(b) Where will be its location?

(c) What would be the approximate cost of its construction?

(d) When will the work of construction start?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) No decision has been taken.

(b) Nothing has been finally settled. Purely from an engineering point of view, the Mokameh Site is preferred. At the request of the Bihar Government, estimates of construction and maintenance costs of a bridge also at Patna are being prepared.

(c) The cost of construction of the bridge would be (i) Mokameh Site—about Rs. 4 crores, (ii) Patna Site—about Rs. 5 crores. Recurring costs at Patna are however likely to be much higher than those at Mokameh. These figures cannot, however, be accepted as firm estimates.

(d) It is not possible to reply to this part of the question at present.

Babu Ram Narayan Singh: When will this question be finally decided?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: The question is still under consideration and the plans are being examined and as soon as the alternative plans have been prepared, Government will take a decision one way or the other.

Babu Ram Narayan Singh: What is the approximate time the Government is likely to take in considering this question?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: These are engineering works. It is very difficult for me to say how long it will take. It all depends on the time the engineers will take to survey the situation afresh and prepare their new plans.

Mr. Madandhari Singh: In view of the fact that Patna is the capital town of Bihar it is the demand of the people of the province that the bridge over the Ganges should be constructed at Patna. Will the Honourable Member be pleased to approve the proposal of the construction of the bridge over the Ganges at Patna?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: In my reply to part (b) of the question I have already stated that the Bihar Government has requested us to reconsider the question and we are trying to do it.

PROJECTS FOR OPENING NEW LINES IN BIHAR

216. *Mr. Madandhari Singh: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state whether any new project for opening new lines in Bihar will be taken up during this financial year?

(b) If so, what are the details of the new project?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) The development plans of the E. I. and O. T. Railways include schemes for opening lines on five routes. Estimates for the survey of four of the routes have been received and sanctioned and survey reports in respect of two of these are expected to be received shortly, but it is not expected that they can be scrutinised and work commenced before the end of the current financial year.

(b) Details of the projects contemplated are given in a statement which has been laid on the table.

Statement of projects for opening new railway lines in Bihar

Name of route	Mileage	Name of the Railway	Stage reached
(i) Berhagaoon-Hazaribagh-Hazari- bagh Road-Giridih	225	E I	Survey estimate sanctioned Report not expected before August 1947
(ii) Gaya - Sherghati - Chatra- Ranchi	110	E I	Ditto
(iii) Siamarhi Sonbarsa	30	O T	Survey report expected to be received very shortly
(iv) Murl Ganj-Madhepura	18	O T	Ditto
(v) Chakia-Alaahia-Sidhwaha	27	O T	Survey estimate awaited from the O T. Railway

Babu Ram Narayan Singh: What are the new projects? May I know their names?

(The Honourable Mr M Asaf Ali then read out the statement laid on the table)

Babu Ram Narayan Singh: Have the alignments of the proposed railways been settled?

The Honourable Mr M Asaf Ali: I am afraid I must have notice of that question.

UTILIZATION OF DETERIORATED FOOD Lying WITH PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

217. *Mr. Vadial Lalubhai: (a) Will the Secretary of the Food Department be pleased to state if it is a fact that there are considerable stocks of food unfit for human consumption lying with various Provincial Governments which are from the allocations of foodstuffs made by the Central Government?

(b) If so, what is the extent thereof?

(c) What is the method of their disposal? Have Government thought of any scheme whereby the same can be put to the best possible use?

(d) Is it the policy of Government to give this deteriorated foodstuff for the production of starch to various starch factories at reasonable rates? If so, how much have Government distributed in this manner, and how much quantity still remains?

Mr B. R. Sen: (a) and (b) From time to time, from the stocks of foodgrains held by Provincial/State Governments, certain quantities do become unfit for human consumption due to deterioration. Statistics of deteriorated foodgrains at present with Provincial/State Governments are not available.

(c) and (d) The Government of India have asked Provincial/State Governments to offer stocks of deteriorated foodgrains and products unfit for human consumption and cattle feed to the Textile Commissioner and to the Starch Factories. They have also been asked to fix a ceiling price above which stocks will not be sold and it has been suggested that if a Starch Factory offers the ceiling price, the stocks should be sold to the Starch Factory in preference to other competitors. Information so far available, shows that a total quantity of about 5,730 tons of deteriorated foodgrains has been offered by the Provincial/State Governments to the Textile Commissioner since April last for distribution to Starch Factories.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: Are the Government aware that among the reasons there is one, namely, not fixing the price by the Provincial Governments in time for these various foodstuffs allocated and the grains were not released to the public for sale?

Mr. B. R. Sen: I have already replied that a ceiling price has been fixed and the foodgrains are being offered to the starch factories which offer the ceiling price

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: The deterioration of the foodgrains to the extent of 700,000 tons is due to a large extent to their not being released immediately after they were received in the provinces. For instance from the Central Provinces pulses are being sent to Madras but the inter-provincial arrangement regarding price is not fixed and it takes nearly four to six months. There is no liaison officer. Is it not due to this fact that much of this deterioration goes on? Will the Central and Provincial Governments set up a common department to fix up the prices immediately the grains arrive so that they may be released very soon?

Mr. B. R. Sen: I do not think that as a general statement what the Honourable Member says is correct. It may be that in particular cases the deterioration was due to causes such as mentioned.

Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai: What is the quantity of the deteriorated stuff which has been thrown away and what is the quantity that has been utilised?

Mr. B. R. Sen: I am not in a position to answer that question and I will explain why. It is not possible to say exactly what quantities have been wasted in this way nor what quantities have been saved by the protective measures that we have adopted.

Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai: Will the Honourable Member say what are the quantities saved, if he cannot say what quantity has been wasted?

Mr. B. R. Sen: I am not in a position to answer this question.

Sri V. C. Vellingur Gounder: Considering the large amount of deterioration of grains going on in all parts of the country, may I know whether they can fix up a certain date within which the grains or the pulses should be used whenever they are transported from the area of production to the area of consumption?

Mr. B. R. Sen: It is not possible to fix dates.

Sri V. C. Vellingur Gounder: Then how this deterioration is going to be prevented?

Mr. B. R. Sen: I have already answered that question.

Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai: Have the Government been able to distribute all the deteriorated foodgrains to the starch industry?

Mr. B. R. Sen: I do not think so.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: What are the special difficulties in the way of the Honourable Member getting correct statistics? Is it because the Provincial Governments refuse to give any information or is it because that the Government of India do not want it?

Mr. B. R. Sen: The Honourable Mr. Lawson has moved an amendment to my Food Motion and in replying to that I shall make the position clear.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: If my question

Mr. President: It is a question asking for information and the Honourable Member is going to give that information later.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: What about the question I asked? I stand up to my privilege. If my question was foolish you could have ruled it out, but if I have asked a question I want an answer now. I do not want to wait till the debate begins.

Mr. President: He has already given the answer—he said it would take time, and it is not fair to other questioners that time should be taken up in giving a long explanation over one question alone.

Mr. Abdur Rahman Siddiqi: I asked one point only, whether it was the laziness of the Government of India or the refusal of the Provincial Governments to give statistical information.

Mr. President: It appears from what the Honourable Member has said that the answer cannot be categorical, that he wants to explain somewhat in detail, and that will take some time

PROFITS TO IMPORTERS ON IMPORTS OF DYESTUFFS

218. *Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please lay on the table of the House the quantities of yearly imports of dyestuffs with its total value from the year 1937 to 1946, year by year?

(b) Is it a fact that Government allows under the Control Scheme 15 per cent profit on dyestuffs to importers and 65 per cent of margin to dealers?

(c) Are Government aware that this total profit of 80 per cent is found to be too high to the detriment of the consumer, in the shape of high prices for cloth which have to be fixed according to the cost of manufacture on the basis being the prices of several kinds of colours, chemicals, stores, etc.?

(d) In view of the imports being on a fairly large scale and in view of there being control on the production of dyed and printed cloth, do Government propose to remove control on the import of dyestuffs and its price regulation?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai. (a) A statement is placed on the table showing the value of the yearly imports during the period desired. Complete statistics regarding the tonnage involved during this period are not available, but on an average Rs one crore represents slightly over 1,000 tons of dyestuffs

(b) No, Sir. 15 per cent over landed cost is allowed to 'A' class importers, who have no selling licences. B' class importers, who are distributors of dyestuffs with a fairly large organisation, and who have selling licences, are allowed a margin of 50 per cent over landed cost. Other dealers such as repackers and retailers procure their supplies from B' class dealers and are allowed to sell to small consumers at a margin of 15 per cent over their purchase price. It has to be remembered that out of their margin dealers have to meet expenses on account of their distribution, organisation, technical personnel, laboratories, mixing, repacking, etc.

(c) The Honourable Member will see from what I have said that the final price, even for the smallest consumer, can in no case be more than 72½ per cent over the landed cost. In actual practice however, nearly all manufacturers of cloth get their requirements of dyes at well below these maximum prices. Owing to the small percentage of dyes involved in the manufacture of cloth, the price of cloth is not materially affected by the internal price of dyestuffs.

(d) Licences for imports of dyestuffs are issued freely, and the only control now maintained is on their price. The present level of imports is only about 50 per cent of India's requirements, and therefore Government do not consider that price control can be removed yet.

(for 10 months from 1st April 1945 to 31st January
1946).

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Is it a fact that even the biggest users have to buy in the retail market at the highest price?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I think it is conceivable that that happens in view of the great scarcity of this particular article

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: If it is a fact that only 50 per cent of the requirements are being imported, would it not be better to reduce dyeing by 50 per cent and remove the control on both import and prices?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: That is a matter which should be taken up in consultation with the industry because it involves questions not merely of marketing but of technique

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Is it not a fact that recently the dyeing percentage has been reduced by the industry?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: That is correct

Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: Could it not be further reduced?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: In regard to various stores of this kind, I think from time to time we have reduced the percentage of materials to be used per unit of production

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know if during the war any dyestuff manufacturing industry has been started in this country?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: It has not been started, but I understand proposals are being considered

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know what steps the Government of India are taking to assist this industry, in view of the shortage even now and nearly 172 per cent has to be paid for the dyestuffs?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I expect within a reasonable time the Indian dyestuff industry would be started, but the Honourable Member will realise that before we are in a position to produce in this country anything like the whole range of dyestuffs required here, we should have to set up a fairly elaborate organisation, which is going to take some time

USE OF DETERIORATED FOODSTUFFS AS SIZING FLOUR

219. *Mr. Vadilal Lallubhai: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state if Government are aware that big quantities of deteriorated foodstuff are lying all over the country which can be turned into sizing flour?

(b) Are Government aware that many Indian starch factories are manufacturing sizing flour for textile mills out of the deteriorated foodstuffs unfit for human consumption?

(c) If so, do Government propose to see that stocks of such sizing flour are first distributed to textile mills in preference to imported foreign starch under their control scheme in view of the necessity to protect the Indian starch industry?

(d) If so, are Government aware that there are considerable stocks lying with various starch factories which remain undistributed owing to the free imports of foreign starch?

(e) Have Government come across any unwillingness on the part of the Textile Industry to accept sizing flour produced from this deteriorated foodstuff?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: (a) Yes, Sir

(b) Yes, Sir

(c) Government do not think that the quantities of starch imported into the country are such that there should be any difficulty for a manufacturer of sizing flour in this country to dispose of any sizing material which is suitable for the use of textile mills. There appears to be some objection among textile mills for technical reasons to the general use of sizing material manufactured out of deteriorated foodstuffs. Government will however investigate the possibility of encouraging the use of such sizing material

(d) Government are aware that there are stocks of sizing flour lying unsold with various starch factories but are not sure that this is a consequence of the free imports of starch and sizing material. The quantities of foreign starch actually arriving in the country are believed to be well below the requirements of the Indian mills.

(e) Not all sizing flour produced from deteriorated foodstuffs provides sizing material of good quality. It is understandable that mills should be unwilling to purchase material of doubtful quality, but whether the unwillingness extends to good quality material produced out of deteriorated foodstuffs is a matter about which Government have no definite information. But as promised against item (c) above, Government propose to examine this question further.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know if the foreign starch is manufactured out of foodgrains or whether it is made of chemicals?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: As far as I know, it is largely made of foodgrains.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: How then do other countries which are suffering for want of foodgrains, make this starch out of foodgrains?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I would ask the Honourable Member to address that question to the countries concerned.

Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai: Is it not a fact that large quantities of sago flour—thousands of tons—have been imported and dumped into this country and that a great majority of the mills are full of this stuff, so that they do not require the Indian stuff any more for some time to come?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: They are imported, but I believe they are imported in quantities which still are well below the quantities required by Indian mills.

Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai: Is it not a fact that there are huge quantities of this sago flour which have been imported from foreign countries and which are lying in the mills and so they do not require any more of this stuff for the time being?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: The information of Government is that taking all the materials which are now in stock in the country, the position is still one of scarcity.

Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai: Will Government take action if it is proved to them that there is a burdensome stock of sago flour and that that is the reason why the Indian stuff is not taken by the mills with subsequent burdensome stocks with starch factories?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I should certainly like to get more information if the Honourable Member can give it to me and will take action.

CONTROLS UNDER THE INDUSTRIES AND SUPPLIES DEPARTMENT

220. *Mr. Vadilal Lalubhai: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state how many and which controls under the Industries and Supplies Department have ceased to be in force after the end of the War?

(b) How many and which controls still remain in force?

(c) Do Government propose to reduce the existing controls to a minimum in the immediate future?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: (a) and (b) A statement showing the Controls which ceased to be in force with effect from or prior to the 1st October 1946 and those which continue to be in force is placed on the table.

(c) The existing controls are the minimum which Government consider to be necessary in the public interest. An Inter-departmental Committee has been set up to scrutinise the Controls constantly with a view to revising or removing them in the light of changing circumstances.

Shri D. P. Karmarkar: Is the Honourable Member aware that under the provisions of the Paper Control Order now in force, no publisher who has begun publications after 1942 can get any permission from Government to publish any books?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I will inquire.

Shri D. P. Karmarkar: In view of the fact that what is being guaranteed to the publishers is simply registration as publishers and not any quota of paper, as such, is the Honourable Member prepared to reconsider that order and to keep the field open to all publishers irrespective of whether they published books prior to 1942 or not?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I will look into the matter.

Shri D. P. Karmarkar: The present newspaper control is effective in creating a monopoly for those newspapers which are already in existence and therefore will the Honourable Member reconsider the position with regard to all newspapers generally, which the Government considers are capable of doing their business efficiently?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: There was a question on the order paper regarding newsprint and I meant to say in reply to that that the position of newsprint as the result of the delegation which visited foreign countries recently is going to be considerably better in the near future. At present I think the average quantity which is available in the country, I am speaking off the record, is under 20,000 tons but I expect as the result of the successful efforts made by this delegation we should be in a position to receive at least 30,000 tons during next year and the position to that extent would be easier.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Will the Honourable Member examine the order of priorities which is fixed under some of these controls based on the position of the particular parties during the war or based on war service or so called A R P and other services and if the controls must continue will Government re-examine the position of priorities or the basis on which such priorities are based? I am not referring merely to paper. I am referring to all controls.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: That opens up a very large issue. In view of the interest which is felt by Honourable Members in the general subject of controls, in connection with a Bill which I am going to introduce later, during the consideration stage regarding the continuance of controls over certain essential commodities, I expect it will be possible for Honourable Members to have an opportunity of expressing their views on the general problem.

Mr. Manu Subedar: Will the Honourable Member call a meeting of the Advisory Committee of his Department and place the issues before them and seek their advice on this subject?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: I will.

Mr. Leslie Gwilt: Will the Honourable Member tell the House the position of steel and steel control and what effect the latter has had on the supply of steel?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: The position with regard to steel control is that last April we decided to remove the control as regards the purchase of steel and the result was not an improvement in the situation but a definite deterioration and in consequence of that it was considered necessary by Government to re-institute the system of licences for the purchase of steel. The situation with regard to production in this country today is in my opinion grave, partly on account of the coal shortage and partly on account of labour troubles and the whole question therefore is under the active consideration of Government. Meanwhile we are issuing certain rules regarding the lines on which further control is to be maintained.

Mr. N. M. Joshi: In view of the discussion on the general subject of controls and de-controlling, will the Honourable Member circulate to the Members the statement which he has laid on the table today, as well as other documents regarding this subject?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Yes, Sir.

REVISION OF CONVENTION re SEPARATION OF RAILWAY FINANCE FROM GENERAL FINANCE

†221. *Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Railways please state what action is proposed to be taken for the purpose of undertaking an examination of the question of revision of the Convention on which the separation of Railway Finance from General Finances has been based?

(b) What progress has been made in the collection of all essential data, particularly with reference to the lives of the assets, including obsolescence, and the consequent normal rate of contribution to the Depreciation Fund etc., to enable a comprehensive examination of the problem?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) and (b) The Railway Convention Committee appointed by the Legislative Assembly in March 1943, considered that the revision of the Convention depends upon the quantum of surplus falling due for division, and involves

(i) a re-examination of the annual contribution to the Depreciation Fund, necessitating a comprehensive enquiry into the lives of assets including their obsolescence, the effect of the level of prices on the Fund, etc., and

(ii) an examination of other closely connected questions, such as provision for amortisation of capital, Betterment Fund, the question of a fixed contribution to General Revenues, the correct method of calculating interest on capital-at-charge and the allocation of replacement cost of an asset,

As announced in a Press Note, dated 26th April, 1946, the Railway Board had embarked on a detailed investigation of the above problems. A Betterment Fund was instituted with effect from 1st April, 1946, and the consequential changes in allocation rules have been made. The comprehensive enquiry into the lives of assets has been practically completed and the working out of the normal rate of contribution to the Fund, on the revised basis, has been taken in hand. The effect of the level of prices on the Depreciation Fund requires no special investigation but it will have to be considered whether the existing rules of charging replacement costs to the Fund can be regarded as sound when the appropriation is made on the basis of original cost. Government hope to be able to formulate their decisions in time to be able to ask the House in the Budget Session, 1947 to appoint a Committee to examine the whole question of the permanent revision of the Convention.

PROPOSED ELECTRIFICATIONS OF EAST INDIAN, BENGAL NAGPUR AND BENGAL ASSAM RAILWAYS

†222. *Mr. K. C. Neogy: Will the Honourable Member for Railways be pleased to state what progress has been made in the consideration of the question of electrification of certain sections of the East Indian, Bengal Nagpur, and Bengal Assam Railways?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: The Railway Department have under consideration the electrification of the following sections of the three railways mentioned in the question

Railway	Suburban	Main line
(i) B A . . .	Sealdah-Ranaghat-Krishnagar City
„ . . .	Sealdah-Budge Budge and allied sections	..
(ii) B N.	Howrah-Tatanagar.
(iii) E. I. . .	.	Burdwan-Gaya Moghalsera.
„ . . .	Howrah-Bandel-Burdwan
„ . . .	Howrah-Burdwan chord	. .

†Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent

Of the two proposals for main line electrification the E I Railway's preliminary report on the Burdwan-Moghalsera scheme is being referred immediately to the Consulting Electrical Engineers to Government for their expert opinion. In the other case, namely, the Howrah-Tatanagar scheme, the B N Railway has been asked to submit a preliminary report.

In the case of suburban electrification schemes railways have already carried out preliminary investigations, but before proceeding further with them it is proposed to consult the Government of Bengal regarding the setting up of a Terminal Facilities Committee to go into the whole matter of railway facilities in and around Calcutta. The Committee's terms of reference would include the question of what additional suburban railways would be necessary, what portion of the suburban services of the three railways should be electrified and what facilities are required for the reception and quick dispersal of suburban passengers.

REVISION OF RATING POLICY OF RAILWAYS

†223. *Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Railways please state whether the question of a revision of the rating policy of the Railways, has been initiated? If so what progress has been made in this matter?

(b) Have Government come to any tentative conclusions regarding the broad lines on which a revision of the rating policy of the Railways should follow, apart from the question of revising the rates structure?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) Yes. Investigation into the possibility of simplifying the rates structure was commenced in 1944 and is proceeding. The subject is of considerable complexity and involves the examination of many different and difficult problems. The introduction of telescopic "class" rates on a continuous mileage basis without unduly affecting revenue is now considered to be a practical proposition and the investigation is proceeding towards this end. A factual test is to be made with one class of traffic early next year. A Committee of Rates Experts has been appointed to carry out the work of revision of the rates structure and make recommendations to the Railway Board. Before finalising the proposed new scales of rates commercial interests will be consulted.

(b) No conclusions, other than those relating to the revision of the rating structure, have as yet been reached by Government. There are various aspects of this matter which are under examination by the investigating officer, assisted by the Committee of Rates Experts.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE ROAD ROLLER COMMISSION

†224. *Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to refer to starred question Nos 1207 and 1208, dated the 25th March, 1946, regarding Road Rollers indentured from United Kingdom, and state whether the recommendations of the Road Roller Commission have been communicated to Indian Industrialists and manufacturers? Will the Honourable Member please lay a copy of the Report in the Library of this House?

(b) What has been the result of the consultation with Indian industrialists and manufacturers stated to have been made in this matter [vide clause (c) of the answer to starred question No 1208]?

(c) Will the Honourable Member be pleased to place on the table of the House a statement showing the number of Road Rollers already ordered from different countries abroad, indicating the cost thereof? In what period will these Rollers be actually available in India?

(d) Will the Honourable Member please place on the table of the House a statement showing the number of Road Rollers already acquired from military surplus stores in India and the cost involved, as also the number of Rollers, or their component parts, ordered from Indian industrialists and manufacturers, and the total cost involved?

†Answer to this question laid on the table, the questioner being absent.

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: (a) The object of the Road Roller Mission was to advise Government as to the facilities available in the Ordnance Factories for the manufacture of Road Rollers. On the basis of these recommendations the Government of India negotiated with Indian firms possessing capacity for the production of such component parts as could be made in India. As regards the publication of the report, I would refer the Honourable Member to the answer given to part (c) of his question No 1208, on the 25th March 1946. A copy of the Press Note placed on the table of the House.

(b) Orders have been placed with the Tata Engineering and Locomotive Manufacturing Co., for manufacturing 1000 Steam Rollers and with Jessop and Co., for 500 Diesel Rollers in co-operation with manufacturers in the United Kingdom and the Indian Ordnance Factories.

(c) A statement is placed on the table of the House.

(d) No Road Rollers have been declared surplus by the Military Authorities. According to information at present available 56 Road Rollers have been taken over from American surpluses. A trial order for 24 Road Rollers to be manufactured entirely in India at a cost of Rs. 5,28,000 has been placed with Messrs. Cooper Engineering Co., Ltd. The cost of component parts for the 1500 Road Rollers mentioned in reply to parts (a) and (b) is not yet known as the final details of the components which will have to be imported have not been fully worked out.

PRESS NOTE

ROAD ROLLERS FOR INDIA

ORDNANCE FACTORIES AND INDIAN FIRMS TO PRODUCE

TECHNICAL INFORMATION FROM U K

One thousand Steam and five hundred Diesel Road Rollers of the British type will be manufactured by Indian Ordnance factories and certain Indian firms in co-operation with manufacturers in the U K, as a result of the recommendations of the Road Rollers Mission which visited India early this year and the negotiations carried on by the Government of India with the representatives of British concerns.

It is hoped that this will go a long way to meet the large demand for Road Rollers in connection with the Road Development Schemes of the Central and Provincial Governments and Indian States and pave the way for the eventual manufacture of complete units of road making machinery in the country.

The entire scheme will cost about Rs. 4,40,00,000, nearly 40 per cent of which will be incurred in the Indian Ordnance factories and the rest in Indian and associated British concerns. Deliveries are expected to start early next year for completion within two years.

The terms agreed upon provide inter alia that jigs, patterns, drawings, designs, and other technical information will be made available in the country and that such technical personnel and co-ordinating cells as may be required by the Ordnance Factories and other firms concerned will be provided by the contracting British firms.

The arrangements are that complete boiler and gear units in respect of steam rollers and engines and gear units in respect of Diesel rollers will be imported from the U K and the rest manufactured in the Ordnance factories and two Indian firms. Erection, assembly, commissioning and servicing will be done entirely in India.

A trial order for twelve Diesel road rollers is proposed to be placed on an Indian firm. Efforts are also being continued to locate capacity which will enable the manufacture of complete road rollers in India.

The visit of the Road Rollers Mission, consisting of the representatives of the British Road Roller Industry selected by the India Office on the advice of the Board of Trade and the Federation of Contractors' Plant, was arranged by the Government of India in consultation with the Secretary of State. The Mission visited the various Indian Ordnance factories and reported to the Government on the possibility of utilization of the plant, tools, personnel and the general facilities available. The Mission also discussed with the Government of India the terms on which the manufacturers in the U K would be prepared to co-operate with the scheme. Subsequently the present agreement was arrived at between the Government of India and the manufacturers in the U K.

Mr. B. E. Sen: The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to the reply to part (b) of unstarred question No 10, by Mr K C Neogy in the Legislative Assembly on the 28th October, 1946

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable Member be pleased to state the extent to which during the last week the distribution of food suffered on account of transport problems in East Bengal?

Mr. B. E. Sen: I cannot give you the exact information but the Government of Bengal are trying their best to rush supplies to East Bengal not only by the normal means of transport but also by air transport Sreejut Rohini Kumar Chaudhuri: In order to prevent deterioration of food in East Bengal, will the Honourable Member state whether he will send some quantities of food to Assam for feeding the Noakhali refugees?

Mr. B. E. Sen: Assam is a surplus province and there has been no demand from the Assam Government for supplies from the Centre in order to feed the few refugees who have gone there

STARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

R M S. REST HOUSE IN CHANDNI CHOWK, DELHI

227. *Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: (a) Will the Secretary of the Communications Department please state whether it is a fact that the R M S. officials in the R M S Rest House in Chandni Chowk, Delhi, are quite comfortable there?

(b) If the reply to (a) above is in the negative do Government propose to take steps to improve the lot of the officials in connection therewith?

Sir Harold Shoovert: (a) It is a fact that owing to neglect of maintenance by the owner of the building the officials concerned are not as comfortable as Government would wish them to be

(b) The matter is already engaging the attention of Government

RETIREMENT OF OFFICIALS WITH 25 YEARS' SERVICE ON FULL PENSION

228. *Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Will the Secretary of the Communications Department please state whether in view of unemployment Government propose to consider the question of retirement of all those officials who have put in 25 years of service with full pension benefits?

Sir Harold Shoovert: The questions (Nos 228 and 229) should have been addressed to the Honourable the Home Member. They have accordingly been transferred to the list of questions for the 13th November 1940 when it will be answered by the Honourable the Home Member

Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: In case there is any in stake when questions are being addressed, will the Department concerned return them to the Assembly Department and ask them to make the necessary correction and send it to the proper department? After all it has been printed on the Order Paper and may I know why the Honourable Member cannot reply to it?

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Last session you gave a ruling that if a question is wrongly addressed it should be sent to the department concerned, instead of saying that the question should have been addressed to such and such a department

Mr. President: It is already being done. When the lists are printed, there is no other alternative but to inform the House that the question has been transferred to such and such a department

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: The answer will not be given this session

Mr. President: The Answer will be given on the 13th November by the Honourable the Home Member

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar: May I know from the Honourable Member how he has tried to carry out this principle that persons who are superannuated are not entertained or retired? I am asking about the Honourable Member's own department. He can reply to the question so far as his department is concerned

Sir Harold Shoovert: I am quite prepared to answer that question. The reason why this question was transferred to the Honourable the Home Member is that the matter is one of general policy, which must be laid down by the Government of India for all Departments. We cannot have unilateral action on the part of one Department. My Honourable friend has now asked what steps have been taken to stop re-employment of men who have been superannuated. The answer is that normally men in the gazetted ranks above the age of 55 are not being kept in employment. Men in the non-gazetted ranks, who were employed before 1938, are, according to the rule, able to be retained in employment, if they remain mentally and physically efficient, up to the age of 60. That is the position in our Department which is being followed

Mr. President: No more supplementary questions as the question time is now over

CANCELLATION OF EXTENSION GRANTED TO OFFICIALS

†229. *Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Will the Secretary of the Communications Department please state whether extension granted to the officials already in service will be withdrawn to provide employment for the younger generation?

(b) WRITTEN ANSWERS

CORRUPTION IN THE ENGINEERING BRANCH OF THE POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS DEPARTMENT

230. *Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Will the Secretary of the Communications Department please state whether Government are aware that there is great corruption in the Engineering Branch of the Posts and Telegraphs Department and if so whether any special staff is maintained to keep down the corruption?

Sir Harold Shoobert: Government have no reason at all to believe that there is great corruption in the Branch of the Posts and Telegraphs Department mentioned by the Honourable Member although a few cases of alleged corruption and malpractice have been brought to their notice which are being investigated. Such few cases do not call for the setting up of a special staff.

PROMOTION OF INSPECTORS OF POST OFFICES

231. *Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Will the Secretary of the Communications Department please state

(a) if it is a fact that the Inspectors of Post Offices who were nominated for appointment as Superintendents of Post Offices and who proceeded on Field Service are being made permanent in the alternative vacancies in the Superintendents cadre,

(b) if it is a fact that this concession was not given to them when they proceeded on Field Service and has been given only in 1945,

(c) if it is a fact that the inferior servants of the Posts and Telegraphs Department who had worked as Clerks for six months in the civil and clerks who had qualified in the Inspectors Examination were deputed to the Field Service on the condition that after completion of 12 months satisfactory service they will become eligible for permanent appointment,

(d) if it is a fact that no vacancies have been reserved for them in the cadres for which they become eligible, and

(e) if the replies to parts (a) to (d) above are in the affirmative will Government state whether the officials mentioned in part (c) above will be appointed in the alternative vacancies in the cadres for which they have become eligible?

Sir Harold Shoobert: (a) No

(b) Does not arise

(c) Yes

(d) No reservation of particular vacancies in the Inspectors' cadre has been made, but the names of eligible candidates are to be brought on to the list of officials approved for appointment upon completion of 12 months' satisfactory service in the field. The inferior servants who become eligible for promotion to the clerical cadre in consideration of service rendered while in the field with Army Postal units are to be appointed against the departmental quota of 20 per cent posts reserved for promotion of postmen and inferior staff to the clerical grades.

(e) No. The officials referred to are, however, likely to be absorbed permanently in the higher grades in due course.

EXPRESS DELIVERY OF INLAND AIR MAIL LETTERS

232. *Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Will the Secretary of the Communications Department please state whether it is a fact that inland air mail letters are surcharged at the rate of one anna and are delivered by special messengers or by effecting special delivery? If so, what is the propriety of express delivery for which two annas are charged?

†For answer to this question, see answer to question No 228

Sir Harold Shobert: There is a surcharge on inland air mail letters of one anna per tola or part thereof payable in addition to ordinary postage. Special arrangements for the delivery of inland air mail letters exist at a few places only. It has been necessary to make these arrangements because the air mails at these places arrive after the ordinary deliveries of the day have gone out from post offices. In regard to the last part of the question, I would explain that letters upon which an Express Delivery charge is paid are, on receipt at the office of destination, treated in the same way as telegrams.

UTILIZATION OF INFERIOR STAFF FOR COOLIE JOBS BY POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS OFFICERS

233. Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Will the Secretary of the Communications Department please state whether Government are aware that the services of the inferior staff, etc., are utilised for coolies job when the Posts and Telegraphs Officers are out on tour? If so, whether these inferior servants are paid for the work done by them on such occasions?

Sir Harold Shobert: The question as framed by the Honourable Member does not indicate precisely what information is required. I may state that Government have received no complaints or representations upon this subject, but I am prepared to make enquiries if the Honourable Member can quote any particular cases in which the services of the inferior Posts and Telegraphs staff have been improperly utilised.

INCREASED PAY TO CIRCLE OFFICE OFFICIALS IN POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS DEPARTMENT

234. Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Will the Secretary of the Communications Department please state

(a) if it is a fact that the new scale of the 1st Division Clerks of the Circle Offices of the Post and Telegraph Department has been fixed higher than the old scale,

(b) if it is a fact that their pay has been raised by 5 per cent by the Adjudicator's Award, and

(c) if the replies to parts (a) and (b) above are in the affirmative, whether the Circle Office Officials in the old scale of pay will also be given the benefit of increase of pay by 5 per cent?

Sir Harold Shobert: (a) No, except only for the Circle offices at Nagpur and Patna

(b) Yes

(c) Yes, in the case of officials of the class referred to serving in the Circle offices at Karachi, Lucknow, Lahore, Nagpur and Patna, where the old scales of pay are either slightly lower than the revised scales introduced with effect from 1931, or identical with those scales. In other places where the old scales are higher than the revised scales, no increase is to be given to officials drawing pay in the old scales.

WHITE PAPER SCHEME re RAIL ROAD COORDINATION

235. Mr. P. B. Gole: Will the Honourable Member for Transport be pleased to state

(a) whether it is a fact that the policy as explained in the white paper regarding rail-road co-ordination scheme is still being pursued by the Government of India,

(b) whether it is a fact that the recommendations of the majority of ad-hoc Committee appointed by this Assembly regarding the part to be taken by the railways in the rail-road co-ordination, are being followed by Government, and

(c) whether Government intend to open new lines of Railways, if so, whether the new lines are meant for strategic purposes or for meeting commercial and passenger needs?

The Honourable Mr M Asaf Ali (a) and (b) The Honourable Member's attention is invited to the reply given on 28th October 1946 to question No 9 asked by Sri Mangil Singh. This contains a statement of the Indian Government's policy.

(c) Government have under survey investigation various new lines totalling about 5000 miles both for strategic purposes and for meeting commercial needs. A statement giving the list of such projects is laid on the table. The construction of these lines will be considered when the survey reports are received and examined.

The above programme includes about 1066 miles of lines recommended by the Defence Department for strategic purposes, out of which about 420 miles of lines have also been recommended by Provincial Governments as civil projects.

INTRODUCTION OF SKELTON'S GUIDEWAYS SYSTEM OF TRANSPORT BETWEEN VILLAGES BY RAILWAYS

236. Mr. P. B. Gole: Will the Honourable Member for Transport be pleased to state whether Government are aware that the skelton's guideways system demonstrated to the Officers of the Railway Board, at Dapuri near Poona in 1937-39, and recently in the Jamnagar State is a cheaper and more convenient form of transport and has a greater hauling power? If so, do Government propose to introduce it as means of communication between villages?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: No officer of the Railway Board was present at the demonstrations of the Skelton guideways system at Dapuri near Poona in 1937-39 or in the Jamnagar State later on. In 1939 the Board arranged for a Railway Officer to examine a project of the guideways system for the Kashmir State. On the findings of the Railway Officer His Highness' Government decided to drop the idea of experimenting with the scheme.

As matters stand at present, there is no proposal for the Railway Department to embark on an experiment which requires to be tried out.

REDUCED INTERIM RELIEF PAID TO VIZAGAPATAM PORT WORKMEN

237. *Sri N. Narayanamurthi: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Railways please state if Government are aware that while all the employees of the Central Government are given interim relief at Rs 8/4/- per mensem, the Vizagapatam Port workmen alone are being paid at only Rs 4/8/- and that too only from April last and with no retrospective effect as in the case of the others who were paid from July 1945?

(b) If so, do Government propose to remove this discrimination?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) Central Government servants in Civil Departments other than the Railway and Posts and Telegraphs Departments, who were in service on the 1st July, 1946, have been granted interim relief with retrospective effect from 1st July 1945 as follows —

(i) Addition to pay at Rs 3 per mensem, for those on a pay up to and including Rs 40 per mensem, and at Rs 4-8-0 per mensem for those on a pay above Rs 40 per mensem and up to Rs 250 per mensem, and

(ii) Compensatory allowance for those on a pay up to Rs 300 per mensem at a flat rate of Rs 3-12-0 per mensem in areas where the supply of foodstuffs at concessional rates to Central Government servants has not been arranged by the Government of India

The staff of the Vizagapatam Port prior to 1st April, 1946, from which date the Port came under the administrative control of the Bengal Nagpur Railway, were eligible for relief in accordance with the above orders for the period from 1st July, 1945 to 31st March, 1946, and instructions to pay them the relief in accordance with these orders were issued on 19th October, 1946. From 1st April, 1946 the staff of the Vizagapatam Port are treated as railway servants and are entitled to relief on the scale sanctioned for other railway servants, i.e., at a flat rate of Rs 4-8-0 per mensem, grantshop concessions being admissible in addition.

(b) In view of the position as explained in the reply to part (a) above the question does not arise.

VICTORY BONUS TO VIZAGAPATAM HARBOUR AND PORT WORKMEN

238. *Sri N. Narayanamurthi: Will the Honourable Member for Railways please state

(a) whether Government are aware that the "Victory Bonus" given to all Military services was not extended to the Vizagapatam Harbour and Port workmen, who were directly under the War Department till April, 1946, and who underwent the worst privations and risks of war including Japanese aerial bombing, and

(b) whether Government propose to extend the said Bonus to them also, as recommended by the Madras Port Trust and in the same manner as it was applied in the case of the Madras Port workers?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) Victory Bonus has not been allowed to employees of the Vizagapatam Port. It must, however, be explained that the award in the case of military services was not a Victory Bonus but a War Gratuity. The latter has not been granted to the Defence of India personnel, including such personnel on Railways, Posts and Telegraphs and Ports, except in the case of those who drew military rates of pay when serving in field service areas.

(b) As stated in the reply to Diwan Chaman Lall's Starred Question in this House on the 14th March 1946, Victory Bonus has not been allowed to Government employees. Staff of the Madras Port Trust are employees of a non-Government body. Government do not propose to treat Vizagapatam Harbour and Port workmen differently from other Government employees.

PROPOSAL BY BENGAL NAGPUR RAILWAY TO DIVERT THROUGH PASSENGER TRAINS BETWEEN MADRAS AND CALCUTTA FROM SIMHACHALAM TO ANAKAPALLI DIRECT

239. *Sri N. Narayanamurthi: Will the Honourable Member for Railways please state:

(a) whether there is any proposal by the authorities of the Bengal Nagpur Railway to divert all the Mail and Passenger and other through trains between Madras and Calcutta from Simhachalam to Anakapalli direct without touching Waltair and thus reduce the present Simhachalam-Waltair section of the main-line into a branch-line,

(b) if the reply to part (a) above is in the affirmative, when, by whom and for what reasons, this proposal was made,

(c) whether, Government are aware, that such a step is bound to be not only harmful to the best interests of the Vizagapatam City and Port, but also diametrically opposite to the recent recommendations of the Technical Committee for the development of Ports regarding the future expansion and development of the possibilities of Vizagapatam Harbour and ship-building yards, and

(d) whether Government propose to stop any such move on the part of the Bengal Nagpur Railway authorities and consider an alternative plan of developing the present Waltair Railway Station into a first class junction Station and connecting it with new lines?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali. (a) and (b) The Bengal Nagpur Railway administration are considering a proposal to run the Madras-Calcutta Mails via Simhachalam North Station instead of Waltair as at present, and the proposal is under examination in consultation with the M & S M Railway authorities. There is no intention at present to extend the proposal to include other passenger trains. Should it be decided to effect this change, the Bengal Nagpur Railway will provide convenient shuttle services between Simhachalam North and Vizagapatam Town, connecting with Up and Down mail trains. These shuttle trains will be provided with "Through" coaches to and from Vizagapatam Town with accommodation for luggage and mails. The "Through" coaches will afford considerable convenience to passengers from Vizagapatam Town and Waltair since they will be able to secure accommodation from the start of their journey whereas at present they have to face the uncertainty of finding accommodation in a through train passing Waltair station.

It is estimated that the proposed diversion will reduce the time taken at present for the journey between Calcutta and Madras by approximately 45 minutes by eliminating that portion of the present journey from Gopalapatnam to Waltair which is considered necessary only for passengers travelling to and from Vizagapatam Town and Waltair.

(c) Government endorse the opinion of the Railway administration that the proposal, if adopted, will neither be harmful to the interests of Vizagapatam City, nor affect the development and expansion of the port.

(d) Since the proposal is designed to accelerate the journey for through passengers between Calcutta and Madras for whom the mail trains are primarily intended, while at the same time providing an improved service for passengers to and from Vizagapatam Town and Waltair, Government consider that it would not be in the public interest to stop further consideration of the proposal.

As regards Waltair station the Bengal Nagpur Railway have under consideration the improvement of facilities for the travelling public at that station.

NUMBER OF FOOD SHIPS WHICH ARRIVED IN INDIA SINCE JANUARY 1946

242. Mr. Manu Subedar (a) Will the Secretary of the Food Department please state how many food ships have arrived in India from January, 1946 and at which ports they were landed?

(b) Why was it found necessary to take food ships to the port of Karachi, which is itself an exporting port?

(c) What arrangements have Government made for storage, landing and bagging at different ports for the requirements of the deficit areas in food?

(d) Have Government any information of the articles which the ships, that brought food to India, carried and what was the freight rate charged on (i) bringing food to India, and (ii) taking other cargo from India?

Mr. B. R. Sen: (a) From the first January to 24th October 233 ships carrying foodgrains have arrived in India. I place a statement on the table of the House showing the number of ships which arrived at each port during each month of this period.

(b) Though Karachi is an exporting port, some imports had to be brought there at certain times of the year to meet shortages in areas normally served by Sind and the Punjab. It will be seen from the statement which I have just placed on the table that during the period January to April 16 ships were received at Karachi, during May and June six, none in July and August and four full ships and three part cargoes in September and October. Early in the year the North of India had exhausted wheat surpluses and it was necessary to bring grain to Karachi to meet deficits in Delhi, N W F P and similar other deficit areas. During July and August when the surpluses of Sind and the Punjab were available, no ships were brought in. Now that these surpluses are exhausted, grain must be brought to Karachi in order not merely to feed these areas but also to repay the loans of wheat which we have taken from Sind, Bahawalpur and the Punjab.

(c) The Government of India have appointed Clearing Agents at various ports whose business it is to clear and bag the grain and to deliver it in accordance with Government's instructions.

(d) Information regarding the cargo carried away by the ships in question from India and the freight charged on that cargo is not readily available. A statement showing the freight charged for food from various countries is placed on the table of the House.

CONSTITUTIONAL POSITION OF MEMBERSHIP OF INDIA OF INTERNATIONAL BODIES
e.g. COMBINED FOOD BOARD

243. Mr. Manu Subedar: (a) Will the Secretary of the Food Department please state the manner in which India has been saddled with the membership of international bodies, such as the Combined Food Board, and the Combined Raw Materials Board, and what is the constitutional position in respect of these at the present moment?

(b) In how many such Boards is India involved?

(c) What is the influence of these Boards with regard to the (i) fixing of prices, and (ii) quantity exported to different destinations?

(d) Have Government received any protest against the fixing of prices in India of some of the materials through this machinery, and, if so, in which cases, and which are the articles that are affected in this manner, apart from tea, rubber, jute, shellac, iron and hides?

(e) Is it a fact that the interests of the Indian producer of raw materials were adversely affected through the operation of these Boards?

(f) When and in what manner do Government propose that India should be free to deal with these topics in India instead of in London, as has been the case hitherto?

Mr. B. R. Sen: (c), (b), (e) and (f) So far as India's relationship with International Food Organisations is concerned, the attention of the Honourable Member is drawn to the opening portion of the "Memorandum on the Food position in India" laid on the table of the House at the beginning of this Session. The Combined Raw Materials Board and the Combined Production and Resources Board were dissolved long ago. India, however, still continues to be a Member of the Combined Textiles Committee at Washington. I lay on the table a copy of a document giving terms of reference and procedure of the Combined Textiles Committee. The Committee has no control over the fixation of prices of goods for export.

(d) This does not arise.

(e) No, Sir.

March 29, 1946

COMBINED TEXTILE COMMITTEE

Terms of Reference and Procedure

The United Nations continues to face substantial deficits in cotton textile products. This condition requires co-ordination of all cotton textile resources in order to insure the most equitable possible distribution.

The Combined Textile Committee at its first meeting on March 29, 1946 adopted the following terms of reference and outline of procedure as a means to ensuring an equitable distribution of limited supplies. In adopting these terms of reference the Committee recognizes the right of each country to direct its own export through its appropriate national agencies and believes that Combined Textile Committee recommendations should cover only such adjustments as appear necessary to ensure effective co-ordination. It is understood that the fiscal and trade arrangements necessary to carry out national export programmes are solely the responsibility of the national fiscal authorities concerned.

1 Terms of Reference — To recommend to member governments the minimum quantities of broad woven cotton goods and cotton yarn to be made available by them for export to the several importing countries including liberated territories having regard to minimum requirements for maintaining essential civilian standards and preventing disease and unrest to the ability of particular importing countries or agencies to procure such goods from the different main exporting markets and their opportunities of procurement from unallocated sources, and to the responsibility of all the main exporting countries to share in relieving the world shortage of cotton textiles, to advise on the distribution of any stocks or export capacity of conquered countries in textiles and textile products as may be required for these purposes.

2 Procedure — (a) Production and its Allocation — About one month prior to the beginning of each quarter or allocation period (which may be three months, six months or a year, depending upon which best suits the planning of national agencies concerned) the national supply agencies of each country should file through its member on the Committee a statement as to the anticipated production of cotton broad woven goods during the coming quarter or allocation period and the division of this production as between the major claimants.

(b) Requirements and Export Allocations — The export agencies of the supplying countries should file with the Committee through their respective members, about one month prior to the beginning of the quarter or allocation period, a statement on cotton broad woven goods, setting forth:

(1) The total screened valdage import requirements of each country to whom exports are proposed for the coming quarter together with a supporting statement, where necessary.

(2) The amount which it is intended to allocate to each country for the coming quarter, or allocation period.

(c) Staff Recommendations — The Staff of the Combined Textile Committee after an analysis of the information contained in 1 and 2 above, and taking into account probable supplies from non member countries, will develop a combined programme recommending such adjustments in the distribution of each country's export programme as appear appropriate to secure an equitable distribution as is possible of available supplies particularly to areas which are seriously undersupplied.

(d) Committee Recommendation — The Committee members will review the Staff Recommendation and agree upon a final recommendation to be transmitted by each member to the agency in his country responsible for the allocation of cotton broad woven goods for export. This Recommendation should be issued prior to the beginning of a quarter or the allocation period.

(e) Residual Allocations — Each member will transmit to the Committee any amendments which are made in the Combined Export Programme as issued by the Committee. It is understood that in the event an importing country is unable to take up all or part of any approved allocation the national allocating agency shall inform the Combined Textile Committee as to the reallocation of this amount.

DISPOSAL OF TEXTILES BY DISPOSALS BOARD

244. *Mr. Manu Subedar: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state the total quantity of textiles disposed of by the Disposals Board and how much total quantity still remains?

(b) What is the total quantity of ready-made clothes imported into India since the stoppage of hostilities?

(c) Have Government any information about the trade in second-hand clothing and, if so, have Government considered whether this trade should continue unrestricted and unchecked?

(d) Has any fumigation by chemical cleaning of second-hand clothing imported from abroad been done?

(e) Are Government aware that poor people are buying such clothing?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: (a) A statement is laid on the table showing the total quantities of cotton textiles disposed of and remaining for disposal

(b) Statistics in respect of imports of second-hand clothing are maintained in terms of value. The total value of such imports for the twelve months' period July 1945 to June 1946 amounted to Rs 19,41,460

(c) Government do not see any present necessity to interfere with the second-hand clothing trade

(d) Enquiries are being made

STEPS TO ENCOURAGE BUILDING OF HOUSES IN INDIA

245. *Mr Manu Subedar: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state the steps that Government have taken to encourage the building of houses in India?

(b) Have the Provincial Governments made any requests in the matter of control of steel, cement, timber and change of priority and for assistance in the matter of railway priority for building material?

(c) If so, what Provincial Governments and with what results and what was the response from the Central Government?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: (a) The Government of India have urged upon Provincial Governments the desirability of taking all possible measures to stimulate the building of houses and have requested them to set up Building Materials Panels with this object

(b) and (c) The Bombay Government suggested that the best method of encouraging building of houses might be to remove control over steel and cement. The Government of India removed their control over steel, but they have been compelled recently to reimpose the steel control owing to fall in production and the inadequate supplies now available. The Cement Control lapsed on the 1st October 1946, but has been reimposed by many of the provinces. Here also a central control may become necessary. In both cases however the Control will amount to the allocation of provincial quotas and the provincial governments will be left free to make quantities available for the construction of houses and buildings.

MONEY REALISED BY DISPOSALS

246. *Mr. Manu Subedar: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state the total amount of money realised by disposals month by month since the disposal work began?

(b) How and for what purpose are the moneys falling in the hands of Government used?

(c) How much is the estimated further realisation from the disposals?

(d) How much of the American material has been disposed of and how much remains to be disposed of?

(e) How much Government expect to pay to the Government of the United States of America in respect of the excess payable to them on this account in respect of American material?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: (a) I regret that monthly figures are not readily available over the whole field. These are being collected and will be laid on the table in due course. From November 1943 to September 1946 total realisations were Rs 55.15 crores.

(b) Proceeds from the disposal of surpluses are not earmarked for any specific purpose. Those from the disposal of India-owned surpluses are credited to the General Revenues of the Government of India and those from the disposal of U.K.-owned surpluses are credited to H.M.G.

(c) It is not possible to furnish an estimate in view of the uncertain factor involved.

(d) Approximately 40,000 motor vehicles and trailers and 60,000 tons of other stores were disposed of up to 30th September 1946. About 2,000 motor vehicles and 476,000 tons of other stores remain.

(e) The bulk of the American material remains to be disposed of. Here again it is not possible to estimate the final total realisation and consequently the total amount payable therefrom to the United States of America.

RETENTION OF SOME OF THE RULES OF DEFENCE OF INDIA ACT UNDER SPECIAL ORDINANCES

247. *Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: Will the Honourable the Law Member be pleased to state

(a) if it is a fact that some of the rules framed under the Defence of India Act are still retained in original or repeated under special Ordinances,

(b) if so, what those rules are which are still in force, and

(c) the justification of the Government of India for not withdrawing these rules?

The Honourable Mr. Jogendra Nath Mandal: (a) and (b) The Emergency Provisions (Continuance) Ordinance, 1946, promulgated on the 25th September, continues in force with or without modification the provisions of the Defence of India Rules mentioned in the Schedule to the Ordinance to which the Honourable Member may refer. The Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Ordinance, 1946, promulgated on the same day, which was made in pursuance of the India (Central Government and Legislature) Act, 1946, provides for the maintenance of controls over the commodities mentioned in clause (a) of section 2 of the Ordinance and substantially reproduces the provisions of the Defence of India Rules under which such controls were previously exercised. The Requisitioned Land (Continuance of Powers) Ordinance, 1946, promulgated on the same day, which was also made in pursuance of the India (Central Government and Legislature) Act, 1946, provides for the continuance of all requisitions in force immediately before the expiry of the Defence of India Act and of the power to acquire requisitioned land in certain specified circumstances.

(c) The compelling grounds for the promulgation of these Ordinances were explained in a Press Note, dated the 14th September, 1946, of which a copy is laid on the table.

PRESS NOTE

Several emergency measures made during the war period are due to expire on the 1st October next, either because they have only been made for the duration of the war and six months thereafter or because they encroach upon the legislative or executive authority of Provinces and, therefore, will to the extent of that encroachment cease to have effect six months after the revocation of the Proclamation of Emergency under section 102 of the Constitution Act. The most important of such measures are the Defence of India Act and the Rules and the large number of "Control Orders" made under those Rules.

In particular, the economic controls applied on an all India basis to the production, supply and distribution of essential commodities in short supply, like foodstuffs, textiles, coal, paper, etc., will lapse on the 1st October if no legislative action is taken before that date. Secondly, the expiry of the Defence of India Rules will result in the termination of all requisitions of immovable property and the cessation of the Central Government's powers to acquire property upon which it has created valuable assets during the period of requisition or which it is necessary to acquire for the maintenance of essential supplies and services. Although these two matters fall within the provincial field, the Indian Legislature has been empowered by an Act of Parliament passed in March, last to make laws in respect of them.

Legislation within the normal powers of the India Legislature is also necessary to continue some of the emergency powers exercised during the war period in respect of the following matters —

Trading with the enemy and custody of enemy property, control of foreign exchange and securities, control of capital issues import and export of goods into or from India, Railway priorities, control of shipping and special provisions for safety at sea avoidance of strikes and lock-outs and amicable settlement of trade disputes, regulating the supply of electrical energy by electric supply undertakings and house rent control in Chief Commissioner's Provinces.

If an Interim Government had assumed office earlier it might have been possible to convene a session of the India Legislature and submit all the above legislative proposals in the form of Bills with a view to them being passed before the end of this month. Since this is not practicable, but at the same time it is essential to make some legislative provision for the continuance without a break of the emergency measures referred to above, the Government of India have decided to make such provision in the form of three Ordinances, which will be promulgated by H. E. the Governor General on or about the 25th September. The first, to be called the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Ordinance, will derive from section 2 of the India (Central Government and Legislature) Act, 1946, and provide for the continued operation of Central Control over trade and commerce in and the production, supply and distribution of the commodities mentioned in sub-section (1) (a) of that section. These commodities are foodstuffs including edible oilseeds and oils, cotton and woollen textiles, paper, including newsprint, petroleum and petroleum products, spare parts of mechanically propelled vehicles, coal, iron and steel and mica. The second Ordinance to be called the Requisitioned Land (Continuance of Powers) Ordinance, will derive from section 3 of the above-mentioned statute and provide for the continuance of all requisitions of land in force immediately before the expiry of the Defence of India Act and of the power to acquire any such land in certain specified circumstances and subject to payment of compensation in accordance with the provisions of section 19 of that Act. The third Ordinance, to be called the Emergency Provisions (Continuance) Ordinance, will provide for the continued operation of a few of the Defence of India Rules for the purposes indicated in the preceding paragraph.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT,

NEW DELHI,

The 14th September, 1946

STEP, re ERADICATION OF CORRUPTION IN RAILWAYS AND APPOINTMENT OF HIGH POWER COMMITTEE

248. *Lala Deshbandhu Gupta: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state what steps, if any, Government have taken to strengthen the organization for eradicating corruption in the Railways?

(b) Have any steps been taken to direct Railway employees to show greater consideration and politeness to passengers generally, and to third class passengers particularly?

(c) Have any steps been taken to implement the recommendations of the Standing Finance Committee for Railways regarding the appointment of the High Power Committee? If so, when will the Committee begin to function, and what will be its terms of reference?

(d) What steps have been taken by Government to accelerate production of locomotives and manufacture of all the rolling stock and articles and fittings required for the Railways?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) The Honourable Member is referred to the answer I have just given to part (a) of Sardar Mangal Singh's Starred Question No 205.

(b) All staff on railways including those having dealings with passengers are required by standing instructions to be helpful, courteous and civil, special emphasis having been laid on the necessity for extending courtesy and assistance to third class passengers. These instructions are repeated constantly through the medium of circulars, posters, and working time-tables and at meetings between officers and inspecting officials and staff. Incivility to the public has been specifically included in the list of offences meriting removal from service under the Discipline Rules. In addition, Complaint Books are maintained at stations in which complaints of incivility on the part of the staff can be recorded by the public. Notices at suitable places are exhibited, drawing the attention of the public to the fact that Complaint Books are maintained.

(c) It has been decided to set up a High Power Committee in accordance with the recommendation of the Standing Finance Committee for Railways. The exact composition of the Committee is still under consideration, but it will be presided over by a non-official Chairman. The terms of reference contemplated cover the points suggested by the Standing Finance Committee. The Committee can start its work only after Government have issued orders on the recommendations of the Adjudicator who is now engaged in investigating the matters referred to him. In order to expedite the work of the Committee when it starts, two officers, who will eventually form part of the Committee, have been placed on special duty for the collection of data and other preparatory work.

(d) Locomotives—Government are proceeding with all possible speed to build a new workshop at Kanchrapara for local manufacture. Certain machinery has been ordered and some expenditure on works has also been authorized.

Government have also entered into a contract for the production of locomotives and spare boilers with the Tata Locomotive and Electric Company at Tatanagar. For this purpose, the Singhbhum workshops of the E. I. Railway were sold to this Company on the 1st June 1945 and the firm are at present proceeding with the manufacture of boilers as the first step towards the early production of all the locomotives required in India.

Coaches—There is a backlog existing which has to be made up, but there is no reason to suppose that the indigenous industry now existing plus the capacity of Railway Workshops cannot in a very short time make up for the deficiency which now exists. Thereafter, Railways themselves will have sufficient capacity to keep pace with demands from year to year as they did in pre-war days.

Capacity has been found with Messrs Hindustan Aircraft Ltd and the firms constituting the wagon panel, viz., Braithwaites, Burns and Jessops, have the contract for 350 Broad Gauge lower class carriages. It is the intention to place orders for 100 Metre Gauge class bogie coaches on the wagon panel firms and on Hindustan Aircraft Ltd when capacity becomes available.

Wagons—Capacity of the wagon building panel in India is considered sufficient for the normal requirements of Railways, plus considerable increase above normal requirements should these be found necessary.

Other materials and fittings—As a result of the complete cessation of imports and the difficulty of purchasing from indigenous sources it was found necessary during the war to co-ordinate capacity of railway workshops. Rationalization Committees were formed that performed and continued to perform useful work to promote the self-sufficiency of railway workshops.

A classified provisional list of stores items required by Railways has been prepared by the Industries and Supplies Department which list covers well over 1,000 classes of items, including common user items. Of these, about 210 are imported. The Development wing of the Industries and Supplies Department has been formed for the purpose of bringing to the attention of potential manufacturers those imported articles which lend themselves to indigenous manufacture and the starting of new industries.

IMPROVEMENT OF CONDITIONS OF TRAVEL FOR THIRD CLASS PASSENGERS ON RAILWAYS

249. *Lala Deshbandhu Gupta: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state the steps that have been taken by Government to relieve congestion in Railways and particularly to improve the conditions of travel for third class passengers?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: With regard to first part of the question, I would refer to the reply given by me on 31st October, 1946, to Starred Question No. 119, asked by Pandit Sri Krishna Dutt Palwal.

As regards improvement in the conditions of travel, the standardisation of certain station amenities for third class passengers such as waiting halls, bathing facilities, improved latrine accommodation, better booking facilities, covering, lengthening and raising of platforms, foot overbridges etc. is intended. Long range plans have been formulated to effect an improvement in the water supply in all coaches. For immediate purposes, arrangements have been made for the more frequent filling of water tanks.

The question of the provision of sleeping accommodation for a considerable percentage of third class passengers and of a larger number and better designed lavatories in coaches is under consideration in the Railway Board's post-war coach design. A new method of meeting the additional electric load which would be involved if fans are provided in third class coaches is also under close examination of the Railway Board, but no decision has yet been reached.

PROPOSED INTRODUCTION OF MESSAGE RATE SYSTEM FOR TELEPHONE CHARGES IN KARACHI, AHMEDABAD AND BOMBAY

250. *Seth Sukhdev: (a) Will the Secretary of the Communications Department be pleased to state whether it is a fact that there is a proposal to introduce a Message Rate System of charges for telephones in Karachi, Ahmedabad and Bombay?

(b) If so, is it proposed to charge six pice per call besides a fixed monthly rental of Rs 12/-?

(c) Are Government aware that the proposal as envisaged by Government will affect very harshly on the business community who in this age of speed and long-distances, conduct their business on telephone and as such, will have to pay many times more than what they are paying at present?

(d) Are Government aware that the proposed measure has been adversely criticised by the business community who have expressed themselves strongly against it?

Sir Harold Shoobert: (a) Yes

(b) The fixed monthly rental will be Rs 8 and the message rate one anna per call. These rates are exclusive of surcharges

(c) No, the payment will be commensurate with the extent to which the service is used

(d) Some commercial interests have expressed themselves against the change

COMPLAINTS re INEFFICIENCY OF TELEPHONE SYSTEM IN KARACHI

251. *Seth Sukhdev: (a) Will the Secretary of the Communications Department be pleased to state whether Government are aware that there are constant complaints from telephone subscribers regarding inefficient telephone system in Karachi?

(b) Are Government aware that when telephones go out of order, it takes the management a number of days to put them in order, in spite of several requests and reminders to the Department?

(c) What steps do Government propose to take to put a stop to this state of affairs?

(d) Will Government consider the proposal to grant rebate to such of the subscribers whose telephones remain out of order for more than twenty-four hours?

Sir Harold Shoobert: (a) Government are not aware of any abnormal number of complaints regarding the Karachi telephone system

(b) No, all interruptions and complaints are attended to as promptly as possible

(c) Steps have already been taken to improve the efficiency of the telephone systems which unavoidably deteriorated owing to conditions created by war

(d) No

BACKWARD CONDITIONS IN ISTIMRARI AREAS OF AJMER-MERWARA

252. *Pandit Mukut Bihari Lal Bhargava: (a) Will the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture please state if Government are aware of the backward conditions prevailing in the Istimrari areas of Ajmer-Merwara?

(b) Before a regular enactment on the subject is brought into force, do Government propose to introduce any interim relief to the agriculturist in Ajmer-Merwara from forced labour, unjustified lags, and unwarranted ejectments at the sweet will of the Istimrardars? If so, what is the shape of the interim relief?

Sir Pheroz Kharegat: (a) Government are aware of the fact that the tenants in Istimrari areas do not enjoy legal security of tenure. It is however reported that both as a matter of policy and custom it is not usual for an Istimrardar to disturb tenants of long standing. Moreover discretion is always exercised in the matter of ejectment by the Revenue Officers in favour of the tenant

(b) Government have appointed an officer to prepare draft tenancy legislation. As he will not take very long over this work, no interim measures are considered necessary

DAMAGE TO CROPS BY DOMESTICATED WILD BOARS KEPT BY ISTIMRARDARS OF AJMER-MERWARA

253. *Pandit Mukut Bihari Lal Bhargava: (a) Will the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture please state if Government are aware of the practice prevailing among the Istimrardars of Ajmer-Merwara, who domesticate wild boars for sport and luxury-food, and feed them on the cultivator's standing crops, and that a fine of Rs 51 and other punishment are imposed upon any cultivator who hurts or strikes these pet boars?

(b) Do Government propose to take steps for the discontinuance of these practices? If so, what?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: (a) So far as can be ascertained three Istimrardars of Ajmer-Merwara possess preserves of wild boars. These boars sometimes break out of their enclosures and cause damage in neighbouring fields. While the Istimrardar prohibits the hurting or striking of the animals within the preserve, no such prohibition is binding on any villager in respect of an animal which causes damage to his field nor is he liable to be punished by the Istimrardar for doing so.

(b) Government will look into the matter further and decide what steps should be taken.

ABOLITION OF ZAMINDARI, JAGIRDARI AND ISTIMRARI SYSTEMS IN AJMER-MERWARA AND OTHER CENTRALLY ADMINISTERED AREAS

254. *Pandit Mukut Bihari Lal Bhargava: Will the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture please state if Government propose to abolish Zamindari, Jagirdari and Istimrari systems in the Province of Ajmer-Merwara and other Centrally Administered Areas? If so, do Government propose to set up a non-official Committee to collect all requisite data and information and to submit a report as to how, when and on what terms such abolition can be given effect to?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: An officer has been appointed recently for Ajmer-Merwara to draft suitable tenancy legislation and collect the requisite data and information. The question of appointing a Committee for Ajmer will be considered after his report is received. Conditions in other Centrally Administered areas differ considerably, and the case of each will be examined separately by Government in consultation with the administrations concerned.

EXTREME SHORTAGE OF SUGAR QUOTA FOR RURAL POPULATION OF AJMER-MERWARA

255. *Pandit Mukut Bihari Lal Bhargava: (a) Is the Secretary of the Food Department aware of the extreme shortage of sugar in the rural population of Ajmer-Merwara, and is it a fact that the quota allotted to rural areas hardly comes to one chhatak per family per month, as contrasted with twelve chhataks per head in the urban areas?

(b) Are Government aware that the major share of this quantity of sugar allotted to the rural area is being taken by Government officials in the Police Departments located there by the Istimrardars, Jagirdars and their staff and that the common villagers get nothing?

(c) Do Government propose to increase the quota of sugar allotted in order that the rural population also may have its due share?

Mr. B. B. Sen: (a) There is an acute shortage of sugar in Ajmer-Merwara as in the rest of the country. The sugar ration in the urban areas is three chhataks per week. As sugar rationing has not been introduced in rural areas the monthly quantity sold to each family in the rural areas cannot be stated.

(b) In distributing the quantity allotted to the rural areas, the normal consumers are given preference.

(c) In the pre-war days factory sugar was consumed almost wholly by the urban population. During the war years the production of sugar has fallen by 20 per cent. So long as production does not improve there does not appear to be any prospect of allocating increased quantities of factory sugar to Ajmer-Merwara for rural areas.

SUPPLY OF GUR FOR RURAL AREAS OF AJMER-MERWARA DURING LAST SIX MONTHS

256. *Pandit Mukut Bihari Lal Bhargava: (a) Will the Secretary of the Food Department please state what quantity of Gur has been released for supply in rural area of Ajmer-Merwara during the last six months?

(b) Is it a fact that there is acute shortage of Gur in the rural population of Ajmer-Merwara?

(c) What check, if any, is placed on the importers of Gur in rural areas to see that the same is released only to the consumers? What precautions, if any, Government contemplate to take in future to see that Gur is supplied to the bona fide consumers only and that it does not go into Black Market?

Mr. B. R. Sen: (a) The quantity of Gur allotted to the rural area of Ajmer sub-division during the last six months was about 7,000 maunds. Similar information for other rural areas of Ajmer-Merwara is not readily available.

(b) Supplies of Gur in rural areas are reported to be inadequate.

(c) To ensure proper distribution of Gur importers have been asked to sell only to approved retail dealers on permits issued by the Sub-Divisional Officers. Detailed distribution is at present supervised by the revenue staff but elected primarily panchayats at Rural Distributing Centres are being formed for proper distribution to bona fide consumers.

PROVISION OF ELECTRIC FANS IN THIRD CLASS COACHES ON GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS

257 *Mr. P. K. Salve: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state whether Government propose to provide electric fans for the third class coaches on all Government Railways?

(b) Do Government propose also to provide cushions in the third class coaches for the comfort of the passengers?

(c) Is it a fact that Government have purchased a large number of electric fans from the military? If so, will they inform the Assembly for what purpose these fans will be used?

(d) Do Government propose to make arrangements for drinking water supply in the third class coaches by water-taps?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) Government are considering the practicability of installing fans in III class carriages but a final decision has not yet been taken.

(b) Provision of cushions in III class coaches is not contemplated.

(c) Railways have purchased 99 desk fans and 1,990 ceiling fans from the Director-General of Disposals. These fans are for use in railway offices and station buildings.

(d) It is the intention to provide a small alcove in compartments with a water tap but this will be for washing purposes only.

CANCELLATION OF NAGPUR-BOMBAY EXPRESS TRAINS

258. *Mr. P. K. Salve: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state whether Government are aware of the inconvenience caused to the public by cancelling the Nagpur—Bombay Express trains which used to run between these Stations? If so, do Government propose to resume this train service?

(b) Are Government proposing to run Mail trains direct between Madras and Delhi via Nagpur? If so, from what date? Are Government aware that only one train via the Grand Trunk Express, runs at present between these stations? Are they aware that this single train is not enough to cope with the heavy passenger traffic between these stations?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) The Honourable Member's attention is invited to the reply given to parts (d) and (g) of Mr Gole's Starred Question No 115, on the 31st October, 1946.

(b) Government are aware that the only direct train between Delhi and Madras via Nagpur is the Grand Trunk Express and that, under present conditions, this train is frequently overcrowded on certain sections of the journey. Some time ago, a proposal was initiated by the Railway Board for a bi-weekly mail train between Delhi and Madras, but due to a shortage of rolling stock further consideration of the proposal had to be deferred. The matter will again be reviewed towards the end of the year but, meantime, it is not possible to indicate a definite date by which the additional service is likely to be inaugurated.

INCONVENIENCES EXISTING IN THIRD CLASS WAITING ROOMS ON DIFFERENT RAILWAYS

259. *Mr. P. K. Salve: Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state whether Government are aware of the several inconveniences existing in the Third Class Waiting Rooms on different Railways, such as dirt, lack of good bathing and latrine arrangements and absence of clean food services? If so, do Government propose to take steps to remedy them at an early date?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: Yes. The question of cleanliness and sanitation of station premises has been receiving the special attention of the Railway Board for some time. With a view to promoting a healthy spirit of rivalry among the station staff in this important matter, a Competition scheme has been started which provides for awards of trophies and monetary prizes to the staff of stations which are judged to be the cleanest and tidiest throughout the year.

Government have every intention of extending and improving arrangements for latrines, bathing and accommodation generally at stations as early as possible and in this connection, have laid down certain minimum standards based on the number of passengers normally catered for to ensure that adequate amenities are made available to the travelling public.

Every effort is being made to improve the quality of food served to passengers by arranging periodical medical inspections. Members of Railway Local Advisory Committees have also been invited to make occasional tours on the railways, and offer suggestions for improvement.

RUNNING OF MILITARY SPECIAL TRAINS

260. *Mr. P. K. Salve: (a) Will the Honourable the Railway Member please state the number of military special trains which are still allowed to run at present? Are Government aware that several coaches on these trains are found empty of passengers?

(b) How many passenger coaches first, second and third class, are still with the military for their exclusive use? When are they likely to be returned for the use of the civil traffic?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) The latest figures available are for the month of September 1946. These figures show that the total number of Military Personnel Special trains run during that month was 517.

These special trains are divided into two categories as follows —

(i) Military Mail trains which run at regular intervals between specific stations carrying Service personnel travelling on leave or duty as individuals or small parties,

(ii) Military Special trains which are run as required for large parties of Service personnel.

The number of Military Mail and Military Special trains, respectively, run during September 1946, were Military Mail trains—421, Military Special trains—96 (Total—517).

Government are not aware that several coaches on these trains run empty, but it has been brought to their notice that Military Mail's and Specials do at times have some vacant seats. The Railway Board are constantly pressing the Defence Department to release stock handed over to them at a quicker rate than is occurring at present. The Railway Board have also asked that Military Maile should be made available to civilian traffic, but at the time when this question was put to them the Defence Department were unable to agree to such a course.

(b) On the 1st November 1946 the number of different classes of coaching vehicles still with the Military for their exclusive use were

1st and 2nd class bogie composite carriages	115
3rd class bogie carriages	548
3rd class and luggage bogie composite carriages	82
3rd class 4-wheeled carriages	46
Total	791

Since the cessation of hostilities, the Defence Department have been releasing rolling stock from time to time as it becomes surplus to military requirements and these releases continue. The Railway Board also is keeping in close touch with the Movements Directorate with a view to obtaining release of coaching stock to the greatest extent possible. It cannot be said at present, however, when all the stock at present in use by the Defence Department will be returned for Civil use, although it is hoped that the greater part of it will be returned by 31st March 1947.

ENLARGEMENT OF APPELLATE JURISDICTION OF FEDERAL COURT

261. *Seth Govind Das: Will the Honourable the Law Member please state.

(a) whether Government propose to enlarge the appellate jurisdiction of the Federal Court and confer thereon supplemental powers to enable the said Court to hear all the appeals which are at present heard by the Privy Council, and

(b) whether Government propose to abolish the system of appeals to the Privy Council as it involves heavy expenditure and takes a very long time?

The Honourable Mr. Jogendra Nath Mandal: (a) and (b) The Honourable Member will recollect that the proposals published with the Legislative Department Resolution No F 209/41 C & G (Judicial), dated the 15th January, 1945, included a proposal that sub-sections (1) and (3) of section 208 of the Constitution Act should be brought into force to the exclusion of sub-section (2) thereof with the effect of empowering the Indian Legislature to vest the Federal Court with a civil appellate jurisdiction concurrent with that of the Privy Council and of leaving the choice of the forum of appeal to the option of the party to whom a right of appeal had accrued. The large volume of opinion elicited by the publication of the proposals clearly established that there was no general support either for this proposal in its original form or for the more far reaching proposal embodied in part (b) of the question. In these circumstances the Resolution of which the late Law Member gave notice in the course of the Budget Session recommended that the question should not be pursued. The present Government do not propose to reopen the matter which is linked with the question of the creation of a Supreme Court for India on which the attitude of Government was explained in the reply to Mr. Sanval's Starred Question No 138 of the 31st October, 1946.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION IN LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY BASED ON DRAFT HINDU CODE

262 *Seth Govind Das: Will the Honourable the Law Member please state whether Government propose to take early steps to introduce legislation based on Hindu Code, in the Legislative Assembly?

The Honourable Mr. Jogendra Nath Mandal: The Honourable Member is presumably referring to the draft Hindu Code prepared by the Hindu Law Committee. On this assumption, Government must obviously await the receipt of the Committee's report before considering their course of action. They understand that the report is likely to reach them before the end of the current month.

FORMATION OF ALL-INDIA BAR COUNCIL UNDER FEDERAL COURT

263. *Seth Govind Das: Will the Honourable the Law Member please state whether Government propose to take steps for the formation of an All-India Bar Council under the Federal Court with powers to regulate and supervise the legal profession throughout the country?

The Honourable Mr. Jogendra Nath Mandal: I have nothing to add to the reply to Unstarred Question No. 4, of the 28th October, 1946, to which the Honourable Member is referred.

STATEMENT RE INDUSTRIES TO BE PLANNED AND DEVELOPED

264. *Seth Govind Das: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please lay on the table of the House a statement giving the lists of industries which are to be planned and developed (i) by the State, (ii) under the State control and supervision, and (iii) through private enterprise?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: The attention of the Honourable Member is invited to paragraph 7 of the Statement of Government's Industrial Policy issued in April 1945 which sets forth broadly the limits of State participation in industrial enterprise.

Government have not yet come to any conclusion as to the respective spheres of State and private enterprise in regard to industries.

LOCATION OF BASIC AND MEDIUM INDUSTRIES IN PROVINCES

265. *Seth Govind Das: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please state

(a) whether Government propose to consider the location of basic and medium industries in different Provinces; and

(b) if so, which of such industries are to be located in the Northern Districts of the Central Province, i.e. the Nerbudda and Chattisgarh territories?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: (a) In respect of all industries for which targets of total production have been framed, regional quotas of production have been (and will be) allotted, wherever possible, after taking into account the availability of raw materials, nearness to markets, etc.

(b) One Textile Mill has so far been allotted to the Nerbudda area.

ACTION ON RESOLUTION re RESERVATION OF MILL YARN FOR USE OF HAND-LOOMS

266. *Prof. N. G. Ranga: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state what action has so far been taken by Government to implement the resolution passed by the Assembly in the last budget session recommending that 33 1/3 of the mill yarn produced in this country should be reserved for use of handlooms? On what occasions have Government considered the implementation of the resolution, and with what results?

(b) What is the present position with regard to supply of mill yarn to handloom weavers?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: (a) Regarding the first part of the question, the Honourable Member's attention is invited to my predecessor's answer to Unstarred Question No. 12, asked by Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanjal on 29th October, 1946. Regarding the second part of this part of the question, Government considered the desire expressed in this resolution at the time they were formulating their decision on the Report of the Post-war Planning Committee (Textiles). As a result Government decided that all Provinces should leave at least 25 per cent of their new spindage uncovered by looms in order that the yarn in question might be available for handloom weavers.

(b) At present handloom weavers are getting roughly one-fourth of the total yarn produced in India, or about 90,000 bales a month.

INCREASED SUPPLY OF LOCAL YARN TO WEAVERS IN MADRAS PROVINCE

267. *Prof. N. G. Ranga: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state whether Government are aware of the fact that the Madras Government has admitted that the yarn now supplied to handloom weavers is enough to provide employment for a week in the month and also that widespread unemployment prevails among the 25 lakhs of handloom weavers in the Madras Province?

(b) When was the All-India Yarn Distribution Scheme last reviewed, and when is it due for further review?

(c) Do Government propose to review it at the earliest opportunity in order to stop the export of yarn from Madras and increase the supply of local yarn to local weavers?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: (a) The Government of India are not aware of any statement made by the Madras Government to the effect that yarn supplied to handloom weavers is enough to provide employment for only one week in the month. On the contrary, a memorandum drawn up by the Honourable Member himself in March 1946 stated that weavers were finding employment for about 10-15 days a month. I imagine that the estimate made by the Honourable Member is probably about correct, i.e., that handloom weavers in Madras are employed on an average about half the month.

(b) The principle of the Scheme is to allot to each consuming area a roughly equal percentage of what Government estimate to be its requirements. The principle of the scheme is not subject to review, but the estimates of the requirements of consuming areas are continually under review.

(c) Government do not propose to stop export of yarn from Madras as suggested by the Honourable Member. Madras produces more yarn than her quota entitles her to, and any stoppage of exports would be at the expense of weavers of other provinces. Under any all-India distribution scheme she must export the excess over her fair share of production. I take it the Honourable Member would not suggest similar stoppage of exports in respect of say, food-grains.

RECONSTRUCTION OF ALL-INDIA HANDLOOM BOARD

268. *Prof. N. G. Ranga: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state when the reconstitution of the All-India Handloom Board is due?

(b) Have Government come to any decision regarding the requests of the All-India Handloom Weavers' Congress, the Madras Provincial Handloom Weavers' Congress and Provincial Weavers' Congresses of Central Province and Bombay for representation on that Board?

(c) Do Government propose to accord recognition to the Weavers' Congresses referred to above and invite them to send their representatives to the All-India Handloom Board?

(d) Is it a fact that the Madras Provincial Handloom Weavers' Congress has suggested to Government that the President of the All-India Handloom Board should be a Non-official representing the Handloom Weavers and that the quota of representation allotted to handloom weavers should be increased? Do Government propose to give effect to those suggestions when the Board is next reconstituted?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: (a) The formal letters of appointment of members of the All-India Handloom Board were issued, with the exception of one official member, in June 1945. These members were appointed to hold office for one year in the first instance. In May 1946 the Government of India wrote to Provinces suggesting that the Board should be reconstituted on an organisational basis, that is to say that members should be nominated by various handloom organisations rather than by Provincial Governments. Most of the Provincial Governments have not yet replied to the Government of India's letter In the meantime the Handloom Board is carrying on with its present personnel

(b) Not yet, in view of the fact that the Central Government are still awaiting replies from Provincial Governments

(c) This matter will be decided when we have received replies from Provincial Governments

(d) As regards the first part of the question, the answer is in the affirmative. As regards the second part of the question, a decision on this point cannot be taken until we hear from Provincial Governments

REPRESENTATIONS BY THE WEAVERS' CONGRESSES

269. *Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state whether Government have given any consideration to the representations of the deputations of the Weavers' Congresses that have met the Members during the last year?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: Yes, Sir. The deputations were led by the Honourable Member himself, and the points which they made were as follows:

(a) The numbers of handlooms throughout India shown in the Fact-Finding Committee's Report, published in 1942, are out of date

(b) Handloom weavers should be given more yarn

(c) The controlled prices of yarn and dyes should be reduced

(d) Yarn should be distributed in Provinces through co-operative organisations

(e) The Resolution passed by this House in February 1946, to the effect that mills should be compelled to release at least one-third of their yarn to handloom weavers, should be implemented by Government

(f) Interchange of handloom goods between Provinces should be permitted

(g) More dyes and chemicals should be made available to handloom weavers

(h) The All-India Handloom Board should be made more representative

The views of and action taken by Government on these suggestions are as follows:

(a) and (b) It is quite correct that the number of handlooms in action throughout India has increased since the Fact-Finding Committee made their enquiry. This is mainly due to the fact that since then a cloth shortage has developed and the Government of India do not control the prices of handloom cloth, in consequence, large number of handlooms which were not used in peacetime are now in operation. A large number of looms which used to weave silk and rayon yarn have also shifted over to cotton weaving for lack of these yarns. The Government of India have obtained up-to-date figures of the number of handlooms now in operation on cotton yarn, and make allowances accordingly in their yarn distribution scheme. The Government of India make as much yarn available for handloom weavers as is possible. In fact, the supplies of yarn now made to handloom weavers all over India come to something like 90,000 bales a month, as against less than 70,000 bales a month consumed by them in the years immediately prior to the outbreak of war.

(c) The controlled prices of the finer counts of yarn have been further reduced this year, but Government found it necessary, mainly owing to the increased price of Indian cotton, to increase slightly the controlled prices of the coarser counts of yarn. The controlled prices of dyes have been reduced this year.

(d) The manner in which yarn is distributed within a Province is a matter for the Provincial Government concerned. According to the Government of India's information, yarn is distributed through co-operative organisations in Madras, Bihar, Bombay, Bengal and the U. P.

(e) This point has already formed the subject of a separate reply.

(f) Interchange of handloom goods between Provinces is now permitted.

(g) Imports of dyes and chemicals are still only about 50 per cent of India's requirements. The Raw Materials Committee of the All-India Handloom Board advise the Textile Commissioner on supplies to the handloom industry, and all that is possible is done for the industry.

(h) This point is the subject of a separate question put by the Honourable Member.

SELECTION OF DELEGATES TO WASHINGTON WORLD FOOD BOARD COMMISSION
 . 270. *Prof. N. G. Ranga: Will the Secretary of the Agriculture Department be pleased to state

(a) on what basis the Delegation to the Washington World Food Board Commission was selected,

(b) why an official was chosen as an alternative to the delegate,

(c) why a representative of the Reserve Bank of India was not included although a representative of the World Bank and Monetary Fund was being invited to Washington,

(d) why no representation was given to the Federation of Rural peoples organisations, and

(e) whether any scheme was prepared or is being prepared by the Government of India to be submitted to this Commission?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: (a) The delegation to the preparatory Commission for examining the question of the establishment of a World Food Board was selected on the basis of the qualifications required. The delegation had to consist of responsible and experienced representatives assisted by eminent and expert technical advisers.

(b) Because he was considered to be the most suitable person for the purpose in view of his experience in matters relating to India's food problems.

(c) The Reserve Bank authorities were unable to spare a suitable officer. The question is however being further examined in consultation with the Finance Department.

(d) A representative of agriculturists was included in the delegation who has made a special study of the questions that are likely to come up before the Commission.

(e) The Preparatory Commission will itself prepare the scheme. The Indian Delegation has however been suitably briefed as regards the attitude to be adopted by them. A copy of the brief is laid on the table.

Memorandum on the attitude to be taken by the Indian Delegation at the Preparatory Commission

The Indian Government accept the general objectives of the Director General's proposals for the World Food Board as summarised in the report of Committee I of Commission (C) of the Copenhagen Conference, viz.,

(a) developing and organising production, distribution and utilisation of the basic foods to provide diets on a health standard for the peoples of all countries, and

(b) stabilising agricultural prices at levels fair to producers and consumers alike.

The Indian Government would also like to lay stress on another objective mentioned in the Director General's proposals, viz., the establishment of food reserves adequate for any emergency that might arise due to failure of crops in any part of the world. With the experience India has had of the difficulties in acquiring supplies during her recent periods of shortages, the Indian Government is particularly anxious that there should be established a World Reserve which can be freely drawn upon by countries in need and which will be so located that difficulties of procurement and transport would be the minimum.

2. The Government of India also agree that the achievement of these objectives requires the establishment of appropriate international machinery with the necessary powers and funds. The officers of such a body may be located in different regions according to the commodity concerned. Since the meeting of the FAO Conference at Copenhagen, Government have had time to examine this question. It is accepted that without an international machinery these objectives cannot be achieved. The Government do not propose at this time to commit themselves to the acceptance of any particular type of organisation nor will they do until they have before them a complete picture which, presumably, will be available at the end of deliberations of the Preparatory Commission. In the meanwhile, the Indian Delegation will take full part in the discussions of the Preparatory Commission and will make every effort to secure the evolution of a machinery which will effectively achieve the objectives mentioned in the Director General's proposal.

3 The Indian Delegation should emphasise the enormity of the problem that confronts India, if she is to raise the consumption levels of her people to a nutritionally-desired standard, within a measurable distance of time. Some indication of the increases in production required in various types of foods has been given in the Government's statement of policy on food and Agriculture. Normally, India pays for her imports of industrial machinery and finished products by her exports of raw materials. The post war development plans of India include large scale industrialisation which will require correspondingly increased imports of machinery and accessories. If at the same time India has to increase her imports of foodgrains by many million tons every year to maintain her consumption levels, she will obviously be unable to pay her way. It is clear that India will have to depend largely on her own efforts, and increase her own domestic supplies if she is to be in a position to raise the consumption levels of her people. In this task, India could legitimately ask for the support of the World Food Board in obtaining machinery and fertilisers and such technical services as are required for the expansion of agricultural production, as well as equipment for the manufacture of such machinery and fertilisers and technical advice for running the same. In view of the enormity of the supply problem in India and impossibility of its being met, to any substantial extent, by imports, India would be entitled to ask for priority of allocation on the world supplies of farm machinery and fertilisers, and equipment for manufacturing the same. She should also incidentally make it perfectly clear that it will not be possible for India to accept any limitations on a policy of expansion of agricultural production in India and if the point arises it may be made clear that this includes the right to encourage production by giving production subsidies. It may be that costs of production of certain agricultural commodities may be higher in India than they are in some other countries. But this difference in costs is likely to diminish with the application of science and modern methods to Indian agriculture. In any case looking to the difficulty of India's financing large imports, the difficulty of finding alternative employment for the large number of her population employed in agriculture, and the difficulty of getting full employment and of increasing purchasing power within the country without adequate agricultural development Government is convinced of the need for evolving a determined policy of expanding agricultural production within the country, and they trust that, in doing this, they will receive the full co-operation of the World Food Board.

4 A policy of maximising production will obviously depend for its effectiveness both on the adequacy and the stability of the prices payable to the producers. As regards stabilisation Government of India have been thinking, for some time past, of inaugurating a policy of price stabilisation in their own country, and they welcome this attempt at world stabilisation of agricultural prices.

They trust that the world buffer stocks would be available as a complement to the country's own buffer stocks and help to make more effective price control operations within India.

Presumably the prices which the World Food Board will be stabilising will be those referred to by the Economic Committee as Class I international prices. It must, however, be made clear that owing to differences in economic conditions it would not be possible to have parity of internal prices with the international prices. In the long run, no doubt, internal prices in any one country will have to be linked fairly closely to international prices particularly if there is going to be stabilisation. But there will have to be a transitional period during which every attempt will be made to increase the efficiency of Indian agriculture and lower the cost of production per unit. During this transitional period, the length of which can not be defined at this moment, it will be necessary for the Government of India to have freedom to have internal price brackets that may be significantly at variance with the international price brackets that may be determined by the World Food Board. There is no reason why these exporting countries should be put in a position to make excessive profits simply because the Indian peasants must for the sake of his standard of living, be allowed for the time being higher prices.

International prices for the chief exporting countries should therefore be calculated on basis of allowing them reasonable profits on their costs and not on the basis of the internal Indian Prices.

Government however, will be willing to co-operate with the price operations of the World Food Board in so far as its own international transactions are concerned, and abide by the World Price brackets. In other words they will be willing to see that their export and import prices are within the brackets set out by the World Food Board. It will also be necessary to evolve some technique for dealing with a situation in which internal prices and international prices differ. In this connection the feasibility of canalising trade in food between countries through Government channels or Commodity corporations as also the practicability of instituting the necessary control over distribution and profits in the food trade may be explored. In any case, Government of India must reserve to itself the right to see that the operations of this world food reserve do not materially affect the internal price structure to the detriment of the Indian peasant

5 The Government of India welcome the proposal that some supplies of food should be made available to needy countries at Class II prices. In fact, it would not be possible for India to finance that volume of imports which the nutritional considerations involved even on a very modest scale, would still require. India has to look to the World Food Board for making available supplies of certain important foodgrains and foodstuffs at concessional (class II) prices, so that this could be used in conjunction with national supplies for wider schemes of food distribution within the country, specifically from the point of view of meeting the requirements of the vulnerable sections of the community. Government would willingly lay down appropriate safeguards on the utilisation of such imports, in order that it may not affect adversely the interests of either foreign or domestic producers, and, at the same time, will be used in such a manner as to meet the requirements of those most in need in the country from the point of view of their vulnerable status or their low purchasing power. This kind of requirement of import at concessional prices would not be a permanent requirement but would only be needed as a transitional measure to help the country to raise its standards of consumption during the transitional period, when every effort will be made in India, on the one hand, to increase its own domestic output of agricultural produce and on the other, to further the economic development of the country, and thereby increase its capacity to finance all its import requirements at international (class I) prices.

6 As regards the question of an Emergency Reserve, it has been estimated that a reserve of not less than 2 million tons of cereals will be required by India in order to control prices and face shortages. We would like the World Food Board to hold as much of this 2 million tons as possible provided it is located in India, and allotments made to India are treated as a first charge on such reserves. Government have not yet decided what quantity they should hold themselves as an absolute reserve, but will take a decision on this question after they have obtained a comprehensive picture of the size of the World Food Board stocks, its location and composition and the terms and conditions on which Member countries could draw upon these stocks to meet their requirements.

7 As regards the structure and constitution of the World Food Board, it need hardly be said that India should have an effective representation in all the Executive Bodies of this Organisation and be in a position effectively to influence decisions regarding production, distribution, utilisation, price fixation and operation of emergency and buffer stocks. As regards the financing, every attempt should be made to see that India is not made to pay an unduly large share of the finances capital and operating of the new Organisation. As the benefit of stabilisation of international prices will largely accrue to the exporting countries it is not fair that they should be asked to pay a larger share of the cost involved.

8 The above represents a general indication of the Government of India's views on the problems that will come up for discussion before the World Food Board. Government are anxious to see that the proposed World Food Board would serve India's interests in the following manner:

- (1) help to secure concrete facilities for expanding agricultural production in India,
- (2) help to provide India with grain during periods of shortage,
- (3) help to secure imports of certain foodgrains and foodstuffs at concessional prices for specified schemes of distribution to the vulnerable groups in India,
- (4) help to provide the kind of insurance they have themselves been contemplating in pursuance of their own policy of internal price stabilisation and maintenance of reserve stocks.

9 It is expected that the Delegation will try their best to see that in the constitution, structure and functions of the World Food Board, the fulfilment of these objectives is borne in mind.

PERCENTAGE RISE IN PRICE OF SUGAR AND SUGAR-CANE

271. *Prof N G. Ranga: Will the Secretary of the Food Department be pleased to state

- (a) if the price of sugar has been raised, and if so, when and by what percentage,
- (b) whether the price of sugar-cane has been correspondingly raised, and if so, by what percentage, and if not, why not,
- (c) whether Government are aware of the Madras Government's move to control prices of jaggery (gur), and whether it is in consonance with any All-India Policy laid down by the Government of India, and
- (d) whether it is the intention of Government to discourage the production of sugar-cane and gur, if not, why do Government impose controls over the prices of gur and thus bring down these prices?

Mr. B. R. Sen: (a), (b) and (d) The ex-factory price of sugar is fixed by the Government of India in relation to the price of sugar-cane supplied to factories, which is fixed by the Provincial Governments. The Government of India in consultation with the Provincial Governments has recently enhanced the ex-factory price of sugar by approximately 26 per cent. Their object is to enable Provincial Governments to fix a correspondingly enhanced price for sugar-cane in order to encourage its cultivation with due regard to India's needs for both sugar and other foodstuffs. The increase in the price of sugar-cane is likely to be about 33 per cent.

(c) Yes, Sir. The object of gur control is to secure that both sugar and gur are produced and distributed at prices equitable to producers and consumers.

PUBLICATION OF DECISIONS OF INCOME-TAX APPELLATE TRIBUNAL

272. *Seth Govind Das: (a) Is the Honourable the Law Member aware that on account of the provisions of section 54 (i) of the Income Tax Act, the decisions of Income Tax Appellate Tribunal cannot be published and are therefore not available to the assesses for citation or reference?

(b) What steps does he propose to take to help the assesses to know the Tax Law as interpreted by the Appellate Tribunal?

The Honourable Mr. Jogendra Nath Mandal: (a) Yes.

(b) A decision by the Tribunal which involves a question of law of any importance is almost invariably made the subject of a reference to a High Court under section 66 of the Act, and the Tribunal's statement of the case which indicates the rationale of its own decision is habitually included in the report of the High Court's judgment in the series known as Income-tax Reports. In these circumstances Government do not consider that any useful purpose would be served by permitting the publication of decisions of the Tribunal as such, or that any other action is required.

BY-PRODUCTS OF COAL

273. *Mr Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies be pleased to state

(a) the by-products of coal that have been undertaken in India (i) before the last Great War, (ii) during the last Great War, and (iii) after the last Great War,

(b) what other important and valuable by-products can and should be undertaken forthwith,

(c) what steps are being taken by the present Government so that the existing opportunities for the manufacture of by-products are not wasted and that the collieries are obliged and helped in undertaking industrially and commercially useful by-products immediately, and

(d) whether Government are consulting scientists and experts in such matter and whether they are taking the assistance of the Indian Science Congress?

The Honourable Dr. John Matthai: (a) Before the war, the by-products obtained from coal consisted of coal-tar, coal gas and ammonia. Coal-tar was distilled in the main to obtain road tars, creosotes, disinfectants and pitch. During the war the following additional products were extracted from coal-tar: Naphthalene, Phenol, Cresolic acid, and small quantities of tar bases such as pyridine.

Two large recovery plants were set up by the Government at the Steel Works at Jamshedpur and Hirapur for the recovery of Benzene and Toluene from the coke oven gas.

No other by-products have been manufactured in appreciable quantities since the termination of the war.

(b) From the primary products of coal distillation such as benzene, toluene, phenol, naphthalene, etc., a large number of intermediates and synthetic products can be obtained. These chemicals are of great importance as drugs, anti-septics, dyes, solvents, photographic chemicals and perfumes, and for the manufacture of explosives, synthetic resins, etc. The manufacture of intermediates and synthetic products from the primary coal-tar products, has not yet been developed in the country. The Panel on Fine Chemicals, Drugs and Pharmaceuticals set up by the late Planning and Development Department has dealt with these problems. The report of the Panel has recently been received.

(c) These suggestions will receive consideration when the recommendations of the Panel are examined.

(d) The Government is in close touch with scientists and experts. Through the Council of Scientific and Industrial Research, it is establishing a Fuel Research Institute at Digwadih—Dhanbad for advice and research on the problems and similar matters connected with the uses of fuel. They have also set up several Advisory Committees on which members of the industry and prominent scientists are represented. The Indian Science Congress is not a research body but essentially an association of scientists. Many of the senior staff of the Council of Scientific and Industrial Research are members and close contact is maintained between the Council of Scientific and Industrial Research and the Indian Science Congress.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

PRIORITY OF CONSTRUCTION OF NEW RAILWAY LINES

36. Mr. K. C. Neogy: (a) Will the Honourable Member for Railways be pleased to place on the table of the House a list of the new Railway lines, construction of which is expected to be undertaken within a year, in different parts of the country?

(b) What considerations have determined the order of priority of the different new Railway lines that are proposed to be constructed during the next five years? Will the Honourable Member please lay on the table of the House a list of projected lines according to the period in which they are proposed to be constructed respectively?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) A statement showing the list of projected lines under investigation and for which survey reports have been received, has been laid on the table. Out of the lines under investigation, survey reports of nine projects have recently been received and are under scrutiny. Sanction has since been given for (i) the construction by the North Western Railway in the Punjab of a new line between Rupn and Talaura (34 miles in length) and (ii) restoration in the United Provinces by the G. I. P. Railway of Bhimsen-Kharada line dismantled during the war (81 miles in length).

It is not possible to state what further constructions will be taken in hand this year until a detailed examination of the engineering and traffic survey reports so far received has been completed.

(b) Provincial Governments have given a certain order of priority for carrying out survey investigations of projected lines, and this order of priority is generally followed by railways in carrying out the surveys.

When the survey reports of projected lines are received and scrutinised, it will be possible to determine which of these lines are likely to prove commercially remunerative or otherwise. The construction of remunerative lines would be undertaken first, and as regards the unremunerative lines, negotiations will be opened with the Provincial Governments for financing these lines. This policy of financing is based on the following two fundamental principles.

(i) The Railway Department and the Provincial Governments should share both the capital expenditure and the earnings.

or (ii) On the basis of their estimate of net earnings, the Railway Department should work out the limit of capital expenditure which they would be prepared to incur without involving themselves in any loss after an initial period of five years from the opening of the line to traffic and the Provincial Government should make a contribution equal to the difference between such expenditure and the estimated expenditure on the construction of the line.

MONEY SPENT ON IRRIGATION PROJECTS IN FINICAL

37. Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Secretary of the Agriculture Department be pleased to state

(a) the amount of money that has been spent by the Government of India for irrigation projects in Bengal during the current financial year (including money already spent and to be spent),

(b) how many irrigation projects have already been undertaken or worked wholly or in part during the said financial year, and

(c) whether such irrigation projects are selected as parts of a bigger and long term planning or are merely taken up on individual merit?

Sir Pheroze Kharegat: (a) and (b) During the current financial year, the Central Government has sanctioned 14.32 lakhs in respect of 42 schemes of the Bengal Government for re-excavation and other improvements of water courses in Bengal. They are intended to increase irrigation facilities in certain cases to some extent but they are designed largely to improve drainage and thereby increase the yield of land. Information about the exact amount spent or proposed to be spent by the Provincial Government and the number of projects executed wholly or in part during the current financial year is not available and has been called for. In addition a grant of Rs 18.02 lakhs has been sanctioned this year in respect of schemes undertaken in previous years.

(c) These are ad hoc schemes undertaken by the Provincial Government with a view to increase food production under the Grow More Food Campaign and were taken up before the post-war development plans of the Province were drawn up.

SCARCITY OF MUSTARD OIL IN BENGAL

38. Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Secretary of the Food Department be pleased to state.

(a) whether the Government of India have considered the acute scarcity of mustard oil in Bengal and the sudden rise in its price,

(b) the reasons for such scarcity and for such rise in price, and

(c) what steps are being taken for making mustard oil available for the ordinary man and at reasonable rates?

Mr. B. E. Sen: (a) Yes

(b) Scarcity of mustard oil in Bengal is due to inadequate imports from U. P. and other areas in India.

The rise in prices is due to shortage of oil and lack of effective price control throughout India and particularly in the districts of Bengal. The fall in imports is due to increased consumption in producing areas due to greater purchasing power and shortage of ghee.

(c) The Government of India have after consulting the Provinces and States decided upon a policy of Co-ordinated control over prices and movement of edible oilseeds and oils in conformity with an All-India Basic Plan, and Provincial/States Governments have been advised to take immediate action to implement this policy. The export of mustard oil out of India has also been totally prohibited.

The Bengal Government have rationed mustard oil in Calcutta City.

SANTHIA-BHERAMARA RAILWAY PROJECT IN BENGAL

39. Mr. Sasanka Sekhar Sanyal: Will the Honourable the Railway Member be pleased to state

(a) how much progress has been made in the project known as the Santhia Bheramara Railway in Bengal,

(b) the route of the proposed railway mentioning only important places through which the proposed line will pass

(c) the approximate time by which it is expected to run trains, and

(d) whether District Boards and District administrations connected with the places through which the proposed line will pass have been informed of the scheme?

The Honourable Mr. M. Asaf Ali: (a) No progress has so far been made in the Project, Santhia-Bheramara Railway, in Bengal, as the survey investigations have only been taken in hand recently. The investigations could not be taken in hand earlier, as this project was given a low priority by the Local Government and attention was therefore, concentrated on higher priority projects.

(b) It is not possible at present to state, the route the proposed railway will take and the important places which it will pass through, or pass close by, till the surveys of this line, which are now in hand, are completed. The only important place that this route will connect is Berhampore.

(c) The construction of the line can only be considered after the survey reports are received and scrutinised. It is, therefore, not possible at this stage, to state when the line is likely to be constructed and when trains would run on the section.

(d) A notification was published in the Gazette of India on the 7th September, 1945, for the information of the public notifying that the Railway Board have sanctioned an engineering survey to be carried by the Agency of the B. A. Railway for a Broad Gauge line from Santhia to Bheramara via Berhampore a distance of about 98 miles. The Railway Administration concerned arranges a notification in the local Government Gazette in accordance with the terms of Section 4 of the Land Acquisition Act.

The Standing Rules for the traffic survey provide that the survey officer in charge should consult local authorities and prominent citizens both as regards trade and industries and the most suitable route for the projected railway.

GRANT OF EXTENSIONS TO POSTMASTERS AND POSTAL CLERKS

40. Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: (a) Will the Secretary of the Communications Department be pleased to state how many head Post Offices are there in the Munsum Circle in United Provinces where Postmasters in selection grade are appointed?

(b) Is it a fact that recently the Post Office at Haldwani in the Naini Tal District was raised to the status equal to the status of those at Almorah, Ramikhet, etc.?

(c) Is it also a fact that a gentleman who had retired from service was appointed as Postmaster of that Post Office? If so, was no other man in service available for promotion to that post?

(d) What are the rules for the grant of extension to Postmasters and other postal clerks who have completed 55 years of age?

Sir Harold Shoobert: (a) Three

(b) Yes

(c) The reply to the first part is in the negative. The latter part does not arise.

(d) The rule regarding the age of retirement of non-gazetted Postmasters and postal clerks is F R 50(b).

PHYSICAL FITNESS AND MENTAL FITNESS OF OFFICERS GRANTED EXTENSIONS OF SERVICE AS POSTMASTERS

41. Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: (a) Will the Secretary of the Communications Department please state whether Government are aware that even if an extension is granted on public interest, the official getting the extension must be physically and mentally fit to perform his duties?

(b) Is it a fact that the Postmaster posted at present at Ramikhet is disabled and is not physically fit to perform his duties?

(c) Is it a fact that he has been granted several extensions, and, if so, how many, and why?

Sir Harold Shoobert: (a) The Honourable Member is referred to Fundamental Rule 56(b)(1). A copy of the Fundamental Rule is in the Library of the House.

(b) No. The official in question is in very good health although he uses an artificial leg. This is not considered as a disability for performance of his duties as a Postmaster.

(c) It is a fact that this official has been retained in service for three years after the age of 55.

EMBEZZLEMENT IN THE POST OFFICE AT PAURI (GARHWAL)

42. Shri Mohan Lal Saksena: Will the Secretary of the Communications Department please state whether it is a fact that sometime ago there was a case of embezzlement in the Post Office at Pauri (Garhwal), and if so, what was the amount involved and what action, if any, has so far been taken in the matter?

Sir Harold Shoobert: No, a loss of Rs 100, however, occurred between Pauri and Pokhra Sub Office in May last. Police investigation is proceeding.

RELAXATION OF CONTROL ON BUILDING MATERIALS

43. Mr. K. C. Neogy: Will the Honourable Member for Industries and Supplies please refer to the Budget Speech made on the 28th February, 1946, by the then Finance Member in which proposals for assisting and stimulating private building activity were made, and special steps indicated as being taken to increase allocations of coal for the burning of bricks and release of timber, cement and steel, and to relax controls over these materials and to extend production capacity, and lay on the table of the House a statement showing Province by Province, the progress made, or expected to be made in this matter during the year, as well as the nature of the action?

The Honourable Dr. John Mathai: Four statements showing the position in respect of the distribution of cement, timber, coal and iron & steel are laid on the table of the House

A statement about the existing and planned production of cement is also laid on the table

IV—Iron and Steel

So far as steel is concerned control was relaxed with effect from 1st April 1946 so as to enable consumers to obtain their requirements in the open market. However there was considerable deterioration in the supply position owing to labour unrest in the works of some of the producers and to insufficiency of coal. Moreover the import position also deteriorated owing to similar difficulties in the U S A and Australia. As a result the control had to be re-imposed with effect from 1st September 1946. It is not possible to say how much steel was purchased for building purposes during this period in the various Provinces. Government are now engaged in devising a procedure for the distribution of Iron and Steel the object of which will be to ensure that whatever quantities of steel are available are distributed in an equitable manner with due regard to the essential requirements of the various types of consumers.

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT

PROTECTION OF LIFE AND PROPERTY OF RAILWAY PASSENGERS IN BIHAR

Mr. President: I have received notice of an adjournment motion from the Honourable Member Mr. Ishaq Seth. The motion is "to discuss the failure of the Railway Department to take adequate steps in time to protect the lives and property of passengers in Bihar as reported in the Dawn and other papers"

• [Mr. President]

12 Noon Having found it to be vague, I asked for certain information and the Honourable Member has referred me to the issues of the Dawn, dated the 3rd and the 4th of November 1946. I am afraid there has been delay and there remains therefore no urgency of the matter. The House was in session on 4th November, after the publication of these news. Besides, the motion does not appear to be clear as regards the stations. Perhaps the report in the Dawn gives those stations. Then, it appears to me that item 3 of the provincial legislative list mentions "police, including the railway and village police," to be a provincial subject. I do not see how this matter can, therefore, be a proper subject for an adjournment motion, subject of course, to whatever the Honourable Member has to say on the point of urgency. I take it that by "failure to give protection" he means so far as the attacks from mob outside are concerned and not on account of some inherent defect in the running of the trains or in the railway administration itself.

Haji Abdus Sattar Haji Ishaq Seth (West Coast and Nilgiris Muhammadan) It may be both. With regard to the second point, if the legal position is such that the protection of passengers travelling in railway coaches is the duty of the provinces and of the provincial administration, then I am afraid my motion cannot be debated here. To that extent I agree. But I thought the position is that railways being the Central subject, so far as the life and property of those who are travelling inside the railway carriages are concerned, it is the duty of the Railway Department to protect them and it is on that basis that the motion has been given notice of.

Khan Mohammad Yamin Khan (Agra Division Muhammadan Rural) May I say submit to you that if the attack comes on the line or on a particular train from the mob without the train being stopped, it is, of course, the duty of the Provincial Government to look after it. But if the train is stopped by pulling the chain, then it is the duty of Railway Department to look into the matter, because it is not the function of the Provincial Government to see whether a chain was pulled or not. Now, the allegations that are in the Dawn are that the chains have been pulled and the trains have been stopped and they were then attacked. The precaution to stop this sort of thing is to be taken by the Railway Department.

Mr. President: I do not think any useful purpose will be served by trying to meet the arguments advanced in a fine and very subtle manner by the Honourable the Deputy President. The report that has been given to me says that reports of communal clashes have been received from Patna, Hosharpur and other places in the Patna district and that on account of the disturbances in certain areas in Bihar, the Punjab Mail of the East Indian Railway came late etc. Obviously, the want of protection to the life and property of the passengers was not due to anything which the Railway authorities failed to do but because of certain extraneous circumstances, a matter obviously under the jurisdiction of the Railway police. I cannot understand the distinction between such disturbances by mobs coming from within or from without the railway carriages. Whatever it may be I do not think the motion is in order. It is not urgent, as I pointed out, and it is not in order otherwise also, it is a provincial matter.

MOTION RE FOOD SITUATION—concl'd

Mr. President: The House will now resume further consideration of the following motion moved by Mr B R Sen, on 4th November 1946

"That the food situation in India be taken into consideration"

and also the further consideration of the amendment moved by Mr Lawson, on 4th November 1946

In this connection, I have received a communication from the Honourable Dr Rajendra Prasad which I will read to the House

"Dear Mr President,

The situation in Bihar requires my immediate presence there I am therefore going away today (that is yesterday morning) and will not be present in the Assembly to listen to the speeches of other Members who may participate in the debate on the Food situation I beg of you and of the House to excuse my absence in view of the emergent situation which necessitates this The Secretary of the Food Department will be present and take part in the debate

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad (United Provinces Southern Divisions Muhammadan Rural) Sir, I highly appreciate the lucid statement of the Honourable the Food Member describing the present situation and the future programme of production The speech which we heard two days ago on the food situation was very different from what we have been accustomed to hear in previous years We hope that the food situation will improve Sir, India before the war had been an exporting country as far as foodstuffs are concerned I have got before me the figures of 1938-39 as published in 'Trade of India Review' In that particular year, we produced 9.9 million tons wheat and exported only 279 thousand tons During the same year we produced 23.6 million tons rice and exported 282 thousand tons, but we imported 1,282 thousand tons Thus we had a shortage of 1 million ton of rice in that year which we imported from Ceylon Our total export of cereal was $\frac{1}{2}$ million ton We also exported large quantities of seeds, most of which could be used as food—groundnuts by men and other seeds by cattle The total quantity which we exported to foreign countries in 1938-39 was about three-fourth million tons in food grains and pulses and about 15 crores worth of seeds and imported 1 million ton rice from Burma This was after feeding the whole country That was our position before the war We had enough to eat and we could also afford to export certain quantities to foreign countries, particularly to U K Now, after the war, as we understand from the Honourable the Food Member, our production has increased. So, on account of increase in production, I do not see any reason why there should be shortage of food in our country. As far as famine is concerned, there are only three places where there is famine. One in the files of the Food Department, that is the place where famine starts. The second is in the speeches of Honourable Members of this House, including myself. I made a speech about famine with the expectation that we might bring more food from foreign countries in order to lower the prices, because the moment we hear that food is coming from outside, the prices always are lowered. But to my great astonishment I find that the wheat which we purchased from Argentine was really at a very high cost and my expectations were altogether falsified. I think all the speeches that I delivered in order to get cheap food from outside did not prove to be correct. It is an important point to be looked into. We do want food from abroad but we do not want the same at exorbitant price. I hope my Honourable friend Diwan Chaman Lall who represented this country will tell the House at what price he purchased Argentine wheat compared with the price prevailing in India. If it was at a high price, for what reasons. Was it not possible for him to get it at a lower price?

Diwan Chaman Lall (West Punjab Non-Muhammadan): I did not purchase any food at all.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: Did my Honourable friend have a pleasure trip at the expense of the taxpayer?

Diwan Chaman Lall: It was a strenuous trip. Food had already been purchased by the representative of the Government of India, but he found that he could not get it out of the country. Our ships were lying in the harbours paying $5 000 a day as demurrage. I got the food out.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: Then he merely wished to help the Commerce Department instead of Food Department.

Diwan Chaman Lall: I helped my own people to get food.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: It was a private effort.

Diwan Chaman Lall: It was a public effort.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: At any rate, when he gets up to speak, I hope he would tell the House at what price the representatives of Government purchased foodstuffs in Argentine, and how did that price compare with the internal price prevalent in Argentine. Therefore, as far as we are concerned, I think there is no shortage in India. I think the only reason for shortage of food is deterioration. Today and at other times we have heard of the quantity of food that has gone bad because it was not properly handled. My Honourable friend the Food Secretary while replying to a question today could not even give the figures of food destroyed. I think it is simple arithmetic, he knows the exact production and also the exact consumption and the difference between the two is the quantity lost by deterioration. So the chief reason for the shortage of food is not want of it but inexperience in handling. Storing wheat is not easy, it requires expert knowledge and people in the trade have been accustomed for centuries to keep wheat in a proper condition. But our Government of India officials are not experts in the matter of storage of food, they consult zoologists and entomologists to study the parasites which destroy the food. By the time they approached the scientists the war was over, and I am sure that by the time they complete their investigations about the method of storage the Food Department itself will be liquidated and the whole thing will go back to the trade. Therefore the reason for the shortage of food is really bad storage, and it requires careful looking into.

Then I come to the question of procurement, which was discussed at length by the Food Member. If we leave it to the sweet will of the producers to sell or not to sell their articles to the consumers the whole social fabric will break down. If the producers of foodstuffs maintain that it is their privilege to sell or not to sell their articles to the consumers, and the same privilege is claimed by the cotton producers and manufacturers of cloth, and if Government accept that proposition, society will be paralysed and there will be complete deadlock. Government must take a strong line on this question, if they do not do so it is better to nationalise all industries and adopt communist methods. But I do not think it will be necessary to go so far. It is understood that the first priority must rest with the producers, but whatever is left after his own consumption and seed requirements must be the property of the State and the people. The same applies to the manufacturers of cotton and piece-goods. Government may hesitate to apply this principle because they have to depend on the votes of these cultivators who returned them to power. But unless they adopt the principle I have just laid down there can be no stable or efficient Government in India. Whatever is left after meeting the requirements of the producers should come to the State and should be distributed to those who do not produce these foodgrains. Otherwise we will not know where we are. I am prepared to discuss the detailed scheme of procurement and responsibilities of the Central Government as well as the provincial Governments.

The next point discussed by the Food Member was with regard to the prices, whether they should be fixed by the producer or the consumer. I am afraid that is wrong way of handling the proposition. This may be all right in ordinary normal life but we are living in abnormal times and the important point that the Honourable Food Member ignored was that we calculate prices in terms of the paper rupee, which is only a managed currency. Intrinsically it has no value. The cultivators appreciate gold but not the paper rupee. Let the officials of Government make an experiment. Let some one go with a tola of gold and find how much wheat he gets for it, and let some one also try with this paper money and see how much he gets in exchange for that paper. That will determine the purchasing power of one tola of gold in terms of paper money. But to make this experiment of the purchasing power of managed currency which has no intrinsic value with which it is a fundamental mistake. The price index of wheat at present is 373. My Honourable friend knows that prices of all foodstuffs move in sympathy with the price of wheat and rice. If the price index of wheat is Rs. 373 it means that instead of Rs. 100 you have to pay Rs. 373 for the same amount of wheat. We who are wage earners get money not in terms of gold or wheat but in terms of manipulated and badly printed paper money, and it is really the purchasing power of that rupee which is taken into consideration. If we accept the payment method proposed by the Honourable Food Member what will be the result? The result will be that the value of rupee will come down to 4½ annas. Therefore if you want to pay wages you must increase them in the ratio of 4½ to 16 or in other words, instead of paying Rs. 100 you should pay Rs. 373. The Government of India have appointed a Commission—the Central Pay Commission—to go into the question of wages of the Central Government employees. I think this Commission should consist of three persons because in the words of Lord Palmerston the most efficient committee is a committee of three persons provided two out of them absent themselves. This Commission therefore should consist of the Honourable the Food Member, the President of the Assembly, and myself, and because both the President and myself will be absent the Honourable the Food Member will have no alternative but to recommend that the pay of Government servants should be increased from Rs. 100 to Rs. 373. No further Commission will be necessary, it is a simple question of arithmetic.

Sri M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar (Madras Ceded Districts and Chittoor, Non-Muhammadan Rural.) Let us address ourselves to allowances.

Dr Sir Zia Uddin Ahmad: Allowances will be raised from Rs. 45 to Rs. 168 per day. The thing is that we have to look at it from an entirely different point of view. The question is that the price of wheat ought not to be considered from the view point of what the consumers can afford to give or what the producers would like to have. It has to be determined by the Government and they have to decide what shall be the value of their managed currency represented by paper rupee. I do not want to speak on it at length today. The Government ought to compare their prices in terms of gold. If they want to stabilize the purchasing power of the rupee they should fix the price in terms of gold, and after that they should fix the price in terms of silver, and wheat, textiles, and everything else will follow. So instead of fixing the prices from the point of view of consumers and producers he ought to have the co-operation of the Government, because the Food Member alone cannot solve this problem. He must have the fullest co-operation of the Finance Member, the Commerce Member, the Supply Member, and in fact the entire Government. By joint effort and mutual consideration they should fix the purchasing power of the rupee and then the price of wheat and all other articles will automatically be fixed.

Coming to the question of production, there is one factor which the Honourable the Food Member omitted in all his calculations, and that is the increase in the population of this country which is over 1 per cent. In fixing his target he should take the increase in population also into consideration. He said the other day that the production of foodstuffs has gone up by about 4 per cent but the population during the same period has also gone up by about the same percentage. Therefore whatever long term policy may be framed, it should take into consideration that our production should increase at least in proportion to the increase in population. I have already said that we had enough production in all cereals except rice before the war. No doubt the situation has eased somewhat and we can get rice from Burma and other countries, but it seems desirable that we ought to make efforts to produce rice ourselves of the type which people of Bengal and people of the South would like to eat. I suggest to the Honourable Members on the Treasury Benches, and especially my Honourable friend who comes from Assam, whether it will not be possible for them to increase the production of rice in the territory now belonging to Assam. Labour is available in Assam and elsewhere. They remove their prejudices of what they call hinc system. I feel that they can produce at least as much rice as we used to import from Burma before the war. Although we may be able to import rice at present from Burma, Siam and other countries, I think it is desirable that in the matter of food we should be self-sufficient. Therefore I beseech that every effort should be made by mutual compromise to see that the large tracts of land available in Assam are put under rice cultivation. That is really an important point which the Honourable Food Member ought to tackle.

There is one point which the Honourable Member did not touch in his speech, and I think rightly, and that is the question of use of machinery in cultivation or large scale farming. In my opinion in India we cannot use machinery to the same extent as is used in the West. The reason for this is that everybody here has got small holdings and if you use machinery on a large scale, a large number of people will be out of employment. For increase of production we have to fall back upon the facilities which were mentioned by the Honourable the Food Member himself viz., better seeds, fertilizers, water, and everything else which is required in order to produce more food. The position of cultivators at present is very good because they are getting Rs. 378 instead of Rs. 100 for their produce. But these conditions will not continue very long. They may continue for a few years more. The old conditions are bound to be restored and they will again be in debt as in the past. This is the time to consider this problem and we should follow the same method which Japan followed for improving the condition of their agricultural farmers. We know that cultivators for four months in the year are idle. These months ought to be utilised in cottage industries. Perhaps my friend will know that in Japan before the war the entire hosiery and a large portion of the textile was done by villagers by the system of cottage industry. Therefore, we ought to introduce cottage industry in the villages so that when the people are idle they may produce wealth and earn money. In order to make them rich by artificially raising the value of their products from 100 to 378 is not really the production of wealth. They are not really rich people. Artificially on paper they are rich but it is not satisfactory. This is manipulated wealth. The real wealth will be what they produce after doing some work. If by the same work the amount is increased it is not wealth. If by additional work you get additional wealth, that is real wealth. So you should introduce cottage industries in all the villages. Now they are in a position to do so because the cultivators have money and they can buy small machines by means of which this can be done. This question is attracting the attention of the Development and Resettlement. The Resettlement Directorate is working out a scheme of cottage industry for demobilized soldiers. The same principle should be extended later on for these villages. The scheme is that we take demobilized soldiers and train them for six months or a year in certain trades and afterwards manufacture the machines which they would require for their trades and give them either on rent or sell them. The payment may be made by instalments in lump-sum. If this is successful in the case of demobilized soldiers, I see no reason why it should not be extended in the case of villagers so that they may engage themselves in cottage industries during the period when they have no work and begin to earn some money. This will also improve our industries enormously. Though we have factories all round, (I admit that factories are indispensable), yet these factories will not be able to produce all our requirements. The villagers should continue to produce all the requirements of the villages by these cottage industries. Food Department should co-operate with Resettlement Directorate and train villagers in cottage industries, they should not depend on the artificial price which will not continue for a long time.

Mr. President. May I invite the Honourable Members attention now to one aspect of this debate? Government have allotted two days for the debate. Today is the second day of the discussion, but I find from the list that has come to me that a large number of Honourable Members are eager to express their views. I propose to call upon the Food Secretary to reply by about four o'clock. The House will certainly like him to give information on the various points that have been raised by Honourable Members. I do not wish that any Honourable Member should leave out any of his points. I do not want to curtail the raising or mentioning of points, but there has to be some time limit to the speeches. The Honourable Member has spoken for half an hour. Time will therefore be short for other members, otherwise, the alternative will be that some of the members wishing to address the House will be crowded out.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil (Bombay Central Division, Non-Muhammadan Rural). Formerly when some such questions were discussed in the House a time limit was accepted, either 15 or 20 minutes. If that procedure is followed, it will be possible for the House to know the view points of the other members. At the same time, it will be possible to conclude the debate before the House rises for the day.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer (Bombay Southern Division, Muhammadan Rural). The time limit should be divided according to the Party Groups as in the past, so that the Party concerned may put up certain speakers within the time allowed.

Sri V. O. Vellingiri Gounder (Salem and Coimbatore cum North Arcot, Non-Muhammadan Rural). There are many of us in the back benches who cannot get any time. If a time limit is to be enforced, may I suggest that at least ten minutes be given to each member. I do not think a twenty minutes limit is necessary.

Mr. President. I have made the suggestion and I have given the alternatives. If I find that the Members are already restraining themselves and having a time limit of their own, it will be more welcome to me. Otherwise, the other alternative will be to leave out the other prospective speakers. At any rate I shall be calling upon the Food Secretary at about 4 p.m. to give his reply and the Parties may adjust time limits among themselves.

Sjt. N. V. Gadgil: Under Standing Order 62, you can limit the speeches to fifteen minutes each. This is a resolution and undoubtedly it is governed by the provision of Standing Order 62.

Mr. President: The Standing Order is not applicable in the strict sense. This is a motion by the Government. If the House wants me to exercise a time limit, I shall be glad to do so.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: In view of your ruling I suppress my speech and say, only a few words, I understand rationing and no rationing. But I do not understand partial rationing because that means that I live on starvation diet which others indulge in lavishment. If I go four miles I find that cattle are being fed on wheat. I cannot invite more than 20 persons to a party, but a villager can feed 2,000 persons in marriage parties. This does not show great credit to the administration.

Here in India hospitality is our great virtue. The people of the west are not familiar with that hospitality. I wrote a letter to the Rationing Authority in the United Provinces that I get in Aligarh a large number of guests and there is no decent hotel or place where they can stay and to give me some additional ration. The reply that I got was that I should tell my guests, when they came, that they should bring their rations with them. If they fail to bring them ask them to go Halwai or Nanbai shop. Such reception of our guests is against our sentiments. But the humour does not end here. At the end of his letter he said "Copy to the District Magistrate for action." It is in keeping with western hospitality. Hospitality is our traditional virtue and Food Department is out to destroy it. I hope that Food Department will be liquidated long before we lose our virtue. I am sure my friend from the North-West Frontier Province will not appreciate the practice of Food Department.

Khan Abdul Ghani Khan (North-West Frontier Province General) Certainly if it is for the good of India I will write something worse than that!

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: Then I have some suggestions. In the first place rationing should not be fixed for everybody in terms of sugar, rice and wheat, because the poorer people do not like to take sugar. They would rather be pleased to take a double or treble quantity of gur for the same price. They may not like wheat. But they would like a double quantity of the coarser grains for the same value. Therefore, in rationing these things, one thing should be essential that everybody should not get the same stuff. The prices of articles which poor men use should be very low and rationing should be fixed not by quantity of inferior stuff, but we should also fix the value in money and supply about double the quantity to poor people for the same amount.

The second point is, Food Department should not have arithmeticians only, but they should also have persons who are familiar with the habits of the people. You send Bajra to Travancore, where the people do not know what it is and how to eat it. The villager in Upper India eat Bajra, and Maize, but supplement it with Mutha, which we do not get in towns. Average resident of the town will begin to suffer from dysentery if he is compelled to eat maize or Bajra without Mutha. Give us the food which we have been used to eat for centuries. You cannot alter the habits of people by order under the pretence of famine. As regards rice, position is more difficult. Somebody in Food Department must study the quality of rice which people are accustomed to eat in a particular locality and that quality alone should be supplied to them. What is the use of giving rice which people do not eat. In Aligarh nobody purchases the rice which is supplied, which even the chickens refuse to eat. It is wasted. My request is that somebody should carefully study the quality of rice consumed in each locality and supply the same quality. If not give it up in favour of trade channel.

My next suggestion is that at present what is called the Rationing Officer is a person whose minimum income free of income tax is Rs. 2,000 per month. It is his due. An honest Rationing Officer will confine to this income. But honest persons are few. Corruption is all round and I hope that the present

[Dr Zia Uddin Ahmad]

Government will eradicate the shortcomings of their predecessors for this purpose I suggest that there should be a committee to look after the system of rationing and the action of the Rationing Officers who should not be protected by the Defence of India Rules. At present he is above criticism. He is defended by Defence of India Rules. There should be a committee to watch Rationing System. In the case of Delhi I pointed out last year and also in previous year about the corruption of one individual and mentioned his name. He is still flourishing in Delhi and no action has been taken against him.

Shri Mohan Lal Saksena (Lucknow Division Non-Mohammadan Rural)
Is there only one?

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad. I think it is better to associate some kind of non-official committee with the rationing officers. There should be a mohalla committee also and shops should be opened in each mohalla where the food-stuffs should be supplied.

My next suggestion is that persons should be allowed to bring food from outside provided it is written off against their ration.

Mr B. R. Sen (Secretary Food Department) That is already allowed in the U P.

Dr. Zia Uddin Ahmad: I wish it may be so. I cannot bring my own food which is lying elsewhere without permit which is not easily obtained. People should be allowed to have their own food provided it is written off against their own ration. That will really help the rationing authority.

It is very difficult to get ration permit cards. In Ceylon it is exceedingly simple. The moment I landed there I got the permit. Here people have to wait for three or four days before they get their permit cards. These cards should be easily available, and high penalty should not be charged for losing them. They must be supplied not by one authority but by several authorities in the town, like the post office. Certain facilities should be given to the public in order to relieve them of the sufferings which they at present undergo. The cards for the guests should be issued at short notice and preferably at the station.

Diwan Chaman Lal: Sir, I have no intention of following the previous speaker when he went into a dissertation regarding prices, the value of the rupee and the value of gold. But it is quite obvious that the many subjects that he touched were in the larger context irrelevant to the present situation in India.

I would like to add my tribute to the many tributes that have already been paid to the Honourable the Food Member not only for his brilliant speech but for a speech the equal of which has not been heard for quite a long time on the floor of this House—a speech full of simplicity and a complete grasp of the situation and full of human sympathy for his countrymen. I have no doubt that under his charge the Food Department is in the ablest hands in the country and the grave situation facing the country is going to be taken charge of by competent hands.

Sir, the question is not merely a grasp of the situation. The question is how are we going to relieve the situation that faces us in the country. There are only three methods of doing so. One is to procure more food. The second is to purchase more food and the third is to build up a sufficient reserve so that the calamities that have faced us in the past do not face us in the future. Therefore, the situation that I would like to direct your attention to, Mr President, is what is the present position regarding procurement of food? What is the position regarding production and what is the position regarding our reserves?

At the present moment there are two methods by which we are getting our food. One is, as explained by the Honourable the Food Member, the internal market and the second is the external market. The internal market is concerned with demand.

we have not been able to get that demand fulfilled. You, Mr. President, will remember the debate that took place on the floor of this House in the month of March last when Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar came back from America. We expressed then our grave doubts as to the programme that he had accepted, grave doubts as to whether the quantity that he thought that he was going to get from abroad he was really going to get and the fears that we expressed on the floor of the House at that time were justified later on. And today we are faced with this proposition that although our demand was for 4.4 million tons we have only been able to get 1.7 million tons. As for the further the Emergency Food Council which met on the 4th November (a couple of days ago) will have considered the position as far as India is concerned and from the fact that total availability for the whole world reckoned by that Emergency Food Council is about 27 million tons and the total requirements of the world reckoned by that Emergency Food Council are about 33 to 36 million tons, the result has been that even our original demand having been reduced our later demand for 2½ million tons has again been reduced and our total demand will now be sanctioned by the Emergency Food Council only to the extent of 1.9 million tons. That is the position as far as the Emergency Food Council is concerned. As to our position—and here I may differ in a slight degree from the Department—our own position is that by the end of January 1947, unless and until we can get another one million tons of food from abroad over and above all our procurements and all our availabilities, we shall be facing a very serious situation in the country. The question then arises, how are we going to get this extra million tons of food? This is a factor which we have to bear in mind. As the last speaker stated, our position is very serious. 150 millions of our countrymen are under the rationing system, partially or otherwise. I believe 1,00,000 men are employed in working this particular scheme throughout India, that is, the department has engaged about 1,00,000 administrators in this process—a small number compared with the magnitude of the problem. Crores have been sunk in this organisation. It is necessary for us, since this is the only organisation that has gone deep down to the people, that we must not disband this organisation when the time comes and when the necessity is not so great. But the fact is that the total caloric value which is being allowed to our people is about 1,200 calories per day, and that is the lowest caloric value being utilised in any part of the world today, including the occupied countries. Mr. L. Guardia, who was the UNRRA administrator, said only a few weeks ago that the lowest caloric value which is necessary to keep body and soul together is about 2,400 to 2,600 calories a day, as against that, less than half is being allowed to our people. These are the facts, and it is necessary therefore to remember that this one million tons that we shall need now has got to come from somewhere. At the same time the overall position must not be lost sight of. Our production is between 50 and 55 million tons a year. Our needs are 60 million tons over a year. Our population is increasing at the rate of 5 millions a year so that our demand for food and more food is going to be constant not merely now but for a number of years to come. It is not possible by waving a magic wand to produce more food immediately from the soil that is producing this food now, unless and until you are going to enrich that soil and adopt such methods of agriculture and farming and mechanisation as will increase the productivity of our soil. Therefore the need is going to be very great. That need has got to be fulfilled. As far as the long term policy is concerned I will say a word about it later on. At the present moment I am concerned with the immediate short term policy of procuring an extra million tons of food between now and the month of January 1947.

There are three methods by which we can obtain this food. As far as the international Organisation is concerned, I do not think we are going to get more than 1,00,000 tons of food between now and July 1947 from Canada, although Canada had a surplus of 6 million tons of wheat which other countries have taken away. I do not think we are going to get more than 5,00,000 tons of wheat between now and July 1947 from the United

[Dewan Chaman Lal]

States, and I do not know how much we are going to get between now and January next. These are the figures available in Washington, as far as availabilities from these two countries are concerned. In fact, the total amount that was made available to us from the United States—it was not wheat—for the month of October was only 59,000 tons, and we do not know what allotments are going to be made to us for the months of November and December.

Therefore the position being problematic, it is necessary for us to make every attempt to obtain extra food, that extra million tons of food, from every corner of the world that we can approach. Where can we get it? When I was leaving New York I understood that a figure of 3,00,000 tons of wheat was published, that was going to be made available to Japan from the United States, and at the same time I learnt that this 3,00,000 tons of wheat was not going to Japan as they had discovered that there was already a sufficiency of food in that country. Now, it is necessary, and I have no doubt that the Food Department, ably led as it is, brilliantly staffed as it is, will take up this matter immediately, not only take it up themselves but in conjunction with His Majesty's Government take up this matter and place it before the United States Government, that this 3,00,000 tons of wheat which is available in the United States should be diverted immediately to this country in order to meet our needs. This is a very important factor. If we can get this 3,00,000 tons of wheat, we shall be able to save the situation for a few weeks to come.

Over and above this 3,00,000 tons of wheat, there is available today in America according to the information I gathered in the United States and in South America, about 1,00,000 tons of rice, 62,000 tons of which are available in Brazil, but unfortunately according to the constitution of the Emergency Food Council and its Rice Committee, we are unable to touch it independently, because rice is not programmed but is allocated which means that there is a particular territory designated and a particular quantity designated to that particular territory, from which we can pick up rice and from no other. I have already, anticipating the requirements of the Food Department, made a suggestion to the Emergency Food Council in regard to this particular matter, and I have no doubt the Food Department will take up this matter so that we may, if we are able to pick up this rice and pick up the 3,00,000 tons of wheat, alleviate the situation that is facing us in the very near future.

The third source of supply to us is Australia, and I must add my word of congratulations to those countries which have stood by us in the past, and I must support the Honourable Food Member in his tribute to those countries. There will be a quantity of 1.9 million tons of wheat surplus available for export from Australia from December onwards. My suggestion to the Food Department would be that they must, realising the seriousness of the position which is not going to last a year or two but may last five years or longer, and in view of the world requirements of food and in view of the increase in population that is taking place in India, attempt to enter into long term arrangements with those countries which can supply us with the necessary food. Great Britain, realising the tremendous export surplus that was available to them in Canada, entered into such long term agreements with that country, with the result that practically all the six million tons of surplus wheat is going out to be utilised by Great Britain for her purposes and for other international purposes to which use she may put that food. It is necessary for us too to do the same and I hope that this point will not be forgotten by the Food Department in their dealings with Australia in the matter of food.

At the same time I am happy to be able to announce that, as a result of the mission that went out to the Argentine—the success of which is probably due either to my colleagues or to the Honourable Member who is sitting there, Mr. Sen the Secretary of the Food Department, and all the officers of the Food Department for the great co-operation that they showed in the working of this Mission to the Argentine—my part was very little indeed—the major part of the credit goes to the Food Department and to my colleagues who went with me—we were able to succeed in getting 5,00,000 tons of maize which had already been purchased locally or through the High Commissioner in London, out of the country. It was a difficult mission, because of the situation in South America and because there were about 17 different international missions all wanting food for their own countries, including the British Food Mission—about 30 strong—who had been there for a couple of months already before we got there. But we were fortunate that almost immediately on my arrival we were able to get 14 ships loaded, not only 14 but we had to borrow 3 more ships, 17 ships loaded almost immediately on our arrival and sent out to India and I am glad to find that those ships have already arrived in Indian ports and the food is being distributed in the scarcity areas. Those ships had been paying as much as, I understand, £5,000 a day demurrage. It was an extraordinary situation, because there was one mission, for instance, which was given permits to load its ships. After they started loading ships the order came—unload. The ships were unloaded and the ships went back to that country empty, unable to pick up the food that they bought. Therefore it was a very serious and a very nervous situation but in the end, after all the difficulties, the situation was taken in hand. The difficulties were surmounted and now the rest of the food is practically on its way—100,000 tons—the rest having already arrived in India.

But I did not leave the matter at that. From New York I got into touch with the Argentine authorities, and this is the cable I have got from them.

"Owing to heavy commitments next crops of wheat and doubtful almost poor prospects for new crop Maize very difficult get Lagomarsino take new commitments. He has now, however, promised me to give up to 250,000 tons between wheat maize millets rye and oats against which second quota of Hessians would have to be allotted on similar terms of last agreement."

This is a matter for negotiation again and the Food Department will undoubtedly take up this matter and if more food is available, the President of the Republic General John Perron told me that he would possibly be able to give us 500,000 tons, I think the situation would be saved between now and the end of January.

I submit, Mr. President, here too, as in the case of Australia, it would be necessary in my opinion to enter into a long term arrangement. We must look beyond this year and the next year and the year after and if we can secure our position, there is nothing to prevent us from unloading anywhere where there is scarcity in other parts of the world, after our requirements have been completely met and there is a surplus resulting from these long term arrangements but for our own safety the arrangements must not be short term any longer. They must be long term and if we can enter into long term arrangements we shall be in a more favourable position. We have a commodity which we can bargain with on a barter basis as we did in the case of Argentine, a commodity which is only available to us in India and to nobody else in any other part of the world. I mean hessian and raw jute and I do not see any reason why, when every other country which has surplus food is holding other countries which have not, almost to ransom, or utilising the surplus for political purposes, we should not for bargaining purposes utilise this particular commodity of which we hold a monopoly and I am certain that if we do so, as very ably the Food Department did in the matter of the Argentine, we shall be able to control the situation regarding our imports from abroad.

Now, it is not only a question of imports. I know the House would be with me when I pay my tribute to the Indian Famine Mission from America headed by Mr. Schultz, which came out to this country and put the question of the famine in India on the map of the world. I know that the House will join me in paying a tribute to the excellent work that those gentlemen did. I may inform the House that not only did they produce a most excellent report, copies of which are no doubt available to all of us but since their return to America they have not ceased to plead for India and India's needs in the highest quarters in order that the requirements of India may be met by those countries which have a surplus. At the same time the House should know and appreciate that people like Mr. J. I. Sing in New York, and Pearl Buck of the India League have been constantly agitating for the supply of India's needs in the matter of food and helping to procure us food. I must also pay them a tribute for the valuable work they have done. They are still active and they continue to be active.

Mr. President: The Honourable Member may continue his speech after Lunch. The Assembly then adjourned for Lunch till Half Past Two of the Clock.

The Assembly re-assembled after Lunch at Half Past Two of the Clock, Mr. President (The Honourable Mr. G. V. Mavalankar) in the Chair.

Diwan Chaman Lal: Sir, I was referring to the question of my own mission to the Argentine and I would like to take this opportunity of placing on record the tribute of my colleagues who went with me from this country to President General Peron for the sympathy that he showed towards the work of my mission and for the promptitude with which he intervened both originally and at a later stage in order to enable us to compete our trade treaty with the Argentine. The treaty itself is value for value basis treaty, that is to say, if the Argentine buy in our country a certain quantity of jute or hessian or any other commodity, we are entitled to buy for the equivalent value food in the Argentine. As the position stands at present, India has purchased, I believe, from the Argentine about 88 to 90 million pesos worth of food-stuff, which is equivalent to 300,000 tons of food which we have purchased and which is now arriving, but the value of the jute that we have sold to the Argentine Government, and we have sold it at a favourable rate—favourable from the point of view of the prices prevailing at that particular time—is about 200 million pesos worth. A peso is roughly equivalent to 14 annas. Therefore, according to the particular treaty that I have been able to enter into with the Argentine Government on behalf of the Government of India, we have got a leeway to make up to the extent of 120 million pesos, and I think this amount should be utilised, as I suggested, by our entering into arrangements with the Argentine, for the purpose of purchasing food which may be needed not only now but at a later stage in the years to come. I have already stated that the Argentine Government had subsequently informed us that they are willing to allow us to purchase another 250,000 tons of food which will be available out of the new crop which comes in in the month of December. If attempts are made by proper means and through proper hands to purchase this food, I think our country is going to benefit vastly from this transaction.

Now, there are certain other matters which I would like to refer to in connection with the future. The last speaker referred to questions of storage. This is a very important question. I understand that 12½ per cent of all the food grown in India is utilised either for seed or is lost as a result of storage. We do not quite know what particular quantity it may be, but it is possible it is from 8 to 5 per cent. Now it is necessary to conserve every grain of food that we produce. We, a great agricultural country, are the most backward in the matter of storage facilities. In Canada and in America you have a system of elevators, which is a most modern system for the purpose of conservation and transit of food. One member of my delegation was asked to investigate the question of elevators in America. He will in due course present his report to the Food Department, but this is a matter that should not be delayed. It should be taken in hand immediately. As long ago as 1928 I remember making a suggestion to that effect after my return from Canada to the then Finance Member, but unfortunately it was not taken up. Now we have an example before us in the province of Saskatchewan in Canada, where a system of storage has been developed on purely co-operative lines and it is working to the entire satisfaction of the province. I think somebody should be deputed to go there and study that particular problem and find out how they have successfully solved this question and arranged to preserve their food supply. That is one point to be considered very carefully for the future.

This second point to consider is the question of co-operative farming. It is a very large subject and I am not going to dilate on it except to make the suggestion that the Department concerned may look into this matter and see how we can put an end to these separate, tiny little holdings which are to be found in our country at present and get on to a basis of co-operative farming in this country.

The third question is the question of fertilizers. One big factory is being set up in Bihar under State management and control, but one factory is not sufficient. The top layer of the soil in many parts of the country has been destroyed and it is necessary to replace that by chemical fertilizers. The amount of manure available in the country even according to the present system is no longer sufficient and it is necessary to supplement that by means of factory produced manure. And I hope that steps will be taken, as now they are being taken, to start fertilizer factories on a large scale where the raw material is available so that fertilizers may be made available in ample measure and at cheap prices.

The last question is with regard to machinery. We must have tractors in this country. There are large tractors and small tractors. For small farms there are small tractors available and it was amazing to me when I went round in America to some farms and found that farms of 400 acres are being ploughed and harvested with the assistance of just two people. One man sitting on the machine ploughs the ground and the same machine is utilised for the purpose of harvesting the wheat and at the same time threshing the wheat, on the one side, you have the straw coming out and on the other the grain. It results in a tremendous saving of labour and gives quick returns. A machine like that is capable of ploughing several acres a day, whereas since we depend upon the rainfall and moisture in order to plough, it is necessary that during the planting time with quick ploughing, attempts should be made to utilise every bit of moisture that is available in the soil.

The next point is in regard to the question of prices, which was also raised by the last speaker. The Honourable the Food Member went at length into that question. It is obvious that in our country we have to adjust the prices, keeping in view the interests of the producer and keeping also in view the interests of the consumer. A certain method will have to be found in the end to see that the farmer gets the basic decent price for his produce irrespective of what the price in the market may be. Other countries have done so. France, Great Britain and even America have assured a higher than the market price for their agricultural produce by means of a subsidy. In England under the Wheat Commission that has been set up, a farmer gets the price of wheat which is 20 to 50 per cent more than the average world price of wheat. He is recouped out of a Processing tax and a similar method is employed in France. The necessity arises of stabilising agricultural prices and if decent prices are assured to the agriculturist over and above the market price by some such method as that of the Wheat Commission in Great Britain, I have not the slightest doubt that we should find no difficulty in the farmer giving the surplus produce and utilising as little as possible for his own purposes.

Finally, let it be understood and let the world realise this and let America particularly realise this that the need in India is not over, that the need in India is great and that between now and the month of January we must have nearly a million tons of more food if the rationing system is not to break down or if we are not to be compelled to keep on reduced rations. Does the world realise—I do not think they do, not in Washington, at any rate, from my information—what the implication of this reduced ration is? The health of our people is being steadily undermined under this small basic ration. It is necessary to take immediate steps to warn the world that this state of affairs is very dangerous and any break down in the rationing scheme would be disastrous to this country. Millions would go under not merely in starvation, but literally die. It is therefore necessary not only to procure enough food to keep the scheme in existence but get enough food to raise the standard of rations because many millions of our people, poverty stricken as they are, are unable to get anything more than the basic ration of 12 oz a day, that is allotted to them. They are not like other countries, even European occupied countries where they can get their bread, and at the same time they have other kinds of food which they can use as supplement along with their bread in order to get a fairly decent living. In Germany, the basic caloric ration amounts to 1,600 to 2,000 against our 1,200 calories in India. In Germany there are other kinds of tinned foodstuffs which are available to them, whereas to a great majority of our population nothing else is available. I would take this opportunity of appealing to countries like Canada, and U S A to realise our great need and to come to the assistance of India at this particular hour of need, and not to be content with what has been done. It is a miracle to see what has been done in India by our department, in putting this scheme through with great ability and with great energy. There is no other country in the world today whose population subsists on rationing on this wide scale—150 million people are under rations. There is no other country in the world—I am astonished to think of this. I have gone to other countries like Argentina where there is an abundant surplus. In those countries nobody is ever worried about food. Nobody is worried about anything else as far as their economic existence is concerned. I go to U S A. I find the same state of affairs, barring a little shortage in sugar and things of that sort, or perhaps a temporary dislocation in the meat supply position because of the strike. There is really no shortage of food. The same thing applies to Canada. Although this does not apply to Great Britain, which must have the sympathy of this House for the sufferings they have gone through and are still going through, yet the conditions there are simple when compared to the condition in our country. Therefore every attempt should be made to bring this to the attention of the rest of the world by sending out missions composed of men capable of putting the case before the councils of the world in order that you may be able to retrieve the dangerous position that faces us in the immediate future. I must finally congratulate the Honourable the Food Member and the new Government which are completely alive to the seriousness of the situation in India and wish them God speed in the efforts they are making to ameliorate that condition.

Mr. Ahmed E. H. Jaffer: Sir, we all greatly admired the ability and clarity with which the Honourable the Food Member dealt with what has come to be a 'hardy annual'—I mean the discussion on the food situation. His speech was listened to with profound attention and with some relief that he was not going to ask the peoples of the deficit areas to tighten their belts one more notch. All the same, I think there must have been many Members in this House who will share my disappointment, that there was no indication of the new efforts made by surplus areas to help others in distress. We expected some outline of the steps which have been taken in this direction or are under contemplation in those areas which have not pulled their full weight in the past.

While the Honourable Member, Dr Rajendra Prasad admitted that the food situation had not improved in the past few months, his speech as a whole may have led members of this House to believe that we had turned the corner and could congratulate ourselves on surviving the worst dangers. Such an attitude would be one of unwarranted complacency, and the Honourable Member himself would not, I am sure, like such an impression to get about. The fact remains that even today the province of Madras has uncovered deficit of five lakhs of tons between now and the end of 1946, and my own province of Bombay has still to find two lakhs of tons of cereals. If these quantities are not made available by the Central Government by the end of this month, the rationing system in Bombay and Madras which has drawn such tributes from the American Food Mission from ex-President Hoover and from all students of food administration in this country will collapse. Surely that shows that the crisis in its most intensive form is still upon us.

By abandoning the basic plan on which they had worked for the last two years, the Government of India have done nothing to help those provinces which have tried to do their duty towards the country as a whole. Under the basic plan the Government of India gave assistance to provinces annually on the basis of merits and deserts. Sometimes back this basic plan was abandoned and the Government of India decided to distribute central supplies every month on the basis of stocks existing in the province at the beginning of the month. If a Province was improvident or did not procure enough, it would have a low level of stocks, and on that basis the Government of India would give it assistance. Another province which procured more of its own resources and maintains strict control over distribution and, therefore, had higher stocks, would get nothing. This abandonment of the basic plan has been a distinct encouragement to improvidence on the part of provincial governments and deserves the strictest censure. I trust that the Food Secretary when replying to this debate will give an assurance to this House that as from January 1947, the basic plan will again be restored and that this system of giving to those who deserve least and stinting those provinces who deserve the best thanks, of this country such as the provinces of Bombay and Madras will be reversed.

I hope he will give a further assurance that meantime there will be no further cut in the already inadequate general ration of 12 oz.

I hope my words will not be misunderstood by the Honourable the Food Member but the question which people in Madras and Bombay and Mysore are asking is we have mobilised all our resources to the utmost of our ability, we have rationed our urban and rural populations, we have gone to our farmers and taken from them the surplus grain, and yet we are denied by the Central Government supplies to meet our barest needs? Why are other areas who have been lax in their food administration still allowed to get away with large supplies? When maize is made a compulsory part of the ration in Bombay and Madras, why should not the same be done in Delhi which is as much a deficit province as the other two?

Then we come to other anomalies. We have been told that government monopoly purchase of foodgrains is the only method to meet an emergent situation of the kind which faces India today. And yet why has this system made little headway in quite a few provinces? The previous Food Member warned, cajoled and promised by turns, but unfortunately, it is the opinion in deficit areas that despite all this, there is no real enthusiasm for government procurement in surplus provinces, I may be wrong and shall be glad to be corrected.

All of us are concerned and must remain concerned during the whole period of the food crisis with the clamour for raising foodgrain prices. I do hope, Sir, there will be no wavering in this respect. This problem of the vicious spiral, increase of grain prices, followed by increases of other prices and so on, will have to be carefully tackled. If there is to be any further increase, I feel, the process will lead us faster and faster to a catastrophe.

That brings me to the nauseating business of profiteering in foodstuffs. We hear and read much about profiteering in food but we missed any indication in the Food Member's speech of the conviction of any large profiteer.

I wish to refer briefly to a matter which I think is of some importance, although it may seem to be of comparatively small importance. A couple of days ago I was astounded to read in the Delhi newspapers that the control over milk had been lifted in Delhi. Is the capital of India so overflowing with milk that this commodity can be decontrolled? It is really an astonishing situation that while other parts of the country are making special efforts to make milk available to children through special schemes—as in Bombay—Delhi should consider milk control superfluous. Surely there is one class whom we want to spare, and that is children, the hope of our future. Do Delhi children get sufficient and cheap milk now? Speaking of milk I would remind the Honourable the Food Secretary of my speech during the last food debate when I suggested that import duties on milk products should be removed, for instance, the heavy duty on butter imported from Australia. When we are short of butter in India I suggest that duty on such milk products like butter, etc., should be removed and I hope the Honourable the Finance Member while preparing the next year's budget will consider this question favourably.

The shortage of cattle food is one of the factors making for milk shortage. I have a letter from the Bombay Humanitarian League giving details of their approach to the Government of India for importing cattle food from Portuguese East African Colonies and British East African Colonies and how such opportunities have been neglected by the Government of India. This shows that we are not using our exports as a lever for obtaining cattle food.

As the Food Member is also in charge of agriculture I should like to state that all our present troubles are due to the woeful neglect of agriculture in the past. And the chickens are now coming home to roost. We have had commissions in the past, reports, blue-books, white papers and advertisements about "Grow More Food" in English newspapers, but the fundamental problem of insufficient production still remains. This is the time for Government to make up their mind as to what part agriculture must play in the life of this country.

In conclusion, I am sure every Member of this House realises that the organisation of food administration even in normal times is an immense undertaking, but once shortage becomes a world problem the problem becomes bigger still and one which knows no limit. We feel that Government now have a real grasp of the situation and are trying to do their best for the amelioration of the people's suffering. In spite of the criticism that I made on points of detail, I am sure Government can demand from all of us uninterrupted, loyal and consistent support, which will mean success in fighting back the danger of famine.
